NEWSPAPER REPORTS

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of personal privilege relating to two Toronto newspaper articles which appeared last Friday and reported several Metro Toronto councillors had alleged I had misled the Legislature.

Mr. McClellan: They expressed their disgust.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't mind being criticized, but when I am called a liar and accused of misleading members of the House, that's a matter I simply can't ignore.

In the Toronto Sun of May 25, members of the Metropolitan Toronto social services committee are reported as having accused me of misleading the Legislature on May 11 when I told the House that provincial officials met with Metro officials "for half an hour and showed them how to save $830,000 without cutting back services."

There was one error of fact in that, and that is the meeting lasted for two or two and a half hours, not for one-half hour, as was indicated at the time.

Mr. McClellan: How come you couldn't remember that?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The committee chairman, Mr. Bruce Sinclair, is quoted as stating the meeting did not take place.

The Toronto Star, on the same date, reported Toronto Alderman June Rowlands said I had "deliberately and intentionally made totally false statements" when I told the House that Metro could save $830,000 through administrative efficiencies.

I haven't had a chance to speak to the committee chairman yet, but the report in the Toronto Sun was in error in that regard. First of all, that meeting did take place on Wednesday, April 25, from 10 a.m. until 12 or 12:30 p.m., as was reported by the social services commissioner to the Metropolitan social services and housing committee on May 2.

The chairman of Metropolitan Toronto, Paul Godfrey, and members of the social services committee met with me on Monday, April 23 to discuss these and other issues. On Wednesday, April 25, provincial and Metro officials held a subsequent meeting to discuss in detail provincial subsidies for administration of general welfare assistance.

It is my information from the minutes of the meeting that at that meeting the following potential savings were identified: First, $300,000 to Metro by converting to the provincial-municipal computer system. This saving was not taken into account by Metro in presenting its deficit.

Second, they could save $100,000 in the general welfare administration budget through the transfer of a surplus from homemakers' and nurses' services. Previously, Metro had estimated a deficit in that program.

Third, they could save $90,000 through integration of counselling programs to the normal general welfare assistance administration. Apparently Metro separates its counselling program to social assistance recipients from the normal general welfare assistance program. The suggested integration of services would save at least $90,000 in operating costs through the elimination of duplication in administration.

During the calendar year 1979 it is expected that the new computer system will result in $80,000 in staff savings. It is projected that $36,000 will be saved because at least two staff members will no longer be required for the cheque issuance control because of the change to the computer and $150,000 will be saved because Metro originally established administration costs of $259,000 for responding to changes in the unemployment insurance plan at the federal level. Subsequently, at a meeting I had with the members of the committee, we explained that it was probably too early to estimate the impact of those costs and, therefore, we would defer consideration of those until later in the year. An additional saving of $80,000 was identified in other areas.

I am pleased about the consultative process we have had at the provincial level and with the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, from which we both benefit. I want to assure the House that these discussions will be continuing to determine the budget base and any issues on the provincial ceiling for administration costs. The province is prepared to meet Metro officials as these issues arise.

As I attempted to make clear both on May 11 and again on May 24 when the matter arose in the House, my comments were not intended to be critical of the administrative competence of the Metro administration. I suggest there is a difference, though, between reviewing administration and looking for administrative efficiencies and suggesting lack of competence.

There may be a legitimate difference of opinion between us as to which measures can be described as administrative efficiencies and there may be some differences of interpretation still outstanding at the staff levels. However, I shall be responding to Metro very shortly in an effort to straighten out any such misunderstandings and to ensure the resumption and the continuation of the co-operative spirit that has marked our relationship in the past.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of privilege, without wanting to get into the charges and counter-charges between the newspapers and Metro officials, I think the point of confusion is that the minister said on Friday, May 11 that Metro social services by efficient administration could make reasonable administrative decisions which would save $830,000. We are still confused as to where this figure of $830,000 comes from.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think that the honourable member just heard a rather lengthy list. If there are any figures that are omitted from that, I'd be glad to provide them to him.

Mr. McClellan: They don't add up to $830,000.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct an impression that might have been left by the Globe and Mail last Saturday, May 26.

Mr. M. Davidson: Do you feel you are under attack?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It reads: "Mr. Grossman would not name any of the Liberals he says supported the program in private talks with him. But he said James Breithaupt of Kitchener and James Bradley of St. Catharines should be uncomfortable with their leader's position."

I would point out that I did mention those two members, saying they ought to be uncomfortable with their position because of multinationals existing in their ridings, and most successfully. I would not want the impression to go that I was suggesting that either of those members had in fact written me privately or quietly or spoken with me in private talks supporting a particular program. It would be inaccurate to say that. In fact, I indicated at that time that those two members specifically had not written me privately asking for specific support.

Mr. Breithaupt: I appreciate the correction which the minister has made to the record.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

TOURISM

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wish today happily to offer a good word to the fourth estate at a time when the media generally are being raked over the coals by some people for their coverage of that recent notable national event.

Mr. Ruston: Your candidate in that area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's not do it today.

I wish to acknowledge that my ministry has been treated royally by media support, province-wide, for our major tourism promotion program, "We Treat You Royally."

Members are, of course, aware that we have been moving forward on several fronts to stimulate Ontario's tourism industry, beginning with our announcement in the budget speech that there would be a sales tax break on certain equipment purchases by restaurants and tourism operators. At the same time, we extended the sales tax exemption on tourist accommodation until 1981. In addition, we have co-operated with the Ministry of Revenue in publishing a new brochure which explains how visitors can apply for rebates on provincial retail sales tax paid for goods purchased here during their visit. This brochure has been widely distributed and is creating a very favourable impression of this province as a good host.

Recently, of course, we reported to this House on our plans for new tourist information centres for both seasonal and year-round operations.

Most important, however, is the way we treat our tourists. We launched a one-on-one welcoming program last year to make all of us more aware of how important tourism is to the province. The message of that program was, and is, simple. We asked everyone, especially those who come in contact with the touring public, to treat visitors royally.

The success of the first 12 months of the program has been very encouraging. One in four residents of Ontario recognized our slogan after only six weeks and 75 per cent understood why it was important. More than 5,000 companies, retail and service industries, participated in the campaign using our merchandising material. In all, we distributed 2.6 million pieces of merchandising material throughout the province.

To a large extent, the success of "We Treat You Royally" was made possible through the excellent support of the media—newspapers and magazines, radio and television. They helped convey our message with conviction and enthusiasm and I thank them for it.

Today we are officially launching year two of the "We Treat You Royally" program. We have expanded the program this year. There are currency exchange facilities at all major border crossings and we have included new and more relevant types of merchandising materials, such as the currency exchange wheel, to let all tourists know what exchange rate to expect and, as I mentioned, a brochure to let visitors from outside Ontario know that they can get a sales tax rebate on certain goods.

One of the most important aspects of "We Treat You Royally" is the new training program which is designed to encourage people in the hospitality industry to treat visitors royally. Our target is to graduate at least 25,000 trainees over the next 12 months. Of this number, 11,500 will be instructed by specially trained personnel from my ministry; the remainder by the private sector. I am meeting with the media at Ontario Place later today to provide more program details, distribute our new material and ask for their renewed support.

On Wednesday of this week, there will be a "We Treat You Royally" festival at noon-time in Nathan Phillips Square here in Toronto. In other areas of the province, promotions to introduce year two are already taking place with many more events planned for the summer and fall.

There's no question the program has been accepted and there's no question it is important. Over $5 billion is generated annually from tourism in this province. Tourism employs 12.5 per cent of the Ontario work force. It is Ontario's second largest export industry.

Mr. Speaker, "We Treat You Royally" has had a great season in its first 12 months and, with everyone helping, we can make the next 12 months even better than before by letting each visitor know that in Ontario we do, in fact, treat you royally.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon at the appropriate time I will be tabling a copy of a letter from the chairman of Ontario Hydro to the chairman of the select committee on Ontario hydro affairs concerning reports prepared by Ontario Hydro on an incident at the Bruce A nuclear generating station on April 28, when two hydro employees received radiation exposures beyond permitted levels. Attached to the letter are copies of the reports.

I believe that this letter will clarify any questions which the honourable members may have concerning the article in the Toronto Star of last Saturday, May 26, and the suggestion that Ontario Hydro did not live up to a commitment it had made to release the report immediately on its completion.

ELEVATION OF ARCHBISHOP CARTER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, on Saturday morning last Pope John Paul II announced from the Vatican the elevation of the Most Reverend Gerald Emmett Carter, Archbishop of Toronto, to the sacred College of Cardinals. As this is the first time that this Legislature has met since then, it becomes the first opportunity that we have had to extend our warm greetings and sincere congratulations to the cardinal-elect from Toronto.

Since coming to Toronto as archbishop last June, His Eminence has done much to foster the cause of ecumenism and greater understanding among people of all faiths and religious beliefs. His leadership capabilities, his zeal, his sensitivity and his piety combine to make him one of the most outstanding church leaders of these times. Cardinal-elect Carter has already made numerous significant contributions to his own church and to mankind.

As we all know, he is an eminent Latin scholar. Almost from the time of his ordination to the priesthood more than 40 years ago, he has been known internationally for the leading role he played in the translation of Latin texts, following the decisions that emanated from Vatican II.

The new prince of the Roman Catholic church hails from a very distinguished Montreal family which gave four of its children to their church. One brother is the Most Reverend Alexander Carter, Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie, while his two sisters are prominent members of religious orders. In 1977, the new Cardinal-Archbishop of Toronto was singularly honoured by his peers in the world hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church when he was elected to the 12-man council synod of bishops.

Mr. Speaker, I know I am speaking for you and each and every member of this Legislative Assembly when I express our profound joy and gladness with this Vatican announcement. As His Eminence the cardinal prepares to leave for Rome next month to receive his cardinal's red hat, he takes with him the prayers and the best wishes of all the people of Ontario.

May God in his wisdom guide and direct him and may his reign as Toronto's and Ontario's cardinal be fruitful and lengthy.

Mr. S. Smith: I wish briefly to associate ourselves with the excellent comments made by the minister concerning the elevation of His Eminence to the position of cardinal. As outlined, the newly-elected cardinal has an excellent record of service to the church, to the community, to the country and to mankind generally. We hope and pray, and we know, that this record of service will be that much more enhanced in his new position. We certainly wish him only the best.

Mr. Cassidy: On behalf of my party, I want to share in the profound joy which I know that Catholics across Metropolitan Toronto and across Canada have felt in the elevation of Archbishop Carter to be a cardinal. Clearly he will speak with distinction and courage on behalf of Catholics from across this province and this country in the synod in Rome. We too would like to associate ourselves with the comments of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in welcoming this elevation of an archbishop of the church from Toronto.

ELLIOT LAKE URANIUM MINES

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Later today I will table the final report entitled, The Expansion of the Uranium Mines in the Elliot Lake Area, which I have just recently received from the Environmental Assessment Board.

This comprehensive report, which indeed it is, concerning environmental factors related to the expansion of the Elliot Lake mines is a summary of the public hearings held by the Environmental Assessment Board between November 1977 and March 1979. The board has had a total of 74 sittings and received submissions from 95 witnesses whose testimony, supported by 450 exhibits, is contained in more than 11,000 pages of transcripts.

I received the report on Thursday. Obviously, I have not had the time personally to read it, but I wished to table it at the first possible opportunity.

The Environmental Assessment Board chairman advises me that the main thrust of the report is its conclusion that the expansion and operation of the mines can be carried out in an environmentally acceptable manner during the short term, that is, during the next 30 to 40 years in which the mines are expected to operate. The board states that technology exists to ensure achievement of the environmental objectives.

The report contains several recommendations concerning the long term, the period after mining has slowed down or terminated. These are aimed at developing a strategy for attracting and developing new industry in order to avoid a one-industry Elliot Lake becoming a deserted ghost town. The board directs its recommendations in these areas to the companies and to the private sector, as well as to the appropriate Ontario ministries and federal agencies.

I intend to review thoroughly all the findings and recommendations of the board with my colleagues and with qualified staff to determine an effective strategy and plan for implementation. I will announce our response to this report at that time.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the members and the staff of the Environmental Assessment Board for the effective conduct of the public hearing and for the reports. I also wish to commend the three mining companies, the United Steelworkers of America, the town of Elliot Lake and the members of the Serpent River Indian band for their responsible and professional participation in these hearings. I would also like to thank the staffs of the Ministries of Housing, Labour, Natural Resources and Community and Social Services, who joined my ministry's representatives at these hearings.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy, arising from his previous answers on the matter of the Babcock and Wilcox (Canada) Limited boilers supplied to Ontario Hydro.

On Friday last the minister referred to the fact that competitive tenders were called for the Pickering A boilers in 1965 and for the Bruce A boilers in 1970, but that they were not called in 1973 and 1974 for the Pickering B boilers allegedly because "Babcock and Wilcox was the only company in Canada which had the necessary manufacturing facilities in place to construct and manufacture this type of boiler."

Will the minister explain how it is that other companies that were available in 1965 and 1970 were no longer available, in the government's view, in 1973 and 1974—which suppliers so disappeared from the scene that they were unable to tender competitively in 1973 and 1974? Is the minister not aware that between 1970 and 1974, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was also contracting out for boilers and found a number of companies willing to tender?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the member a detailed answer on that. I assume there were perhaps technical considerations, if I can put it that way, but I will inquire from Hydro and try to have the answer for him very shortly.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister not realize that he has supposedly answered to this House on the subject of the tenders and the failure to call for tenders, and presented information that he apparently was ready to accept, that there were no other companies ready to bid, and yet the evidence would seem otherwise?

May I ask him, while he thinks that over, is he still unaware that Babcock and Wilcox did not win AECL's last contract, for the Korean reactor, partly because of AECL's concern that the Babcock design would produce the very tube crimping that did occur with the heat treatment?

Did people within Hydro tell the minister that the Darlington station contract had been awarded to Babcock and Wilcox despite the fact that Hydro was warned that that design would lead to these very problems?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not aware that Hydro was informed as the Leader of the Opposition says. But I will inquire into that too. I would add that I think the Leader of the Opposition is aware that work has not yet started on the Darlington boilers as a result of the checks that were made in December, when Hydro asked Babcock and Wilcox to cease work on their current production until they got to the cause of the problem.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In the case of the previous contracts or of the Darlington contract, given that there is no performance bond, can the minister say that there is any guarantee at all from Babcock and Wilcox that these very complex and sophisticated boilers will work? Or are they simply taken on the basis that all of the risk rests with Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Auld: My understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that the contracts called for the delivery of the boilers to meet specifications, which included operating specifications.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister confirm or deny that Hydro has decided that one reason it might not go after Babcock and Wilcox for the entire sum of money that would otherwise be due to Hydro because of a manufacturing defect is the fear of putting Babcock and Wilcox out of business?

If that is true, does he stand behind that decision or will he see to it that Hydro goes after Babcock and Wilcox and, if need be, let the American company bail them out?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The only information I have is that Hydro has indicated it proposes to require Babcock and Wilcox to carry out the specifications in the contract. I can't confirm or deny whether or not it will turn out that way eventually because, as I said before, it may wind up—

Mr. Mancini: Who's in charge over there?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not you.

Mr. J. Reed: You are certainly not.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —in the courts, although I would hope that would not be the case because of the long delays that would probably ensue.

Mr. S. Smith: Then deny what I said.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since there was a four-year lapse between the granting of the contract to Babcock and Wilcox in 1973-74 and the actual manufacture of the boilers in 1978, all of which raises rather curious questions as to why there was nobody else in the field when they had four years to tool up, can the minister tell us what is the delivery date for the boilers that had been ordered for Darlington? Is it four years ahead so that there might have been an opportunity for tendering?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm afraid I can't give that detail either. I do know that Babcock and Wilcox had orders at one time from both Ontario Hydro and AECL, but I don't know in what order deliveries were scheduled.

Mr. J. Reed: Who is in charge over there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do know the work has not started on the Darlington boilers as yet. I also understand there is a long time—and I'm sure the chairman of the select committee would be aware of this—between the time a design requirement is produced by Hydro, the specifications put together by the contractor and perhaps Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, work started and then completed.

I don't know whether the normal course of events is a four-year time period between ordering and delivery. I really don't.

PCBs IN MILK

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Health concerning the matter of PCBs in mothers' milk.

The minister started a program about a year and a half ago to have mothers' milk tested because of the dangers of excessive amounts of PCBs in breast milk. I've been asked by one of my constituents what the present situation is, especially in view of the information letter from the health protection branch federally, advising women in the Great Lakes basin, which is most of the people resident in Ontario, to seek their doctors' advice before breast feeding because of the danger of PCBs.

I would ask the minister, therefore, could he give us the results of the study which he has had going for about a year and a half, tell us the testing techniques he has had, what the results have been particularly, and what allowable levels he would consider are to be accepted?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, obviously I don't have that information with me today, but I'll be glad to take the question as notice and answer it as soon as possible.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister be kind enough to check with Dr. Harding of the Ministry of Labour, where currently these results are tested for and confirm what Dr. Harding said to one of my assistants, namely, "There's really no point to doing any of this testing; it's just a program to appease people"?

Is the minister also able to check on the information that these PCBs are more prevalent toward the end of a feeding than toward the beginning, and would he check to see whether the samples that have been tested are relevant from that point of view? Could he present a full report, including what the allowable levels are, and explain why Dr. Harding seems to believe the whole program is just something to appease people and something of no value at $100 a test?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member will recall, I'm sure, that when the matter first arose, it was one that evoked a great deal of concern. In order to try to get a firm fix on the nature of the problem and what could be done, if anything, about it, we initiated the testing.

As I said, I obviously don't have those figures with me but I will take the question as notice and report back with all the information currently available.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: Am I correct in assuming the Ministry of Health pays for these tests; and if so, what has the cost been to date?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll include that information, Mr. Speaker.

FOOD PROCESSING

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism concerning the problems of Ontario's food processing and canning industry. In view of the fact imports account for 89 per cent of Canada's sales of canned peaches, 83 per cent of our sales of canned mushrooms and 42 per cent of the sales in Canada of canned tomatoes, could the minister say when the Ontario government will announce plans to ensure our needs for these products are being met from Canadian sources? Why did the government wait until this February to establish a task force on the food processing industry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, any further action we take will await the excellent work of that food processing consultative committee.

I might add, all the groups are working very hard together, including representatives of all sectors of the industry. They recently reported excellent progress to me.

I would hope before this House reconvenes in the fall, we would have something substantive to report as a result of those reports.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the fact we have been losing about a cannery a year for the last 15 years; and given the fact the imports of processed fruit and vegetables have gone up by 40 per cent in the last two years; and given the fact we are losing an estimated 6,600 jobs because of imports of processed fruits and vegetables that we can make for ourselves, when does the government intend to get serious about actually ensuring we process and make for ourselves the processed fruits and vegetables which we can grow in this climate?

Mr. Ruston: The minister should call his kissing cousins in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's the former government's fault. I can only respond by indicating once again that we have only had two consultative task forces. The first one was on electronics, which the member's party has also discussed in the House. The second is on food processing. They are hard at work now.

I'd like to add one other thing: We are not trying to push the decisions or recommendations of that committee in one direction or the other. Our ministry and three or four others are working very closely in an advisory and secretarial fashion with that committee so they may make some comments to us and some suggestions to us from various standpoints—labour, the processors, and the agricultural components—and so they may develop some of these solutions for us. I don't deny the problems and, obviously, that's the reason this government has reacted by starting a task force.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary to the minister: May I ask him if he realizes the first essential for fruit farmers to plant a variety of fruit, particularly peaches and pears appropriate for canning, is a guaranteed future market at a price to make the production viable? Can I ask him whether he has discussed the farm income stabilization program with the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) and recommended to him it be expanded to include fruit that can be grown in this province, and to give a guaranteed farm income price for that?

Will he give some assurance now that steps will be taken to guarantee the continuing canning capacity which exists in Niagara?

Mr. Bradley: Get out the bankroll.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer to the second question, which is the only true supplementary, is, of course, that is exactly what we're trying to do—to ensure the future of the food processing industry in this province. That's exactly what we're about.

The answer to the first part of that question is that my colleague and I have discussed these and related matters on several occasions.

Mr. Bradley: Get out your bag of money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If there are any government statements to be made in that regard, they will emanate from my colleague.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the canned fruit and vegetable industry is 65 per cent foreign-controlled, did the minister or his ministry instruct the task force to look into this problem? And will he make a commitment to us here and now that any input to the Foreign Investment Review Agency that has to do with any kind of takeover or increased concentration of foreign ownership in the canned fruit and vegetable industry will not be recommended by his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I indicated earlier, I can't give specifics about our recommendations to FIRA, but I do want to make clear that with this particular industry we are most concerned that decision-making with regard to food processing and ownership, where possible, remain in this country. Obviously that is essential to protect that sector of our economy.

Mr. Warner: But you won't do anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the House directly that both the Minister of Agriculture and Food and myself—

Mr. Bradley: He's busy building national unity.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —will have careful and complete discussions on any future FIRA applications in order to do what we can to ensure: (a) a food-processing industry in this province—

Mr. Laughren: Then stop representing them here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —(b) that decision-making remain here; and (c) that, where possible, ownership remain here as well.

SOLAR ENERGY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Energy. In view of the increasing uncertainties about the supply of oil, is the minister aware of a study which has just been released by the federal Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources which shows that a serious commitment to solar energy here in this province could create 1,700 jobs in Ontario by the year 1985 and more than 14,000 jobs in Ontario by the year 1990? What plans does the Ministry of Energy have to revise its priorities in the light of those findings?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen the report in question but I will be delighted to look at it.

Mr. Cassidy: It's coming to the minister now.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I do know from discussions I have had with people in the solar energy field that at the moment there are two main approaches which show economic promise in terms of payback.

Mr. Peterson: It shouldn't be necessary to look at the report to have a policy.

Hon. Mr. Auld: One is domestic hot water heating and the other is heating swimming pools.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given the problems that exist with oil and with nuclear power, and given that Ontario intends to commit at least $20 billion to electrical power over the course of the next decade, can the minister say why the government should not now undertake a major program of investment both in conservation and in renewable forms of energy, such as solar power, so that this can be a major source of jobs and of energy in the province over the next 20 years?

Mr. S. Smith: Remember that? We've been saying that for three years.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We have indicated that our plan and our target in renewable energy is to achieve a reduction of two per cent in our current energy needs, from other sources. I am told by experts in the field that is not a small target.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister not aware that in the United States alone, to say nothing of Japan and western Europe, and in solar energy alone, let alone all the other renewables, $650 million will be spent this year, and that is considered inadequate by most people who understand that industry in the United States? How does the minister compare that with Ontario Hydro's plans to spend about $2 million, grand total, on all forms of renewable energy and conservation programs, when on a per capita basis we should be spending at least 100 times that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I think I indicated not too long ago, we have entered into an agreement with the government of Canada for, I think, $58 million over the next five years to provide the kind of incentives which—

Mr. S. Smith: Their money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, it's not. It's taxpayers' money.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think it's a substantial amount of money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Ontario taxpayers. Never forget them.

Mr. Conway: That's not what Allan Lawrence said.

Mr. S. Smith: That's not what Larry Grossman said.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The program we have undertaken with the government of Canada, I think, is a good one. I also want to repeat what I said before: We are monitoring what research is being done by a great many jurisdictions as well as our own and it seems to me to be a waste of money to be duplicating what somebody else is doing.

Mr. Cassidy: Is it not the case that the government's priorities as far as energy is concerned are reflected in the fact that this coming year it will spend about $2 billion in investment for Hydro, but only about $10 million out of our current estimates both for renewable energy and for conservation? Are those not now the government's priorities, and why will not the government now undertake a comprehensive series of policies to make new subdivisions suitable for solar energy to encourage the solar industry and to provide loans and grants for solar installations?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Once again, very briefly, it seems to me that Ontario Hydro's primary task is to ensure an adequate supply of electricity which is a form of energy which everybody accepts. We know how it works and we can supply it and, in fact, we can supply it in a nuclear fashion with our own resources and not be in the hands of offshore suppliers and having a drain on Canadian dollars.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, on May 1 and May 25 I was asked by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) about the status of a review by the Atomic Energy Control Board of Babcock and Wilcox in connection with damaged boilers for Pickering B.

On April 25, 1979, the president of the Atomic Energy Control Board, Mr. John Jennekens, advised the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs that as a result of checks that had been made by Ontario Hydro quality assurance personnel, a review involving Ontario Hydro, its supplier, Babcock and Wilcox, and also its nuclear consultant, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, was under way. Mr. Jennekens went on to advise the select committee that the study had been initiated several weeks previously. Members of my staff have been in touch with Mr. Jennekens and he provided us with the following information:

1. Ontario Hydro has kept the control board advised of the problems with the Pickering B boilers and there have been frequent staff level discussions of the problems and the possible courses of action.

2. Ontario Hydro informed the control board of its decision to have the boilers repaired and the control board agrees with this decision.

3. No decision has yet been made by Ontario Hydro on the precise repair procedure they would propose. When decisions are reached on the proposed repair procedures, the control board will consider them along with the staff of the Ontario Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations who, of course, are involved in inspection of boilers and pressure vessels. The control board is not preparing its own report into the situation. Mr. Jennekens was referring at the select committee to the review being conducted by Ontario Hydro along with Babcock and Wilcox and AECL.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the minister satisfied that no such study has been undertaken by AECB, despite the testimony in front of the select committee which clearly indicated that a study was being undertaken? Why does he continue to try to give Hydro credit for somehow or other discovering the problem? Is he not aware that it was a complete fluke that the problem was discovered, that, in fact, Hydro was checking on some allegedly defective tubing which turned out not to be defective and, in that way, accidentally discovered that the Babcock and Wilcox heat treatment had produced the bends in the pipes?

Hon. Mr. Auld: To answer the last part of that question first, I understand that there was a new procedure which had been adopted which led Hydro to take the cover off unit number 33 and found what was going on inside.

However, in connection with the first part of the Leader of the Opposition's supplementary, in quoting from the Hansard of April 25 of the select committee, that's page HA-1200-2:

"Mr. Nixon: There's just one matter of clarification that I'd like to put in my capacity as a member rather than as chairman. I asked you if there was a special review of the Babcock and Wilcox capability and you said not on account of the Three Mile Island. Is there a review on another account?"

"Mr. Jennekens: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Nixon, there is as a result of the checks that have been made by Ontario Hydro quality assurance personnel. There is a review that is currently under way involving Ontario Hydro and its supplier and also its nuclear consultant. The results of that review we consider to be an essential piece of information to our further consideration of the licensing of the stations involved." That clearly seems to me to indicate that it was not a review by the control board but the control board would see the results of that review when it was completed.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS: EMPLOYER-SPONSORED TRAINING

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on May 11, the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) and the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) posed questions regarding the province's apprenticeship and employer-sponsored training programs. At that time, I indicated that I would provide the requested data and I am able to do so at this time.

Regarding formal apprenticeship training in Ontario, I am tabling a chart in which appendix A indicates the number of indentured apprentices in Ontario, under the Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, by groups of trades during the past nine years. It should be noted that there has been a steady growth in the number of apprentices during this nine-year period from 18,146 from 1970-71 to 30,148 during 1978-79.

In answer to the question about the allocation of funds for employer-sponsored training during 1978-79, it must be emphasized that when the Ontario government developed the concept of employer-sponsored training, the federal government was supportive and offered to make available as much as $8 million of unallocated training funds under their Adult Occupational Training Act. This $8 million figure was not a provincial estimate of specific training needs but rather a federal earmarking of the maximum amount that could be made available during fiscal year 1978-79. It was understood that these earmarked funds would be assigned to only those pilot projects agreed upon by both federal and provincial officials.

To receive federal support, it was also understood that the projects would have to meet federal funding criteria under the terms of the federal Adult Occupational Training Act.

The emphasis during this developmental stage has been to explore various innovative and flexible ways of introducing additional industrial training in Ontario, primarily in the metal-cutting trades. During the last half of fiscal year 1978-79, approximately $1.5 million was spent by both governments on employer-sponsored training projects. The details of the provincial portion of $585,000 are tabled in appendix B of this document. The federal expenditure is estimated to be under $1 million. When it became apparent to the federal authorities that not all of the $8 million would be required, they released the unused portion for its original purpose of institutional skilled training under the Canada Manpower Training Program and of on-the-job industrial training under the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program.

The pilot stage of EST continues to generate considerable interest from the private sector. In a previous reply on March 29, 1979, I indicated that 24 community industrial training committees had been formed and that 750 persons were in training. Since that time, the number of CITCs has grown to 30 and the number of trainees to 936 and we now have proposals in process which will result in 1,500 people being in training in the metal-cutting trades by the end of June of this year. Other proposals are anticipated which will allow the employer-sponsored training program to branch out into other areas of need which will further add to the total in training.

A complete list of the community industrial training committees now in operation and the number of trainees associated with each is tabled in appendix C of this document.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the honourable members will find this information useful.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order: In view of the length of that answer, would it not have been better as a statement?

Mr. Speaker: Had it been any longer, I was going to draw to the attention of the honourable minister that standing order 27(a) provides that wherever notice is taken of an oral question that requires a detailed answer it will be done by way of ministerial statement rather than taking up the time of question period. I timed it. It was just a little over two minutes and so under the circumstances we will allow it. I think in future, however, if a detailed answer is required, it should be done by way of ministerial statement.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the original question was why, after a promise by the minister's predecessor in her portfolio that thousands of people would be involved and about $7 million or $8 million spent on this program, and with $8 million of federal money available, her ministry was able to gear itself up to take advantage of only $1 million of federal money and to make a $1.5 million total expenditure?

Surely her ministry knew of the shortage of apprentices and the problems. Surely her predecessor knew what he was talking about when he said that thousands of people would come in during that fiscal year. Why could the ministry not gear itself up to take advantage of the millions of dollars of federal funds that were there waiting for it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, there are two requirements that are necessary for any program; that is, they must meet two specific federal criteria. There were a number of programs proposed during the fall, but we did spend the period of time from midsummer to December exploring the possibilities in many areas, in many sectors and in many communities. It requires the involvement of community-oriented and community-based people to make this kind of program work effectively, and that was the initiative that was carried out during 1978.

As a result of that activity, there are now larger numbers of young people—those who are coming directly out of school and those who wish to be retrained or upgraded—who are moving into the employer-sponsored training program.

With the numbers of proposals available in the appendix list which I have tabled with you, Mr. Speaker, the honourable member will see just how many communities have put forward excellent proposals and the fact that we shall be able to move forward rapidly from now on.

Mr. S. Smith: But you have wasted a year.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You have wasted a lifetime.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: If one looks at the tables in the appendices, one discovers that there has been not quite a two per cent increase in active total apprentices in this year as opposed to last year. Does the ministry call it progress in advancing a workable apprenticeship program and an opportunity for young people in this province when the increase has been less than two per cent?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the apprenticeship program is one of the areas in which a great deal of basic activity must be begun. The Industrial Training Council, under the recommendations of the Hushion report, has made certain recommendations, which came to me last week, in terms of modifying certain areas of the apprenticeship training program to make them more attractive to young people. That is one of our major activities for the very near future. Young people wishing to move into the apprenticeship program would like to have the opportunity to see that their apprenticeship program does not require a five- or six-year total commitment of their lives in order to reach journeyman status, because they believe it should not require that length of time. That is precisely the activity which I reported to this House we were exploring and have been exploring over the past several months.

CHILD SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Further to my question last week about the $33 million worth of child support payments in arrears in Ontario, I would like to ask the minister why he has only 20 parental support workers attached to the 53 provincial family courts in the province? Why would the minister maintain the PSW unit, a unit set up to identify and expedite support orders, when he does not staff that office properly?

Does the minister see any correlation between the fact that the nine courts with the highest defaulting rates are those that do not have parental support workers placed with them by his ministry? The nine are Waterloo, Rainy River, Bruce, York, Peel, Lambton, Huron, Hastings and Frontenac.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I could not hear the latter part of the honourable member's question.

Mr. Blundy: I will be glad to repeat it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Without the details.

Mr. Blundy: All right. Does the minister not see some correlation between the fact that the nine courts with the highest default in payments do not have any parental support workers attached to them and that out of 53 courts only 20 have such workers?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is my understanding that a more relevant factor in the rate of enforcement is to be seen in those areas where the family court has implemented a system of automatic enforcement, where on a regular basis the files are brought forward and if payments are missed the defaulting person is brought before the court to account.

I am not sure off hand whether the correlation the member has cited is as significant as the one that I have referred to. I will check with my staff to see if I can get more data on that.

Mr. Blundy: Would the minister describe what level of liaison his ministry has had with the Attorney General on this problem? It is my information that there has been virtually no effort by the Ministry of Community and Social Services to co-ordinate a more effective method of enforcing and collecting support payments.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't know where the member gets his information. I can assure him there has been liaison both at the staff level and in conversations on the subject between myself and the Attorney General.

Mr. McClellan: Can I ask the minister whether it wouldn't make more sense for the ministry simply to assume the responsibility for collecting support payments and ensuring whatever legal action is necessary if the payments aren't made, rather than requiring family benefits mothers to do that and to penalize them financially if the spouse doesn't make the support payments? Why doesn't the ministry assume the responsibility for collecting and enforcing?

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is my opinion at this point that probably an even more effective way of doing that, if staff is available, is to have it done through the provincial court so there is, in fact, a record of whether the money has been paid on a monthly basis. If a payment is missed, then the court can automatically institute the procedure to require compliance with the order. I think that would be more efficient than requiring my ministry to become involved as a fourth party. It seems to me that administratively the automatic enforcement through the courts is the most efficient available.

TTC NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a point of personal privilege: I don't often wish to correct what is reported in the press, but in that this matter is of some sensitivity, I thought I should. I really thought I would have had a question, but I know there are other urgent matters.

There is a story in the Sunday Sun, which paper isn't often in error, which was repeated by the Toronto Star. It relates to the discussions going on between the TTC and the transit union. There was a letter from myself to Mr. Moynehan. I think the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) asked me about it some time ago.

The Sun story indicates that it is a secret letter. It's so secret it has been posted in the press gallery. There is a quotation in the story: "I don't like to intervene in the free collective bargaining process, but if the public of Toronto is inconvenienced I have no choice but to act." That same quote is used in the Star story with some amplification, et cetera.

I word my letters as carefully as I do my answers in the Legislature.

Mr. McClellan: You mean the letter says nothing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Actually, it is a fairly brief letter. I just want to make it abundantly clear that there was no such statement contained in the letter. I did not suggest that if there was inconvenience I would have no choice but to act. I do refer to the fact that the government does believe in the collective bargaining process as it is at present in legislation. I am not sure where the quotation emanated from or the genesis for it, or the indication that the letter was theoretically secret. I don't think it was marked "Personal and Confidential," and this is no disrespect to Mr. Moynihan but I don't think he expected that it was a secret or confidential letter either.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. What is the position of his ministry on an opted-out physician, without notification, charging above the Ontario Health Insurance Plan scale in a publicly funded hospital and subsequently taking the patient to small claims court to collect?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, that type of situation is clearly covered in the statement I made in March. I would expect that any such case the honourable member might have knowledge of he would relate to us or directly to the Ontario Medical Association, which has been successful in mediating similar misunderstandings.

Mr. Breaugh: I did that same routine on April 12 and have not heard any results from it. In this instance it has already been to the OMA, and they say there is nothing they can do. Does this then qualify his ministry's agreement with the OMA, in the words used by today's Star editorial, as a program that is more public relations than public service?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I may say that we have had very few indications of problems in recent weeks. I am not sure to whom the honourable member spoke on April 12, but I will be glad to check into that.

Mr. Breaugh: To the minister—in here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I referred that to staff at the time, probably.

Mr. Breaugh: I made the fundamental mistake of asking the minister.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The fact of the matter is that the program seems to be working well.

Mr. Wildman: Except when you get involved.

Mr. Conway: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister indicate today, or take advantage of statements at an early opportunity to explain to members of this House, exactly how the mechanism referred to in his March statement has been proceeded with? Can he perhaps give us all a better understanding of the specifics of this mechanism, which is to alleviate the problems spoken of by the member for Oshawa?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the OMA and the Ontario Hospital Association have met several times since then to discuss the matter. To date, to my knowledge, they have not finalized those discussions. There is no formal mechanism as such developed as yet.

Mr. Breaugh: There isn't an informal one either.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have been in regular contact with both. Any particular problems that have been drawn to our attention, to the best of my knowledge, have been resolved.

[The member for Oshawa claims—and I underline "claims"—that there is a particular problem that has not been resolved. I will check into that and see whether that is the case and, if so, why.]

CHILD SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Attorney General and in essence is a companion piece to the questions addressed to the Minister of Community and Social Services.

In view of these child support orders in the family court, and the numbers with which his ministry deals, would the minister see fit to computerize these orders in the courts so that the social workers, the recipients and the courts themselves may be served by a support payment procedure that could be regularly updated and enforced?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question but that there is a great deal of wisdom in the question put forward by the member for St. George, inasmuch as the automatic enforcement procedures we have applied have been quite successful. Whether a further or greater or more widespread application should be done by computer or otherwise, I am really not in a position to make that judgement.

[There is no question but that we need to extend our automatic enforcement procedures, and I am hoping we will be obtaining additional funds for this purpose.]

Mrs. Campbell: When the minister is looking at this matter, would he also set forth guidelines for the consistent recording of these orders so that there can be some control over the labelling of accounts as dormant? As the minister undoubtedly knows, at the present time this seems to be arrived at individually in each court by a bookkeeper in the court. Some judges, as the minister knows, have erased arrears when they became substantial.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will certainly look into the matter of guidelines. I've asked for an updating of the existing situation.

[One of the problems is that a number of these orders are made ex parte in absentia so far as the spouse who is required to make such payments is concerned. Unfortunately, a large percentage of the total is represented by orders that are really in effect default orders right from the commencement, where the individual, often the husband, has not bothered to appear, the whereabouts is not known and the figure at the beginning is a rather arbitrary figure.

Mrs. Campbell: Is it a new procedure?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, this is particularly so in divorce matters. This is very common because a large percentage of the divorces that are granted in this province are undefended, as the member for St. George knows. This often applies to the orders that are made in these very large numbers of undefended divorces which are then filed in the family courts. I mention this only to indicate that in many of these cases there is a certain unreality right from the beginning. In any event, we are looking into the matter very carefully, and it may be that some better form of guidelines would be appropriate.

FRUIT LAND PRESERVATION

Mr. Swart: My question is of the Minister of Housing. Does he recall that his predecessor announced with great fanfare in February 1977 that his government was cutting back the urban development boundaries in Niagara to save, as he said, some 3,000 acres of fruitland?

Given that the developers in certain municipalities have appealed almost all of that reduction to the Ontario Municipal Board and asked to have it expanded to the original boundaries and that the hearings start one week from today, is he going to have legal counsel present at the OMB hearings to defend his position?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Yes, we shall have legal counsel present at the OMB hearing a week from today. We shall make very clear in the opening statement exactly what we believe the OMB's responsibility is under this particular hearing.

MILTON SCHOOL DELAY

Mr. J. Reed: My question is of the Minister of Education. Would the minister undertake to review a decision by her ministry to delay from 1980 to 1982 completion of a new school in the Timberlea subdivision area in the town of Milton? Upon completion of that review, would she give an indication to this House as to the time line when she could bring back a decision based on changes that have taken place over the last six months in terms of population expansion?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes.

CHEMICALS IN SCHOOL YARD

Mr. M. Davidson: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Given that soil testing in the playground area of Manchester School in Cambridge shows excessive levels of zinc, cadmium, copper, nickel and lead, can the minister explain why it is that the school board was not notified of the problem until some time last week, when the ministry was aware of the situation as far back as last October and apparently sat on it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is not so. We took a few tests last October. We wanted to take a good deal more tests and we've done that. That information is only recently available. I cannot accept what the member opposite has said.

As I understand the situation there, it was routine testing that found this, and we wanted to confirm all of that information. There is no doubt there are high tests there. But I would like to remind the member too that in 1977 or 1978 a control order was placed on that industry. We sure haven't sat on it and done nothing.

Mr. M. Davidson: A supplementary: Given that the final report was brought down in March and that the official of the ministry in Cambridge is only aware of the lead level, which is 2,000 parts per million, and that one of the toxic metals is cadmium, which is far more dangerous, why is it that the ministry's official in Cambridge does not know the levels of the other metals involved? When, in fact, is the minister going to table a report of these findings so that we may be aware of the exact levels found in the soil?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think the member is asking that every routine test made by the Ministry of the Environment be tabled.

Mr. Martel: It was hardly routine.

Mr. M. Davidson: You're right; I'm not.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We're quite prepared to table any information the member wants at any time we have it; no problem there whatsoever.

Mr. McClellan: What is routine about this?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The hundreds of thousands of tests aren't always going to be put on this table.

Mr. Makarchuk: Surely when you're dealing with a schoolyard you might show a little more interest.

NORTHLANDER SERVICE

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs: Over the past two years the Ontario Northland Railway has made some six changes in its schedule on the stops between Barrie and Orillia, on both its north and south routes. I am given to understand that again the Northlander train will not be stopping at Barrie or Orillia on its north or south routes. Is there anything that can be done to convince these people that both those communities are necessary stops for the Ontario Northland Railway?

Mr. Bradley: The minister can't blame the feds.

Mr. S. Smith: It's the wrong government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, as you know, there was considerable pressure to move that stop up to Orillia some time ago. I believe I indicated to the honourable member that we would review the possibility of having that train stop at Barrie, and I am prepared to look at that matter again.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Are these cutbacks part of an attempt to get in line with federal policy so that VIA Rail can take over the passenger service of Ontario Northland?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No. We have not had any serious discussions with VIA Rail.

Mr. Wildman: What do you mean by "serious"?

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Housing, if I can get his attention. Is the minister aware that the influx of people from all parts of Canada as a result of the industrial expansion in the Windsor area has placed an unusual stress on existing housing, making it more and more difficult for those on low and fixed incomes to find affordable housing? What plans does the minister have to alleviate the needs of the 696 senior citizens and families who now have applications in to Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all, not too many weeks ago, as the member will know, I met with the mayor of Windsor and also the general manager of the housing authority for that particular community. We reviewed some of the needs for public housing, both for families and for seniors. I am not prepared to accept that number as being the most accurate possible, because there are a number of applications which, when they are eventually processed to the final degree, will be found not to qualify under the criteria that at present exist in the Ministry of Housing and with the housing authority.

We have discussed with the mayor and his people other ways of putting housing units on the market. The Bridge Street program, with which we have concurred and which is under way—and some of the units of which will go into the rent supplement program—has been approved by the Ministry of Housing to try to take up some of the slack that exists in that particular community.

I am also waiting to hear back from the mayor as to other projects he would like to review with the Ministry of Housing as possibilities to come under rent review or under the sponsorship of a non-profit housing corporation.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: As some of the individuals now live in housing which is satisfactory to them but which is owned by private individuals, and cannot afford that housing, and, as a result, have applied for housing with the Windsor Housing Authority, why wouldn't the minister consider a rent supplement to such individuals? Does the minister not consider it unfair to subsidize one and not another when their incomes are exactly the same?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: If, by chance, the city of Windsor and its housing authority wish to recommend to the ministry that certain privately owned housing be looked at for rent supplement programs, we are prepared to do so; whether we use the in situ situation or not is something else.

The fact is that there are some projects in this province which the ministry has been asked to declare as rent supplement units and to allow the tenants at present there to go on to a rent supplement program. In the assessment of those tenants, their position and their rating have been found to be not as high as that of some waiting to get into those units. I think what we are really looking at, in fair and frank terms, is trying to do end runs on the system, and I don't think it's fair.

There are others who are not at present in adequate housing and who are looking for accommodation or their point system is substantially higher. As a result, if you allow this end run situation to take place, the first thing we will have is a great number of people, who I think and the system also says, are not as eligible for the rent supplement program but because of their presence in a certain unit they would qualify. I don't think that's the way the system should work.

Mr. Cassidy: You are strangling in red tape.

Mr. Cooke: Is the minister aware that in Windsor, there are 172 single people between the ages of 25 and 59 who have applied to get into Windsor housing but because of the Ontario Housing Corporation policy stating they will not house these types of people even though they are disabled, they cannot get housing in Windsor and other cities across this province? When is the minister going to change his policy so these types of people can live in decent housing instead of slums?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That situation doesn't exist only in Windsor, obviously.

Mr. Cooke: That's what I said.

Mr. Warner: It's a provincial failure.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere should know about failures because he really typifies them in this particular House. There are people in the age group between 25 and 59, as the member said. We have tried, through the public purse with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the municipalities and the provincial government, to provide housing for the age groups we think are most in need. Number one is family accommodation and number two is senior citizens, who are 60 years of age and older. It has not been the policy, either federally, provincially or municipally to try to fill that void or the vacuum that exists for the ages between 25 and 59. Mr. Speaker, to be very honest with you, the system hasn't got the capacity and it is not our intention at this time to change the policy.

RAPE CASE

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Attorney General: In view of the attempt to subvert justice in a particularly vicious rape trial scheduled for next month as evidenced by the explosives which killed two people in a van near the home of the victim and this morning's dismantling of a powerful bomb which was near the home of another one of the victims in this particular rape case, would the Attorney General report to the House the steps he has taken to protect the witnesses, and will he move the date of the trial up, at the request of local authorities?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I certainly will attempt to assure the House proper steps are being taken to protect these witnesses. To publicly reveal the precise steps, of course, might defeat the effectiveness of the protection. Moving up the date of the trial is really a matter for judicial determination. I will discuss with the crown prosecutor the possibility of doing that, but the ultimate decision will lie with the court and the judge who is seized of the case.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the Attorney General report to the House on his ministry's actions and instructions to police forces across Ontario to eliminate such sick actions and deal with those motorcycle gangs reputed to have connections with organized crime and the illicit drug traffic? Will he specifically report to the House as to whether or not the use of dynamite bombs as a means of intimidation, which has grown to almost epidemic proportions in the United States, has now moved over into Ontario as well?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will report back to the Legislature to the extent I can, Mr. Speaker. Generally in relation to this problem I just want to make it clear to the member, I share his concern.

QUALIFICATIONS OF DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION

Mr. Ruston: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Has the Minister of Education any guidelines for the qualifications of a director of education? Can, in fact, someone be a director of education who only has correspondence courses?

Mr. Wildman: Are you looking for a job?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am aware there are some guidelines for the director of education. The individual must have been an experienced teacher with administrative experience as well. I am sure the other specific qualifications are outlined somewhere. I don't know them at this present time but I shall be happy to investigate them.

I am aware there has been an applicant for the role of director of education who did indeed achieve some increased qualification through correspondence courses. Those are, in many instances, valid courses. I would have to examine the institution from which the qualification was granted in order to know whether one should look askance or sceptically at the qualifications so demonstrated by that individual. But there are many correspondence courses—to wit the ministry's correspondence program—which serve many people in outlying areas extremely well, not only at the secondary school level but also at the post-secondary level.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, has the Premier, after his fleeting visit, left the chamber?

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Bounsell: A question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister is no doubt aware that today Lisa Spencer resigned her position as an elementary school teacher with the Toronto board of education in order to avoid any possibility of a continuing conflict of interest for her spouse, Robert Spencer, a trustee with the Toronto board of education, under the present wording of the Municipal Conflict of Interest Act, would the minister consider seeking an amendment to that Municipal Conflict of Interest Act so that it has the effect of the criterion her predecessor always applied; that is if voting on a question does not put money directly in one's pocket, he or she has no conflict? Alternatively, would she consider amending the act so there is not a conflict of interest if a spouse is part of a unit represented by a bargaining agent?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to discuss with my predecessor his interpretation of the conflict of interest portion. I am not sure the statement just made by the honourable member for Windsor-Sandwich was exactly that which I have heard from my predecessor. I shall be very pleased to speak to him about it.

PETITION

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 33(b) of the Legislative Assembly Act, we, the undersigned, petition that the 1977 annual report of Ontario Hydro be referred to the standing resources development committee for the purpose, without limiting the scope of the committee's inquiry, of investigating and reporting as soon as possible on the matter of defective boilers supplied by Babcock and Wilcox Canada Limited to Ontario Hydro.

If the 1978 report is tabled today, the petition could, no doubt, be amended accordingly.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

DISTRICT OF PARRY SOUND LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 100, An Act respecting Local Government in the District of Parry Sound.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this bill is essentially the same as Bill 205 which was introduced last December. The principal changes I can outline very briefly. The name "township of North Georgian Bay" has been changed to "Georgian Bay Archipelago township," and the council will be headed by a reeve instead of a mayor. The first reeve will be elected by council from among the members of the council. In addition, the existing townships of—

Mr. Martel: It sounds like regional government to me.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —Humphrey and Foley will have portions of Conger township annexed to them.

Mr. Bradley: Regional government under another name.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Not really.

The bill also clearly defines the water boundaries in front of the town of Parry Sound. The start-up date for all these reorganizations is January 1, 1980, rather than December 1, 1979, to coincide with the normal municipal fiscal year. In addition, the province will not only pay the costs of the special elections in Kearney and the Georgian Bay Archipelago in 1979 but also the costs of the school board elections for those areas in 1980 since there would be no regular municipal elections at that time.

PUBLIC UTILITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 101, An Act to amend the Public Utilities Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This bill proposes four changes to the Public Utilities Act. The first will permit the resale of water with the permission of the municipality and thus enable commercial water haulers to resell water from a waterworks to persons whose water supply has been depleted.

The second will strengthen the wording of section 30 by providing that amounts payable for the supply of a public utility are a lien upon the lands, in the same manner and to the same extent as municipal taxes upon the lands.

The third will update the provisions for electing members of hydro-electric and public utilities commissions by making it clear that the provisions of the Municipal Elections Act, 1977 apply.

The fourth amendment will delete the existing provision which requires Ontario Hydro's approval of the salaries paid to members of hydro-electric and public utilities commissions.

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS ACT

Mr. McClellan moved first reading of Bill 102, An Act to declare the Rights of Children in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to declare the rights of children in Ontario and to provide a means for enforcing those rights through the process of judicial declaration.

The bill sets out a series of 12 rights belonging to every child who is resident in this province, and states every parent and the government of Ontario has the duty to protect these rights.

In certain circumstances, an application can be made to a judge for a determination whether a duty to a child has been fulfilled, together with the nature of that duty.

The bill further provides guarantees for children in any proceedings concerning matters affecting the guardianship, custody or status of children.

I may add, Mr. Speaker, this represents a contribution from our caucus to the International Year of the Child.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to table the answer to question number 123, and the interim answer to question 181 appearing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2281.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

On vote 701, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last Friday in the examination of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, the honourable member for Sudbury was bringing to the attention of the House the need to do something in northern Ontario with respect to those single-resource communities that encounter economic problems as they move down the economic life of that resource. He was referring specifically to the possible transportation problem or the transportation needs between the Sudbury basin and Elliot Lake.

If I might just take a moment, I'd like to recognize the very large group of Dryden students who are in the gallery today. It is an exceptionally large group. I think there are close to 60 or 75 students from Dryden here today.

Of course, they are assisted by the Young Voyageurs program and as well they contributed handsomely themselves. They have made use of that very efficient airline, Nordair, to come to Toronto and see firsthand their government at work. To them we extend a very warm welcome, and we hope their visit is both very lengthy and very pleasant.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to put into the record some proposals that came before us at that particular time. Honourable members will recall that the mayor of Kapuskasing, René Piché, through his action committee, made some overtures with regard to the improvement of air service through his area, that being from Kapuskasing to Elliot Lake and on to Toronto, with a Dash-7. In fact, officials of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission did a review of the possibilities and went so far as to even name it the Miner Liner, which, if it were implemented, would move miners from Sudbury to Elliot Lake and return. The proposal did receive considerable initial response but was deemed impracticable under current circumstances. It was reviewed internally by my own ministry back in the spring of 1978, and the conclusions were the same.

I might say that at that point we had some discussions with the federal government on the possibility of leasing a Dash-7. We hope we can work out an arrangement. But our visit to Ottawa to meet with the now extinct Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Jack Horner—the great member from Alberta; the fellow who can ride a horse—was disastrous.

Mr. Bolan: Never mind whether he can ride a horse. Find out if he can fly an airplane or get one for the minister.

Mr. Wildman: What was Otto Lang's position?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He wasn't at the meeting. Bob Andras was there, along with Keith Penner; Ralph Stewart I believe was there, as was Maurice Foster. In fact, Maurice Foster was one of the prime movers, along with René Piché, of this idea. But we were shot down in flames with that idea, because it was obvious that the traffic was not there. We feel it would take about three years before the traffic volume would be sufficient to support such a service, at least based on the figures we had at that particular time.

I also want to mention that Mayor Gordon of Sudbury has prepared a brief entitled "Sudbury-Elliot Lake: Government Policies Required to Rationalize Economic Development Patterns." This brief calls for the provincial government to provide solutions to present transportation and communications deficiencies between the two urban centres. I believe that is what the member from Sudbury was alluding to.

The brief asks for very considerable outlays of government funds for items such as acceleration of the four-laning of highway 17 west, subsidizing of bus services for commuters between Sudbury and Elliot Lake, improved northern service between Elliot Lake and Sudbury, improved high-speed passenger rail service between Toronto, Sudbury, Elliot Lake and Sault Ste. Marie, high-quality communication links through data transmission lines, and provision of government services from Sudbury-based personnel and facilities for Elliot Lake during the rapid urban expansion of that particular community.

It would be premature for me, or even the government, to make any comment at this time on that brief. It is being reworked, I think, with the North Shore communities, because there was some reaction to its contents, of which I am sure the member for Algoma is more aware than I am. After the brief is reworked and is presented to us, we certainly will have a good, close look at it.

I want to mention, for the benefit of the honourable members, some of the provincial assistance we have given the Sudbury basin during the recent crisis. Members will recall the announcement of the $10-million provincial building in Sudbury. Many of the members from the Sudbury basin were present when my colleague, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), did the official sod-turning a little less than a year ago. That building is well advanced now and is the project providing a considerable amount of employment to the construction trades.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs gave a specific amount of funding for work to be carried out on the Nickeldale Dam by the Nickel District Conservation Authority. A number of road projects were also included for acceleration and improvement in that particular area, especially highways 17 and 108. Members all remember the very substantial financial assistance that MNA provided for the 2001 venture, a three-year, locally-initiated venture, whose thrust to pull the community around was the need for industrial development right there in the Sudbury basin. The amount of that assistance was about $600,000.

In addition, the ministry has contributed to the greening of Sudbury, which is a project to improve the greening in that particular area. Assistance about which I have spoken already was given to the Sudbury import substitution study and the agricultural revitalization study. Those are just a few of the items we're assisting directly at a time of crisis and severe problems that municipality is having. Let's hope they will be of only a short duration.

There is also, of course, the work we have been doing with DREE people in connection with the Walden industrial site. That is just a brief review of a number of the items we are doing in the Sudbury area that some of the members may have forgotten. It is quite substantial and I am sure the results will be very positive.

I would like to answer another question before I take my seat. The member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) questioned the length of time it is taking to build the Bailey bridge for Crystal Falls. I am told that it is quite a distance for that bridge. It is something like 200 yards. The water is exceptionally fast and the bridge may require a centre structure as support. The approaches were gone at both ends. Completion is set for August but they are going to try to accelerate the date. These are some of the problems they are confronted with.

In the meantime, we will be working closely with the Minister of Natural Resources to provide a larger boat to transport the students back and forth. That is not in place yet but my staff told me as recently as an hour ago that discussions are well advanced.

Mr. Bolan: Seeing that the minister is in such a good mood today in discussing in the House the advances the ministry is making in transportation in the Sudbury-Elliot Lake area, perhaps we could also find out at this time just what the minister has to say about the cutbacks in bus transportation which were introduced by the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission last fall.

There were some cutbacks which were made, not in the lucrative runs like the one from Toronto to North Bay or from North Bay to Timmins, but rather in those areas which are not lucrative and where the service is definitely required. I am thinking particularly of the area from Timmins to Foleyet, which I believe was discontinued altogether, and some other routes from Timmins to Wawa which were very seriously cut back.

Would the minister first of all care to give us the reasoning for these cutbacks or discontinuances, and tell us whether or not this is the type of policy which the government will pursue in the future, and whether or not the policy of the government is to look at the bottom line of the bus operation and to keep on effecting cutbacks as long as the bottom line shows red until we see black?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, let me point out it is certainly not the government's policy, or indeed the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission's policy, to just cut back service for the sake of cutting back to show a profit. There's a certain rationalization that has to occur. They are charged with the responsibility of running an operation within certain guidelines.

The member will recall the remarks the chairman made to the North Bay Chamber of Commerce. Management Board in its wisdom and the government in its wisdom have taken certain sections of the ONTC and split them up into commercial and non-commercial. In other words, there's some we know should be subsidized and we fully accept that responsibility.

There are others that compete with the private sector and they should be carrying a fair share of that responsibility. In other words, how far do we subsidize those other facilities? I can assure the honourable member that it is not a policy of outright cutback and withdrawal of services, only a rationalization and improvement in some cases where the service is not used and maybe a further refinement of the amount of traffic is warranted.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, in relation to that, I would like to ask a supplementary on the bus service and make one comment in relation to the study my colleague from Sudbury discussed last Friday; that is, the comment that perhaps there might have been more consultation by the Sudbury council in preparation of its brief with Elliot Lake and with some of the North Shore communities that might have allayed some of the concerns expressed later on. Hopefully, if there is an improvement in transportation, and certainly bus service, between Sudbury and Elliot Lake that will also take into account the North Shore communities and the benefits that might accrue to them.

In relation to the question asked by the member for Nipissing regarding Ontario Northland cutbacks and the minister's reply, I just want to point out that the minister had indicated to me previously, as had the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), that if there was to be a cutback in service in the Wawa area this would not occur without consultation, and secondly, it would take place in relation to other services, such as commercial services like Greyhound, in the area.

Yet when the cutback took place customers, small businessmen who used the Ontario Northland for freight between Timmins and Wawa, did not hear about it until the announcement was made in the press, including the owner of the local weekly in Wawa, who happened to use the service. He didn't know about it until he got the news release from Ontario Northland. That hardly constitutes prior consultation.

When I approached the ministry and asked for clarification on this and why on earth this had happened, I was informed they felt they were having to compete with Greyhound on the route between Wawa and Sault Ste. Marie, along highway 17 and that people could use Greyhound. Apparently, Ontario Northland and the ministry were unaware at that point that Greyhound had just previously cut its service.

In order to spend a day in Sault Ste. Marie shopping or visiting friends or doing business there, if you want to go by bus and get there early in the morning you have to leave Wawa at 3 a.m. This is hardly an adequate service. It seems to me we need some kind of explanation as to why, first, there wasn't prior consultation with the people involved and the people affected; and second, why is it Ontario Northland was so unaware of what Greyhound was doing?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I'm sure the honourable member is aware that following his communications with me the chairman of the ONR did make a personal effort to go into those communities and to meet personally with those people and explain the actions of the ONR.

Mr. Wildman: That was after.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To say the least, I think they were favourably accepted once he explained to them the reasons for it. They are reasonable people; they are businessmen themselves and the problem was resolved.

I'll agree with the member there was a breakdown in communications and I hope that doesn't happen again. I do feel strongly that when the service is being reduced or changed in any way those customers who are directly involved should be notified as early as possible. The staff have been aware of this shortcoming and they will attempt not to repeat it in the future.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, analysis and planning:

Mr. Wildman: Again I'd like to go briefly to the role of the ministry. We were told in our analysis of the planning activity that the role is inter-ministerial—participating in committees, proposals emanating from other ministries and so on. I'd like to know what involvement this ministry has had with the various studies on government changes, such as the bill introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) with regard to the Parry Sound area.

Mr. Bolan: That's in northern Ontario too.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, I know it is; that's why I mentioned it.

Mr. Bolan: But they don't know it.

Mr. Wildman: I understand there are a large number of studies going on. One is in the Blind River area regarding possible municipal annexation of other areas around Blind River. There is one that deals with the Smooth Rock Falls area, around Strickland and Fauquier. There is one in the Kirkland Lake area; and of course, there is also one in the Sault Ste. Marie north area, in my own riding. What is this ministry's role, if any, in these studies by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs on changes in the municipal organization? Some of them include annexation of unorganized areas or smaller municipalities, or the establishment of new municipalities in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, we are very much involved in those studies. The staff teamwork is very evident. It shone through in the preparation of the Local Services Board Act. That was a typical example.

As the act was moving ahead the communication between the two ministries was, to say the least, excellent from the minister right down to all members of both ministries. We do have an involvement. We are able to provide the northern input which is so important in these studies. I think there are 12 or 15 studies, if memory serves me correctly, going on right across northern Ontario now. We are looking at various forms of annexations and new government structures and that type of thing. So we have a direct link and we are able to put that northern feeling into it. Some people down here think there will be massive amounts of growth in these areas, but that is not necessarily the case. The records show that over the last 10 or 15 years we haven't had the kind of growth some people down here feared. It's those kinds of things we're able to express to the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

I'm personally confident, after discussions with the present minister, that he is very much aware of our feelings. The ministry is very cognizant of northern affairs and they're relying on us for input, at least of the attitudes that we sense in northern Ontario. So we are there and we have the opportunity to provide input and to share with that ministry any proposals that come forward.

Mr. Wildman: All right, I'll accept that. I just noticed this afternoon that when the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) made a statement with regard to Elliot Lake, he referred to the tabling of a report I had referred to earlier in these estimates, the Environment Assessment Board's report. In that report it states there are going to be serious problems, in terms of services among other things, completely apart from the immediate environmental impact of the expansion. That is environmental in the normal sense of the word; in the wider sense there are going to be serious problems with services such as hospitals and many others, even such things as waste disposal.

In the statement made today by the minister, he thanked specifically a number of other ministries, the Ministry of Housing and so on, for co-operating with his ministry in appearing before the Environmental Assessment Board hearing, as well as a number of other agencies in the community, such as companies, unions and the town of Elliot Lake.

Was your ministry involved at all in the environmental assessment hearings in Elliot Lake; and is it going to be involved in the plans for the provision of services? I note what you have said about Atikokan in terms of communities that are experiencing a depression in their economies and what your ministry has attempted to do. What about a community that is booming? There seems to be a problem here, in that as long as things are booming I detect a feeling on the part of the government that everything is fine. However, if things are slowing down, then perhaps we have problems we should look at.

We should be looking at Sudbury, I certainly would agree there; but what about a community that is going so fast it's very difficult for the town officials to keep up with the kind of expansion taking place, as in Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In connection with the Elliot Lake situation, as I have pointed out on many occasions we are not a line ministry. We don't have the technical people, such as the Ministry of the Environment has for environmental problems or design engineers for highways or the input the Ministry of Housing would have; but that co-ordinating role is there and we are involved. While we are not there on a front-line basis, I think it's fair to say we are included in those discussions. We don't carry forward the thrust in the same way we would in Atikokan.

The government's feeling is very clear in that here is a community which has an excellent contract with Ontario Hydro. That contract includes many of the amenities the workers will require; it's all-inclusive. The programs are in place to assist a community like Elliot Lake. I do recognize the fact that they need some up-front money to get started. There is no question about that. I'm hopeful that will be resolved.

It's difficult to compare the problems of Elliot Lake with Atikokan or even Pickle Lake. They are of a completely different magnitude. The ministries are directly involved. They have the programs in place. The mayor, Roger Taylor, is very much aware of the route he can follow, and he is following it very aggressively. I'm sure that following the tabling of this report he will be more aggressive than ever, which is the way it should be.

Mr. Wildman: New Democrats are often aggressive.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He doesn't brag about being a New Democrat, let's make that clear.

Mr. Wildman: He ran once.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He doesn't mention it any more; at least not in my company though maybe in yours. He is an excellent administrator for the community; I'm sure he will be there for a long time because he has the community at heart. I think it's fair to say he knows his way around very effectively. I expect to be hearing more from the mayor in the not-too-distant future.

I say to you now that if he requires any co-ordinating responsibilities, while we don't want to take on responsibility in a lead ministry concept in Elliot Lake, we would be prepared to assist him of course, and he is very much aware of that.

Mr. Bolan: Just arising from the minister's answers to that, he says that his is not a line ministry in Elliot Lake but that he is included in discussions. In what capacity is the minister included in these discussions? He says that his presence is there. Just what is he doing there, or is his position not more redundant than anything else?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, we would be included in those very early discussions with the staff, the possibility that there are some discussions or some possibility of going the DREE route as an example, the DREE route, the Ontario-DREE agreement, if there is some way we can work in. I don't think there is, but that possibility exists under our community priorities branch. There may be some special funding that Elliot Lake would require that would look to our community priority budget to fund. So if we can get that input early in the game then we know what's going on from there. The actual delivery of the services is not our responsibility.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Minister, I want to go back to talking about planning. There was a cabinet committee formed a couple of years ago when the Inco layoffs were announced and there were repeated efforts to get information from the Treasurer, who was named chairman of that committee, and we tried to get some information from the Premier (Mr. Davis) with respect to the study that was supposed to be conducted by that cabinet committee.

Can the minister tell me what in fact happened? Did that committee sit at all? Have they got any long-term or short-term policies for those municipalities which are effected when mining companies decide it's time to abandon the ship? I might say that both the Premier and the Treasurer have answered and I wanted to tell the minister what they have said. The Premier has indicated: "It's got to be economically enticing for industries to stay in."

Mr. Bolan: Viable.

Mr. Martel: Viable, yes. National Steel in Capreol made $6.5 million. That isn't what we're talking about when we ask what backup policies or what policies there are when a municipality is affected by a sudden shut-down of a one-industry town. What solutions has the minister got? It isn't a case of giving the industry more money, because in the case of National Steel or the case of Inco, they were both making money and they left. Now what are the minister's short-term policies that came out of that committee and what are the long term solutions that came out of that committee?

Don't tell me about DREE agreements for the Sudbury basin because we've already got three industrial sites in Sudbury, so that isn't going to help us. None of them is filled and none of them can attract anything. The problem of northeastern Ontario, as it is with northwestern Ontario, is that beyond extractive industries it's very difficult if not near impossible to get secondary industry to locate. While the minister always indicates that I want to use a big stick, that's not really the case at all, but his solution of handouts has not worked to bring secondary industry to the north.

What alternatives are there? The minister says: "Don't use the big stick. That's your way of doing it." What is the minister's? If he would be so kind to tell me I would know, because I have been hearing about secondary industry coming into the Sudbury basin since I was that high. We still haven't got a secondary industry. We had a commissioner in Sudbury, they finally let him go just recently because after paying his high and fancy salary for three or four years they still hadn't located anything there.

Mr. Bolan: What about Darcy McKeough?

Mr. Martel: Yes, that's right. Darcy said there would be no secondary industry in northeastern Ontario for 20 years. I want to know what policy the minister has to attract secondary industry related to the natural resources which are being exploited, and while he might say: "Well, we don't want the big stick approach," can he tell me what approach he is going to use?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is very much aware, I believe the committee is still ongoing under a new chairman. The Minister of Natural Resources is the new chairman of that committee. I might say on this point, Mr. Chairman, that finding solutions for single-resource communities is not an easy thing. I think the honourable member will recognize that. It is not something where you sit down around a table and somebody comes up with an answer and you run off and you implement it. It's just not that easy.

Mr. Bolan: The problems didn't start today, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know and it's ongoing. I remember vividly, and I am sure there are things that will escape my memory, but the 2001 funding is an example of what came out of that committee. The people of the city of Sudbury rallied together and I still marvel at the way they did rally together. I was pleased to see the honourable member there at the 2001 conference, standing up along with his colleagues from the Sudbury basin; cheering, applauding the Premier that night, at the university, with smiles—

Mr. Bolan: That was for TV.

Mr. Martel: That's stretching it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You recall the evening well.

Mr. Martel: I recall the evening well.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I was there and I enjoyed every minute of it; it was a pleasant experience. It was a pleasant experience to see a very community-oriented and initiated idea get off the ground and it certainly stemmed from discussions we had in that particular committee. The transportation idea for the Miner Liner also originated in those discussions we had. We looked into the economics of it in depth. So to say that the committee just sat and did nothing is entirely wrong. In fact, since we last spoke here, at which time the possibility of improved and increased secondary manufacturing for mining equipment in northern Ontario was brought up, I have taken it upon myself to make a couple of contacts with some of the major firms in Ontario and asked the very simple, positive question which I have asked a number of times before. I get the same answer, which has to do with the tariff condition, believe it or not, the federal tariff.

Mr. Martel: There's no tariff.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They tell me there is.

Mr. Martel: No, if the equipment is not produced in Canada there is no tariff.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, but they can produce it outside of Canada much cheaper and be more competitive than if they were producing it here. If they produced it here they wouldn't be able to compete with outside imports, so it makes it very difficult for them. They made it very clear that it is just competition on a world market situation. While Canada does have the expertise and the technical knowledge, the actual manufacturing can be done outside of Canada in other countries of the world and brought back here and sold here cheaper than we can produce it here.

It happens, I suppose, with television sets and with radios and a number of other things. It galls me, as well as members on the other side of the House. It bothers me, there's no question about that. Particularly when we mill and mine the ore here, and refine it to a certain point. I think I should read into the record that North Bay Nugget editorial. At this point I think the member for Nipissing would like me to read into the record the Nugget editorial of May 24. He's nodding; he's concurring, I gather?

Mr. Bolan: Go ahead. My wife didn't write it, I can assure you of that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have a great deal of respect for that northern Ontario newspaper. They look at things very objectively.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Even when Mike's wife writes the article?

Mr. Bolan: That's right; she only writes them on education.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There's a little weakness once in a while, but I would say the greater percentage of the time the tone and the thrust is what I think what it should be. Anyway the editorial reads as such; and if you will bear with me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read it into the record. It's captioned "Mining Association Director Makes Some Excellent Points." Does the member recall that editorial?

Mr. Martel: No, I don't get the North Bay Nugget.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I will read it to you then.

"Now that the election is history, we think the following opinions of Mr. John L. Bonus, managing director of the Mining Association of Canada deserve to be made known.

"Mr. Bonus commented on Ed Broadbent's views in a letter to the editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail. In view of the importance of mining in northern Ontario, we feel Mr. Bonus makes some good points as follows: Mr. Broadbent's argument is that for years we have been exploiting our resources in raw form, thus denying Canadians job opportunities which would be open to them if they processed those resources prior to export. He claims this practice is caused essentially by the large percentage of foreign control in the resource industries. With regard to mining, I offer the following observations.

"A substantial proportion of Canadian minerals are processed domestically before export or find their way into Canadian manufactured goods which are sold in Canada or exported. There are at present 16 smelters and 15 refineries operating in Canada which employ over 35,000 individuals in the further processing of raw ores. Between 60 to 70 per cent of all copper, silver and lead mined is processed into refined metal in Canada.

"Virtually all raw nickel produced in Canada is processed to some degree here at home, and 50 per cent is processed to refined metal. More than 86 per cent of the raw iron ore produced is processed to beneficiated ore that goes directly into the making of steel in Canadian steel mills. Canada's zinc-reduction capacity is the third largest in the world, and about 50 per cent of production is domestically processed to refined metal.

"Unlike the other resource sectors, non-ferrous metal mining, smelting and refining operations are approximately 70 per cent Canadian controlled. An even larger segment of the non-petroleum mineral industry is under exclusive Canadian management. More than 250,000 individual Canadians participate as direct shareholders of Canadian mining firms. In 1978, these companies paid dividends to shareholders totalling $371 million.

"There is absolutely nothing by way of legislation or constraints preventing a Canadian entrepreneur from purchasing a Canadian-mined mineral or producing from it a processed or a manufactured article or commodity for export. If there are not enough entrepreneurs to do so, it must be because they have concluded that opportunities are just not there to be exploited.

"Why? Because most large mineral-consuming countries or markets—the United States, the European Economic Community, Japan—typically impose tariffs or some form of non-tariff barriers on processed or manufactured mineral products to protect their own industries. Most raw materials imported into these markets enter duty-free.

"Why can we not impose on such markets a condition that if they want our minerals, they will have to purchase them in processed or manufactured form? Because we have no monopoly on supply."

That's why we can't.

"Purchasers would have little difficulty in obtaining their mineral requirements elsewhere, and many new sources of supply are coming on stream. Canada can and does try to negotiate better access for its processed and manufactured goods, but her bargaining position is not all that strong."

That lays out quite clearly the fact we don't have a monopoly position in the world market situation.

Mr. Martel: We had the nickel monopoly for years.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are still producing just as much, but that has gone down to 30 per cent because the world is using that much more and they are getting it from other sources. Those are the problems we have got to realize, and we have got to be practical about it. Look at yourself in the mirror and say: "This is the problem." You can't just resolve it overnight.

I say to you while there is concern with single-resource communities and we share your concerns equally, we don't really have any immediate answers at our fingertips. We do know there will always be places like Atikokan. Red Lake is still there; Geraldton is still there; Kirkland Lake is still there; they are all there. Sure they are not as large as they were before; but I can tell you one thing, that I was at Atikokan 30 years ago when they turned the first shovel of iron ore; and the people moved into that community and said: "We will be here for 30 years."

They knew it 30 years ago; and they accepted the fact. They have gone through one generation. They have built their homes; they sent their kids to university, and they have had 30 years of a good life. Now they know; and they knew 30 years ago, so there isn't the hard feeling in Atikokan you would lead us to believe. There is a new thrust in Atikokan, there is a new direction in Atikokan, and the government is there to help them.

The Hydro plant went into Atikokan. The new thrust with our lead ministry concept is working very closely with the industrial commissioner in Atikokan. New highways are being built in the area. There is the expansion of the airport and a greater emphasis on Quetico Park. All these things are happening; and they all revolve. Geraldton is a typical example. The population of Geraldton is larger today than it was when McLeod and Cockshutt was operating there, when the gold mining companies were all going great guns. Geraldton is larger today, and there is not a mine operating in Geraldton. It is a comfortable, little northern community. It has a good, strong base, and the security the community provides its people is second to none in northern Ontario.

I know the honourable member is concerned. We are concerned too. We are concerned about the forests; we are concerned about the nonrenewable resources. We are not going to stop looking for solutions—not at all. While we don't have the answers at our fingertips, I can assure him we will go on looking for those answers.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, the minister gets up and quotes from an article written by somebody having something to do with the mining association—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The great mining authority in Canada, Mr. Bonus.

Mr. Bolan: I can assure you that it wasn't written by anyone at the Nugget.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Nugget had the courage to carry it.

Mr. Martel: Yes, the courage. The Northern Miner had the courage to carry it too, I am sure.

The minister says, "We don't have enough of it to control." What did we do when we had 95 per cent of the world's production of nickel? The Tories were in power then; I was in high school, and I can recall when the Tories came to power. We had 95 per cent up until 10 or 15 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are still producing the same amount.

Mr. Martel: But we had 95 per cent. What did we extract from them that would stay in Ontario and in Canada? We do not even get all the refining. At the same time, Falconbridge has yet to refine a pound of nickel in Canada, after 45 years. That area produced 95 per cent of the world's nickel. What did we bargain for? What did we get for the citizens of Ontario? What did we get for the city of Sudbury? What did we get in terms of not only refining but also some fabrication when 95 per cent of the world's nickel came from that one area? One cannot play that game today. The deck has changed; the game has changed. We still produce more, but it only represents 35 per cent. But when we had it all, what did the government do?

Mr. Worton: The cards have changed; not the game.

Mr. Martel: They change the deck whenever they want. What did the government do then? Nothing. The same pious arguments were used when I came in here 12 years ago, I say to the minister. The same silly arguments were being used then as are being used now. The minister recalls 1969 when he brought in a motion about refining in Ontario.

What have we got? We have 38 exemptions continuing with mining—38 exemptions to continue to process abroad—and we have 325,000 people in Ontario unemployed. We have had one one-industry town after another going down the pipe in those 12 years.

What have we done? I know the solution is not easy. Three years ago, when this ministry was created, I put forward a motion saying that, in the area of nonrenewable resources, part of the revenue from those extractive industries should be put into a fund—I called it a “Tomorrow” fund, for want of a better name—so that when we did have a one-industry town where the bottom fell out we would have some capital in the bank, so to speak, to establish some other alternative for that community. The minister recalls how the vote went: It went down the tube.

Part of the problem in northern Ontario—and I spent four years on the select committee studying economic and cultural nationalism; we listened to all the businessmen, and they all said the same thing to us: “If we are a Canadian company, it is very difficult to get money from the Canadian banks.” The same business with an American owner gets a loan from a Canadian bank; a Canadian businessman owning a company, going to the bank, does not get the loan. [4:15]

A “Tomorrow” fund of some sort, taking a percentage of the tax we get on the revenue from the extraction of trees or minerals would establish a fund on which we could draw. You turned it down. That would be a long-term solution that should have come out of your committee.

In fact, virtually nothing came out of that committee. You talk about 2001.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Careful.

Mr. Martel: Do you think that $600,000 is going to replace 2,400 jobs at Inco and 750 jobs at Falconbridge? We all know that by the time the strike is over Inco will be where it wants to be with about 9,000 workers, which is about 2,000 fewer at the end of the layoffs. You’re not going to put opportunities for young people into northern Ontario with a cottage-type industry. It could pick up some of the slack, but surely it can’t be small, cottage-type industries that are going to resolve the massive layoffs that occur in one-industry communities like Sudbury.

I am still waiting for one of the solutions you were going to come up with. I was breathless when I heard you say that you were considering the establishment of rapid transit to Elliot Lake. I stood in this place nine years ago and said we should have centred regions where there would be only one municipality which would be served with all the infrastructure and we would move out to tap the resources. There are 800 or 900 people from Sudbury working in Elliot Lake and they don’t have any homes. Where is the rapid transit you talked about at the time of the layoffs two years ago.

Mr. Wildman: He says he is studying it.

Mr. Martel: He is going to study it to death. You had time to build it.

You’re going to have to increase the infrastructure in Elliot Lake. It’s a one-industry town too. What happens when you increase that infrastructure and that resource runs out? What do you do then? You watch those millions that you put into sewage and water treatment facilities go down the tube too? Or would you be better off going out tomorrow and driving the first spike to get a rapid transit system into Elliot Lake, which could carry those workers over to Elliot Lake in maybe an hour’s time. I am told that it is only 50 or 60 miles across country.

If we did that sort of planning and proceeded with it, one could say that we were getting over the hangup of building new towns at every mine site. There is already an infrastructure in Elliot Lake. There is a tremendous shortage of housing. I am not trying to detract from what is going on in Elliot Lake at all. I’m saying that 700, 800 or 900 of those workers probably live in Sudbury now. Let’s get a system whereby they can get to work and back and maintain their homes in Sudbury without costing us any more money except to put the transit system in.

Elliot Lake, like all mines, from the time you take the first shovelful out you are working towards the end of it. I know that and you know that. We continue to build town-sites. It is a waste of money. You are going to have to do it this time because it is simply too far away, we take that into consideration. But you have had two years to deal with the Inco layoffs and you are no further ahead with getting a rapid transit system into Elliot Lake so that we can keep those workers in Sudbury without having to start building a whole lot of stuff and see it go belly up in Sudbury.

Why is this? I would have hoped a great committee—from the deliberations of which no one can lay out what you decided—at least would make some decisions. As I stand here, I am convinced that committee has not really grappled with the problem. It has really not put down on paper what the solutions are or what are the short-term plans. When the minister says to me: “In Red Lake, they knew it was only going to last 30 years”; I asked the minister: “Who loses in that type of operation?” The only guy who loses is the average Joe. He goes in and builds his house. The mining industry, through profits and writeoffs and whatnots, gets out with money ahead. But the worker’s whole life-savings is one house over a lifetime, unless he happens to be a lawyer. And what does he do? He can't even sell it for the going rate.

In my hometown, with 140 homes for sale right now, the bottom has dropped out. They can't commute between any mining community and Capreol to go to work, and they're not going to find work in Sudbury. It's not like Metro Toronto, where you can go somewhere else when you lose 250 jobs. You can't commute up there. The bottom drops out. The guy loses his shirt.

The mining industry never loses. The workers lose. They lose because they put a lot of money into a home, and when the bottom drops out, they get nothing, or relatively very little.

And we have no solutions. That committee didn't have short-term solutions and I don't think it's got long-term solutions. I wish the minister would produce them if he has. I wish he would bring over for us tomorrow night what it is that's the short-term policy that came out of that committee and what—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just told you.

Mr. Martel: Don't tell me 2001 is the short-term solution for the problems of the city of Sudbury. That's just ridiculous. It might help, but it's not the solution to 3,150 jobs from the union, and how many from management. That's the solution? You can't be serious.

Let me turn to the other one, the production of mining equipment. It took my staff six months to be able to put that together. Everywhere we phoned it was most difficult to try and get any information. We wrote to every mining company in the province about where they were purchasing most of their equipment. We got four answers from Inco, Falconbridge, Noranda, and I believe Denison. They were all discouraging.

In fact, before the select committee J. Edwin Carter from Inco said we shouldn't get into mining equipment in this part of the world because it's cyclical too.

The primary producing countries are Sweden, Germany and the United States. All of those have wages as high as Canada. The real problem is tariffs. If the equipment isn't produced in Canada it comes into Canada tariff-free. The only people who are smart enough to overcome that are the Japanese. They allow raw material in tariff-free. In fact the more you process it, the higher the tariff.

Why do they want it that way? They want jobs for their people. So they don't levy any tariffs if you just take it out.

I'm told, for example, they don't even limb trees from British Columbia anymore. They just throw them in the boat and away you go. They got around nickel. They went in with Inco and they've established a firm in Japan which is partially owned by International Nickel to get at Indonesia.

What do we do? We can't even go into a field that's a natural for us, mining equipment. It's a natural for us because we have the internal market. We should be smart enough to set up tax policies which would encourage the purchase of Canadian-produced equipment.

But we don't do that either. We simply make a few phone calls and the company says no, it's not viable. I think it is viable. The statistics show us with a trade deficit in all mining equipment of $1.6 billion annually. If that isn't viable for us to get involved in, there is something wrong. That is what I say when I say to the minister nobody's talking about a big stick, but this government, based on two select committee reports, should get off its backside and start to bring together the expertise that would see the development of that type of industry in Canada and in Ontario, particularly northern Ontario, where we have a school of mining, where we have the resources, where we have such a desperate need for some secondary industry. I suspect Jarvis Clark is managing to start out with some proper type of government—and I don't mean intervention, but government involvement. We might expand that a lot larger. We might encourage it. As I understand it, they primarily bring the parts in—

Mr. Bolan: They make everything right there.

Mr. Martel: Do they make the parts too? I was told not. That's good. That's what we should be moving to. That represents just what we should be going to. This government should be out there front and centre trying to encourage that whole field in northern Ontario, because everything is there. We also happen to be the only country that imports the amount of mining equipment that is imported into this country. No other country even comes close to us, yet we produce as much in mineral wealth as the United States. We don't see the Americans importing it all. They manufacture some.

We have a production capacity in mineral wealth nearly as great as the United States and we import our equipment from them. They're smarter than us. They make it there themselves. The minister says I want to use a big club, but when the private sector doesn't want to do things we in this country immediately throw our hands up in despair. Or we do what the Minister of Industry and Tourism is doing, we try to buy it in. We can't buy it in. We spent several million dollars on a select committee, which several of the minister's colleagues were on, which said: "No, discourage that sort of thing. Encourage investment, but portfolio investment, not equity." We don't. His colleagues signed that. Maybe he should read the report some day.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You wrote it.

Mr. Martel: I didn't write the report. My colleague, the former member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) and I wrote it. If your seven colleagues were swung over by my persuasive arguments, and they signed the document—

Mr. Bolan: More power to you.

Mr. Martel: That's right—then I did a good job. I'm just saying that there's a field that two select committees—the last one had 18 members—identified mining equipment. My friend from Nipissing was on that select committee. There were nine of the minister's colleagues on that and they said mining equipment, because of the recital I gave last week of the reasons why. I say if the private sector says no all by itself, what's wrong with us getting involved with them and saying yes for the benefit of Canada. For the amount of mining we do, we just think it's absolutely necessary.

We might go in as a partner; we might give them some money just to be nice. We might lend them some money. We might provide grants, but we've got to start it in a large way to make a viable industry, not only for internal consumption but for export purposes, because if Sweden, with only nine million people, can become one of the leading producers in that field, Ontario is almost that big.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, no; Sweden is smaller.

Mr. Martel: I think they have nine million people though.

Mr. Makarchuk: Less than Ontario though.

Mr. Martel: Less than Ontario, so what's wrong with us?

Mr. Laughren: Global product mandate.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell the minister, before he has a bird about Sweden, there is more free enterprise in Sweden than there is in Canada. His colleagues were surprised when they learned that when we went to Sweden. What do you do anyway? You buy house insurance, fire insurance, job insurance and medical insurance. You talk about cradle to the grave, only we give it to the free enterprise system in this society, but it's protection from the cradle to the grave anyway. That's all nonsense. Those countries were able to develop, to become leaders in mining equipment and in automobiles. They export two cars—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Three hundred years of non-participation in any kind of war certainly helped them, particularly when they could sell the instruments of war to other people.

Mr. Martel: Do you know what my friends at Inco were doing?

Mr. Wildman: Inco was selling to both sides.

Mr. Martel: Let me tell you how we got a refinery at Port Colborne. In 1916 we found Inco loading U-boats in New York. That's how come dear old Inco got so generous and came to Ontario and built the refinery at Port Colborne—when they finally got caught loading U-boats in the United States in 1916. Don't tell me about their great patriotism. It was non-existent.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I didn't say anything about patriotism. You were asking why Sweden was able to do certain things.

Mr. Martel: Because government got involved with the private sector to encourage the production of mining equipment. It got automobiles, and they now export two makes. We aren't in any of that. All I'm suggesting is that if there is a way you want to help northern Ontario, the key sector is to move to a field such as mining equipment. I don't care how, just as long as we do it.

There are suggestions I made several years ago which, had we carried them out then, would have provided some of the funding to put up some of the capital in order to get it established. I said let's establish a "tomorrow" fund from the returns paid to the province from the use of our resources so we would have a bankroll when things go badly in those communities. We haven't done any of those things.

I come back to where I started. I say to the minister I have heard for the 12 years I've been here that we're going to get something in the north, and we haven't. I have heard before that we're going to get secondary industry in the north and we really have not. We have continued to exploit primarily.

When the free-enterprise system, as you like to describe it, decides it's not going there, what are the alternatives? It's not a case of a big stick. Is there no alternative where government can get involved?

You do it all the time. When you give Ford $68 million, that's a type of involvement. Don't tell me about the big stick. All you're doing is paying for it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It wasn't $68 million.

Mr. Martel: Well, the federal government gave them $40 million and you gave them $28 million for a total of how much? Was that government involvement?

There is only one taxpayer in this country. It doesn't matter whether it came from you or from the feds, there's only one taxpayer.

Mr. Wildman: The Premier himself said that today.

Mr. Martel: All I'm saying is that you have the strangest philosophy over there. When it doesn't suit you, you say, "Ah, but you guys want to interfere using the big stick," or, "You're interfering in the free enterprise system." But then you turn around and what do you say? You say, "Here, free enterprise, here's 68 million bucks, compliments of the people of Ontario."

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Why? Why did we do that?

Mr. Martel: I suspect because Ford threatened to go somewhere else. Sure, you think you can play the game of Russian roulette with those big companies against the United States, and I tell you you're crazy.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are you against Ford?

Mr. Martel: No, no; you see, it's an either-proposition.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well you can't have it both ways.

Mr. Martel: Why? I would say to them, "Look, companies, we in this country have decided we're going to go a different route. We're going to put up the capital we're giving to you, but instead of taking $68 million and giving it to Ford, we're going to plunk $68 million into the development of a mining equipment corporation."

We'll not only have the jobs. You see, what Ford doesn't do in this country is research and development. It doesn't do any research and development in Canada; it's all done in Dearborn. We would say to our mining equipment company, "Patent rights will belong to us. Royalty fees will be paid here. Profits will be paid here. Jobs will remain here. Offshoots from your research and development will be produced here."

You can't do that with Ford, because R and D is done there; you pay service to them; royalties go there; offshoots from R and D are produced there.

Why don't we take our money and start to manufacture some of that raw material into a finished commodity for our own use here and for export purposes? One of the key areas is mining equipment. The minister's response is, "You can't have it both ways. You interfere in the free enterprise system.

You guys want to use a big stick." Yet you use all those things yourself when it's convenient. The government pumps money into the free enterprise system and calls it free enterprise; I call that socialism. If you want to be a free enterpriser, for God's sake, that's fine, but don't ask the government for a handout.

Mr. Bolan: Be consistent.

Mr. Martel: Yes, where is there free enterprise when you give dear old Ford $68 million? That's not free enterprise; that's socialism.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You want the union dues from it.

Mr. Martel: I get lots of union dues; oh my God, do we ever. I wish I did get the union dues the minister speaks about.

But we can't have it both ways and we've got to specialize in this country. We've got to look in certain directions where we can go and invest our money soundly where we will get all of the benefits. Ford doesn't give us that. It gives us short-term jobs. That's what 21 reports from the select committee said. We can continue to go down that road and forever we'll continue to have the same type of problems; or we can make a change, we can start to specialize and become very selective in what we produce.

Obviously, we haven't learned in the past 50 years what always happens with foreign investments. For those of us in northern Ontario it continues to be doom and gloom. The minister says no, it's all bright. His own four children have had to leave the area because they couldn't find work. They couldn't find work in northern Ontario. If they don't want to be miners or cut trees they are out. They leave town. They go to Alberta. Is that where they have gone?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They got married and their husbands carried them off.

Mr. Martel: Their husbands couldn't find jobs. Their husbands probably came to northern Ontario in the first place and couldn't stay there because there's nothing beyond extraction. There's nothing for women, and the minister has no plans, unfortunately.

The Toronto-centred region sums it all up. Do you recall that? The Toronto-centred region created a great fanfare in the House here. They called a meeting down at the Ontario Science Centre. John Robarts was there and all the cabinet ministers were there. They unfolded what was called the Toronto-centred region plan. I recall one sentence on page four. It sunk in here. It said: "The Toronto-centred region plan: Northern Ontario will continue to be the source of raw material for the megalopolis between Chicago, Toronto and New York." That's what it was in 1969. That's what it was according to Darcy McKeough in the last provincial election. That's what it continues to be today. Under this government that's what it will continue to be for northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We've been through this on many occasions.

Mr. Martel: Nothing changes.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, a lot of things have changed in northern Ontario, which the member very conveniently forgets or ignores. He doesn't want to mention the things that are happening up there. As I mentioned before, when I first came here I heard exactly that kind of a speech when I was a back-bencher.

Mr. Martel: Where are your children?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In Canada.

Mr. Martel: Where?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Enjoying life.

Mr. Martel: Why did they have to leave northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Because they got married and got carted away by their husbands, if you want to know the truth. If their husbands are from Alberta what can I do? They are living on a farm raising cattle.

Mr. Martel: They couldn't find a job in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They come back on a pretty regular basis.

Mr. Martel: That's all they can do.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They are out there enjoying the good things that the province of Alberta has to offer, not in the oil fields but in the cattle-raising business. The member for Sudbury East lives in a never-never land really. He's got blinkers on. He just won't face up to the realities of society and of the world the way it operates.

Mr. Martel: In Sudbury, 3,500 people are laid off.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He'd like to box himself into a little wee area of Ontario and Canada and say we're going to do this and that and to hell with the rest of the world. That's the attitude, providing we do what we want to do. It doesn't work that way.

Mr. Young: The rest of the world operates the way Mr. Martel said it does.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It doesn't work that way. There are no restrictions. There are no laws to stop anybody from getting into the manufacture of mining equipment in this province, in this country. There is nothing to stop anybody. We have got entrepreneurs in this country who will do everything, and will build everything from a shovel to a locomotive to an articulated bus. The entrepreneurs are there. Now there is something wrong.

Mr. Martel: There isn't a diesel motor produced in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well they are manufactured—they are assembled here.

Mr. Martel: There is not a diesel motor produced in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well maybe not a motor specifically; but there may be something wrong if there isn't, the economics are not there to justify it. There must be something wrong because I have great faith in the free enterprise system, to the extent that if there is a dollar to be exploited, they will manufacture something here and exploit that buck for the benefit of our people. I'm sure they will, but there is an exchange to which to relate.

Mr. Martel: Why have we got a deficit of $1.6 billion in mining equipment?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That deficit will be changed.

Mr. Martel: When?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It started on May 22. There will be a turnaround. If we are around here four of five years from now I will bring to the honourable member's attention the fact things have changed. The item to which you referred, tariffs, may well be changed also, but the free enterprise spirit is alive and well and booming. It brought us as a nation 112 years of good solid type of development and a standard of living that's second to none in the world. It's there.

Mr. Martel: It's about eighth.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Ah no; the socialists say eighth but they always like to say that. They like to compare us with those lower ones—

Mr. Wildman: The Senate of Canada says eighth.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —but I am satisfied we are up in the twos and threes. I certainly will rest my faith in the free enterprise system.

Mr. Young: You close your eyes to the facts.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: When it can be proven economically sound and of course profitable—and there's nothing wrong with the word "profit" as far as I am concerned; if there is a profit to be made in the manufacture of the product then we will see some development in that line. As I said earlier, we don't have an immediate and magic answer for the single-resource communities. I don't think any of you people over there have any answers. If you do, come forward with them.

Mr. Martel: I did. I moved one a few years ago and you let it go.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know, the "tomorrow" fund; that hairy-scary plan, the "tomorrow" fund. Nobody has accepted it.

Mr. Martel: Peter Lougheed has a Heritage Fund worth $4 billion.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If we had the wealth the province of Alberta has I am sure—

Mr. Martel: We had it; we just blew it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is all our wealth. It is the province of Ontario's wealth that's out there in that Heritage Fund, $4.3 billion—

Mr. Young: We had it for 30 or 50 years and you did nothing with it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —for which the province of Ontario has paid.

Mr. Martel: Ayatollah Lougheed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I appreciate constructive criticism, and certainly if the honourable members have something positive we can look at we would be glad to review it.

Mr. Martel: What's wrong with a fund from the taxes on the resource sector and putting it away?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not here to debate the "tomorrow" fund; I just think it's a funny money plan.

Mr. Martel: A funny money plan?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, funny money; some-think like the Social Credit would come out with.

Mr. Martel: What's the difference between a Socred and a Tory?

Mr. Bolan: They have more money out there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Oh there is a little difference, a little financial difference there. It's a kind of a funny money thing.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, the northern communities, the single-resource communities are there. Sure some of them are going through some readjustment periods. I will grant that, but I will say to you now, and I will say it again, that there will always be an Atikokan; there will always be a Geraldton and Kirkland Lake. There will be the Red Lakes; and there will be the Pickle Lakes. Certainly this government will be there to listen to any constructive ideas that may come forward from all sides of the House that can answer this very serious problem.

It applies not only in the province of Ontario. There are problems in the province of Quebec. You go to Saskatchewan and they have their problems in northern Saskatchewan too, and they haven't come up with any answers. They have no answers in Saskatchewan. I have been there on many occasions.

Go to the province of Alberta. What are they paying a gallon in northern Alberta? A dollar and twenty cents a gallon in northern Alberta; the same price we are paying in northern Ontario. They have problems there too that they have not resolved, so don't say all the problems are in northern Ontario.

Mr. Bolan: I would just like to make a few remarks with respect to the one-industry communities which we have in northern Ontario and what I feel is the obligation of the state, the obligation of government, towards these one-industry communities. These, of course, are born out of the fact that in northern Ontario we do have the natural resources out of which these communities are created. Let's take, for example, Elliot Lake. What you have there is a massive investment, not only on the part of free enterprise, but also on the part of the state, on the part of society, in the form of literally—in Elliot Lake—millions of tax dollars which are put into the services.

I speak of the sewage treatment plants, I speak of the sidewalks, I speak of the highways, I speak of the schools, I speak of the municipal buildings—all of those things which grow up into making a community, and to me there is a responsibility on the part of the state to protect that investment, because really you do have an investment in these communities, and that investment is in the form of hard dollars and cents which come from the taxpayer and have gone in to put in the services.

Unless you have some kind of plan, looking 25 or 30 years down the line, or whatever the life expectancy is of that particular community, then I think that you really are not doing service to your investment and that you are not protecting your investment. As the state grows, as the province develops, there is an obligation on the government to see to it that when there comes a time for relocation of an industry, or when there comes a time for the creation of a new industry in the province, or if an investor or a manufacturer comes in and says: "We have a plan here which is going to require a certain size of community, a certain number of people, which can do it as required," then I think there is an obligation on the part of the province to see to it that these are directed towards these one-industry communities.

As I say, if you are going to spend millions of dollars in these areas without having some kind of ongoing contingency plan to come to these communities and to make room for the infusion of labour, for the infusion of other capital, then you really are not hedging your bet, and really your bet is people.

Whether you know this or not, Mr. Minister, there has been a continual drain of our young people from northern Ontario, and I don't blame them, because there is not much going for them in northern Ontario. You cite your own family as an example. My two oldest ones are no longer in northern Ontario; there is nothing there for them. As the member for Sudbury East says, unless you are a miner, or you cut trees, or you are a professional, there really is not that much to attract or to keep a young person in northern Ontario, and once we have lost our youth we have lost the battle.

While I am on that, I might also say of the quotation made by the member for Sudbury East about northern Ontario being the supplier of the area from Chicago, that is what is called the hinterland theory. That is a well-espoused theory which I think has probably been practised better in Ontario than in any other region. It is a theory which is accepted by many governments. The theory is that the area up here, the hinterland, is the resource pool from which everything is drawn to feed the large growth areas at the bottom.

I remember speaking about this to an economist last year, a chap from Sudbury. I said, "Surely there is something which can be done to get away from this hinterland theory. Certainly there is something which can be done by governments to try to do something for these areas which are more or less designated as hinterland." In his opinion the horse was out of the barn. There was nothing which could be done unless steps were taken immediately. Even then we are looking at 15 or 20 years down the line.

It is very discouraging. I am sure the minister must find this discouraging himself. I have said this before, I am going to say it again—I think everybody in the House has said it at one time or another over the past two years. It is very discouraging to hear a minister of the crown, a former Treasurer, say for all intents and purposes he was not interested in the growth and development of secondary industry in northern Ontario. Even the minister must find that very disturbing. I know I find it very disturbing because it seems to be a reaffirmation of the hinterland theory.

If that is going to be the policy and that is going to be followed, then on these very expensive projects, these expensive communities into which we have put millions of dollars, we simply have to accept the ghost-town theory, which to me is a natural flow from the hinterland theory. That is really the type of thing that has been going on, as the minister knows himself, in this province.

I do not think anybody purposely sits down and designs a ghost town. I think that some place down the line they expect a miracle will happen.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Show me a ghost town in northern Ontario.

Mr. Bolan: Cobalt.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's not a ghost town. Come on!

Mr. Bolan: Yes, Cobalt is. I come from Cobalt and I can tell the minister right now—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Tell the people of Cobalt that.

Mr. Bolan: They know it too. I can tell the minister right now that one can see what happened there and what happened in many of the other mining communities in northern Ontario.

What concerns me more than anything else, even today, is the attitude which the minister seems to be taking towards the one-industry towns. The minister thinks Conference 2001 is the answer to everything. I certainly haven't seen anything positive or anything really constructive come from that. I really think it is incumbent upon our government to see to it that proper measures are taken to induce other industries to open in these one-industry towns.

I am not going to be repetitive and say everything which the member for Sudbury East said about the mining industry or about mining equipment but it is an example of what can be done if the need is identified. He mentioned a company in North Bay, Jarvis Clark, as a typical example of two young men getting together and saying, "We feel there is a need for a particular kind of mining equipment." As the member knows, this really revolutionized extraction in mines—the scoop tram and the jumbos and other equipment which flowed from that.

The fact remains that was a good example of free enterprise identifying a market. They did it, incidentally, without one cent of government money. They have gone through some expansionary programs now which have required funding from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, but the initial program was strictly on their own.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Because the investment climate was there.

Mr. Bolan: Yes. But with the world market being what it is today, in areas such as mining equipment, logging equipment and pulp and paper equipment, there is no reason why we can't get on the bandwagon. There is no reason we can't start doing those things today that are going to give us some benefits, not three or five years from now, but 10 or 15 years from now. That's how we are going to protect our one-industry towns. We have to give them something other than what they have now; otherwise, we are going to see their decline.

Going back to what I said earlier, we are also going to see a decline in the population. The population in northern Ontario has been going down. The population of North Bay is down something like 2,000 over the past while. I was reading the ministry's directory of organized and unorganized communities in northern Ontario. It shows the population of North Bay at about 47,000, whereas the signs on the approaches to the city still have the old census figure of 50,000. That is a worrisome thing, because that area is not a one-industry town. If there is any area in northern Ontario that is diversified, it is North Bay. I am sure the minister is aware of that. When we look at all the various industries there, it is really quite a tribute in that sense to northern Ontario. It is an example of what can be done. But, in spite of this, we still have this frightening prospect of a dwindling population.

I am not saying there are any magical solutions to this problem. I have to agree with the minister when he says that it is a very difficult problem, without any quick cure. But what a government should do is to take not just a short-term approach, but a long-term approach. In that way, while there still is health in many of these communities, we can start looking at other areas and at other industries which would blend in with whatever a particular community is developing. I would hope that 20 or 30 years from now we would be able to say that the population was going up; there was more stability. Isn't that what it really is all about: trying to bring into northern Ontario a more equitable system?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the member's comments. I know his concern for single-resource communities is sincere. It is one that we all share, and I think we are all trying to find solutions.

I can't help but think of the government's desire to do certain things for certain communities in northern Ontario. We stand up in this Legislature on many occasions and say we want a broader economic base for many of these communities; we want more job opportunities in more of these communities; the north needs this type of recognition and all kinds of opportunities.

But what happens when the government does do something? For instance, the Hydro plant at Atikokan is a typical example; that is a $500-million development, and the opposition came from the community. The city of Thunder Bay opposed it, much to my surprise and shock. I almost fell off my chair when I heard that the council of Thunder Bay had opposed the development of that Hydro plant which would provide 250 to 300 jobs on an ongoing basis.

In Red Lake, a single-industry community, we had the Reed Paper proposal for a $400-million pulp and paper development in the Ear Falls-Red Lake area that those 6,000 people had been waiting for for 20 years; they had been promised it for 20 years. The renewable resources are there. We had a proposal for the government to look at. It was just a proposal, just a memorandum of understanding, that the government would look at. What did the socialists do?

Mr. Wildman: There was a question about whether or not they were renewable.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They didn't say let's have a look at it. That's all the government wanted to do, to see if it would support an industry of that size. The Liberal Party wasn't that far behind the socialists, believe me. They were waffling because there were some political marks to make. The government had the courage to move ahead and work out a memorandum of understanding to look at 19,000 square miles in the hope that there were sufficient renewable resources. If there weren't there would be a paring back on that proposal, that was the clear understanding.

All the environmental concerns would be looked after. All the economic concerns would be on the table to look at; everybody would have an opportunity. But the political pressure that came from this Legislature against that proposal, as you all recall, was horrendous.

Minaki is a typical example. There are 200 or 300 people there living off one industry, tourism. Minaki Lodge is a fantastic development. The original development was proceeded with by the CNR back in 1926. It was going on for years. It was something of a landmark in northwestern Ontario. The government became involved, I suppose you might say through the back door, not through the front door, because we had an NODC loan that we had to foreclose on. Rather than lose that and see the lodge go down the drain and lose the economic impetus that would be gained from the further development and expansion of that lodge, the government stepped in. The reaction we got from members of this Legislature was that it's a white elephant. They were not worried about the 250 jobs it will have on a year-round basis.

Mr. Wildman: Have you got an agreement yet?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They said it's wrong for northern Ontario. Now they sit there and tell me we should have a diversified economy.

Mr. Wildman: You haven't got an agreement yet.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have a diversified economy, and we want more industry. My God, the government is trying. We're coming forward with proposals. I would love you to get on the bandwagon and say let's get on with the job; let's support this proposal. It would create jobs; it would use the resources of northern Ontario for the benefit of northerners. But we didn't get that reaction.

Do you remember Maple Mountain? Do you remember how the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) pleaded with this Legislature to get on with the Maple Mountain and how we got laughed out because it was a pie in the sky? He talked about an Ontario Place in the north. You shot down that one. Do you remember King Mountain?

Mr. Wildman: I was going to ask you about that one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: King Mountain was another one. I hope you're not against King Mountain.

Mr. Wildman: I've never been there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Great, I love to hear that, that's the kind of enthusiasm I love. It's needed up there. I think with those kinds of words we can get on with the job of doing things for northern Ontario.

I remember Old Fort William; how the Globe and Mail took after us about Old Fort William and how the public accounts committee reviewed every invoice—which is right; I'm not saying it's wrong, I think they should. All those government things should be looked at very carefully. But consider the hoops we have to go through, instead of having members opposite jumping on the bandwagon to say this is a good thing for northern Ontario as it will provide jobs and it will use the resources we have. I don't think we can go out tomorrow and get the Ford Motor Company to establish up in Red Lake, much as I'd like to. But there are other things we can do up there by using the natural resources that are there. That's what we're proposing to do.

When we come forward with these suggestions, don't pooh-pooh the idea.

Mr. Wildman: What about fabricating those resources?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Don't look for political marks up north. Get on the bandwagon and say this is a positive thing. There are jobs up there and there are people up there. Tell them, don't tell me down here and play to the southern Ontario media. Go up there and tell them and see what they say.

You know what happened at Minaki. You know what happened to the Reed Paper proposal. The reaction up there was totally different from what it was down here. Things are different there.

I plead with the members from northern Ontario, when we do come forward with positive suggestions that will improve the economic life and improve the economic base of these communities to join with us. Join with us and say that this is something that makes sense. Let's get on with the job of improving northern Ontario; together we can do it.

Mr. Wildman: I want to respond to a couple of things the minister has just said. First, it seems to me that he misses the point that was being made by my colleague from Sudbury East that as long as we just—and I underline the word "just"—depend on the extraction and exportation of our natural resources, we're also exporting jobs. Once those resources, if they are non-renewable, run out or if they are renewable resources which we don't take care to renew at an adequate rate, once they run out, then there are no more jobs.

The minister and his colleague, the Minister of Education, asked if there were any ghost towns in northern Ontario. I can give you some examples.

Two years ago I was invited to go to Goudreau. I don't know whether the minister has ever heard of Goudreau. He probably hasn't because it's a ghost town.

Goudreau is about 13 miles north of Hawk Junction on the ACR line in my riding. There are six people living in Goudreau now and they are the ACR section gang. But Goudreau, in 1910, had 3,000 people.

The reason I was invited to go there was because there are a number of abandoned iron ore pits, old mining operations, that are now filled up with water. They appeared to be leaching out into the Hawk river system and were poisoning the fish. I was asked to go in by the head of the section gang, a Mr. Smedts, who lives there and has lived there for 20 some years. I went in.

The only way you can get into Goudreau is by train from Hawk. One goes up one way one day and back the next. I went in and stayed overnight at the Smedts' place. There is an old hotel there too—well, it's burned down now but there used to be a hotel there—and there are about four or five houses and a station. That's it.

When we went to go to look at the pits we got into Mr. Smedts' old truck; a very large four-wheel-drive truck. He has a great big bumper on the front of it. The purpose of the bumper, apparently, is so that he can drive through the bush without having to avoid the trees, but we took off and we drove down what was apparently, at one time, a street. It was covered with small trees—we knocked down a number of them, I'm afraid. We drove through what had been a town. There were foundations all over the place. There had been 3,000 people there prior to the First World War.

You ask me where there are ghost towns? Goudreau is an example of what happens when a resource runs out and when there is no forward planning as to what is going to be done to ensure that those people have a viable choice, other than just leaving, and leaving everything behind, which is what happened there.

Today that doesn't happen in the same way because we have a number of social programs that have replaced that. We have things like unemployment insurance. We have welfare, and so on, that help tide people over. In those days, if you didn't leave immediately you starved unless you could get by by hunting. It may not be as blatant today, but the same kinds of things happen.

I think, too, of other communities in my riding. I think of Blind River, for instance. Blind River is by no means a ghost town. It's a vibrant community. It's dependent on tourism and government ministries. It has a large number of people now commuting to Elliot Lake to work in the mines there. But at one time it was one of the largest lumber operations in North America. What happened? That resource, the white pine, was decimated. It was shipped out—mostly to the Boston area at that time. Then, of course, they had the Mississagi fire.

Nothing remains of that lumber operation. We have a small veneer operation going there, but its future is doubtful, according to the Ministry of Natural Resources, in terms of more than seven years. That again is the kind of example we can point to.

As a matter of fact, there are the Dubreuil brothers—I know the minister knows the Dubreuils. They are a very hardworking group of men who have a lumber operation and sawmill operation in northern Ontario—chips and so on. But their history is an example of the vagabond approach that in the past has been the history of northern Ontario, moving from one area to another as needed, and taking with them a large number of people who have stayed with them for a long period of time. Now they've established a community which is called Dubreuilville, which is a more permanent community and which they are trying to make permanent, and which is developing into a municipality. In the past, that hasn't been the case. They used to be at Magpie. They went to Magpie first and then they shifted.

You could even look at a community in my riding which might be considered the most prosperous of all the communities in my riding—I'm not including Sault Ste. Marie, of course, because that isn't in my riding, although a large number of people in the environs of that community live in my riding and commute back and forth. But if you look at my riding itself the most prosperous community is probably Wawa. It's the largest community. In terms of southern Ontario, it's not a very big community. It only has 5,000 people.

When you look at Wawa, it's really just a resource-based community. The main reason, the real reason, for Wawa is the iron ore. Algoma Ore first started out and had pits at Goudreau at one time, which they developed, and then they had the Helen Mine. What happens to Wawa when the iron ore is finished? They used to have a gold mine up there. It's gone. It's not in operation.

They also have tourism in Wawa, a large amount of tourism, largely because of the Trans-Canada Highway, but it's a resource-based industry as well. The minister knows the problems we are facing in northeastern Ontario right now with the lower numbers of fish being caught and the problems of game management as more and more areas become more readily accessible. What happens to the jobs in tourism, unless we are able to adapt tourism in some way so that it isn't so dependent on wild life in northern Ontario?

Even a very vibrant and prosperous community like Wawa is really facing hard times in the future unless there are further developments. When you look at it in terms of tourism and when you look at the problem of acid rain, unless the federal government and the American government as well as the provincial government get involved in solving that problem, we are going to have even more serious problems for tourism in northern Ontario.

Mr. Young: If the gas prices go up, you'll have still more problems.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, gas prices have already lowered the number of tourists in our area in the past.

Look at another community in my riding, which I have mentioned twice already in these estimates and I haven't had an answer from the minister yet about it, and that is Missanabie. Missanabie is a very old community. It was established first by the Hudson's Bay Company. It was a trading area. Then the Canadian Pacific Railway went through there and established a community there, and it was a railway community. Then they got into lumbering, and now there is tourism as well.

If that lumber mill becomes a less viable operation, is sold or is burned down, what happens to it? I would be interested to know what this ministry is doing about Missanabie, and I have asked that before during these estimates. Are the new owners, Lafreniere from Chapleau, going to re-establish a mill in Missanabie, or are they going to build in Chapleau, as a Ministry of Industry and Tourism official indicated to one of my assistants last week? If that happens, what happens to Missanabie? Or, is it important to this government for that community and those residents to continue there?

The minister really misses the whole point. The point is that we are not opposed to resource development in northern Ontario, but we want coupled with it the processing of those resources and the fabrication, because that is where the jobs are. There are more jobs in manufacturing than there are in resource extraction. The Americans understand it, the Europeans understand it and the Japanese understand it. The Japanese have one of the best economies in the world and they don't have any resources, because they import our resources and they import resources from the third world.

Our whole approach to development in northern Ontario and Ontario in general, and Canada for that matter, has tended to be the development that is characteristic of the third world. We need capital and we want a higher standard of living, so what do we do? We take the short route to it by exporting our resources and exporting along with that all the manufacturing jobs that result from them.

Some other countries haven't taken that route, and they have paid the price, I'll admit. They have a lower standard of living. Look at Mexico; Mexico now faces the possibility of improving its situation and improving its standard of living because of the oil finds, but it's been a long time in developing. I'll admit that, but I don't see any will on the part of this government or of the government in Ottawa, of whatever political stripe, to try to turn that situation around.

The minister asked me if there were any ghost towns in northern Ontario. There are. There are other communities which are political ghost towns. Nowadays we don't have ghost towns where everything becomes vacant. What happens is, we end up with people on welfare; we end up with people surviving from hand to mouth on seasonal jobs. Frankly, I think that's another kind of ghost town. What we need is viable industry.

The minister mentions things like Minaki. Minaki is just another resource industry, as the minister himself says. He indicates that the opposition was responsible in some way for the problems of Minaki. The fact is that the government got involved because the entrepreneur who was involved was in trouble. The government itself is having trouble right now—and has had in unloading Minaki. To say that when we criticize the government for investing the amount of money they did there, in terms of asking what viable future there is for Minaki, ignores that.

As a matter of fact, I have a letter from the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), dated March 21. He starts off by saying: "The negotiations between the board of directors of Minaki Lodge and the potential private-sector operators are confidential." But he goes on to say: "The board informs me they are presently negotiating three agreements with the private sector. They include technical services, management and reservation referrals.

"No doubt you have read of Fred Boyer's appointment as president and chief operating executive of the company. I think that's an indication of how close we believe we are to final agreements." For more than a year the minister has been giving me that kind of reply when I try to find out what's happening with Minaki.

Is the government close to any kind of an agreement? Is it a viable operation? If the minister can show it's a viable operation, he won't run into the kind of criticism he has been complaining about. But to pour money in without any assurance that there's going to be a return on that, even in terms of on-going jobs, is not an adequate response from this government.

I wonder also, when the minister mentions Maple Mountain and King Mountain in the same breath, whether he thinks they are equivalent operations and proposals.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They sound the same.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, they sound the same. That's another interesting point, about King Mountain. Last fall we had a statement saying that we would have some kind of indication in the near future about King Mountain. Then in January, I asked what was happening and was told I'd hear in the near future. We haven't had any announcement yet. Is that a viable operation? Is it going to go ahead? How does it relate to the other proposals in the area, by the private sector? Just north of that, there's a major proposal by a consortium involving both Canadian and foreign investors. How is it related? What is the role of the ministry in that?

We've got to get serious here. It's nice to trade rhetoric back and forth, but we have major problems if we remain solely dependent upon resource industries, whether it be extraction through mining or lumbering or, for that matter, just tourism. They are all resource-based and eventually, unless we change the patterns we are facing now, we're not going to have the kinds of resources we have in northern Ontario. Unless we replace them with something, we're going to have major problems. That's what we're saying over here, and I'm looking for some kind of positive response from the government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I don't know if I can add anything further to what I have already said. Sure, it's great to have secondary manufacturing. The Missanabies, the Savant Lakes, the Minakis; I think it is fair to say will never see secondary manufacturing. Hopefully, the Sudburys, Timmins', Sault Ste. Maries, North Bays, Thunder Bays, Kenoras and the Drydens will. I think that's where any secondary manufacturing is going to be. We certainly can't stand in our places, any one of us, and say we are going to save all the Missanabies or the Hudsons or the Savant Lakes or the Armstrongs—these types of places.

My old home town of Hudson is a typical example. I suppose the community shouldn't even exist. It was established back in 1929 during the gold rush days. That's when my father came to Red Lake. He moved down to Hudson and went into business for himself. On a part-time basis he set up a general store. The other part-time job was a steel helmet diver. That's what brought him to that country, working on the Hydro dams doing underwater work. He also worked in Montreal harbour on ocean-going vessels. Later he went into business on his own and contracted out. They were bringing out the iron ore concentrates by tractor train and by scow, and the gold bricks by aeroplane at that time. Invariably there were losses that would occur and he would go down and salvage them.

He did that for years. He did it very well. In fact we never felt the depression back in Hudson. I remember the depression and we never felt it, because my father was doing so well during the gold rush days.

Hudson was built up as a transportation community because we were the last jumping-off place on steel to the Red Lake area. The freight would come into Hudson on the railway to be transported north to Pickle Lake and to Red Lake by tractor train, by barge and by aircraft. In fact in 1939, you will be interested to know there was more air freight moved out of Hudson going to those two mining communities than there was from the international airport in Chicago.

But the road came. They built a road into Red Lake, they built a road into Pickle Lake. That should have been the end of Hudson. Eight hundred people should have packed their bags and moved on. They had been there something like 20 or 25 years then. The transportation industry had gone, the docks were all left but all the barges were moved out. The office spaces on the waterfront were moved. The big cranes were pulled down. It was a sad sight.

But the point I am trying to make is the guts and the courage of the local people were still there. Four of them banded together and said: "Hudson is not going to die. We are going to make sure of that." The four of them pooled their resources, came down here and met with the government and said: "Look, we are prepared to go into the saw-mill business. We need some timber resources." My father was one of those men who had pooled resources as a consortium. The government gave them a timber limit and they went back to Hudson and established a mill. The mill is still operating today and there are 350 people working there on a year-round basis and they want to expand.

It's that kind of initiative, that kind of entrepreneurship, that we have in northern Ontario. Sure it's using those resources. I grant it, but it's still providing those jobs and those jobs are good for another 30 or 40 years from the resources we have in that area. Hudson should have been gone. It should have been wiped off the map right after the Second World War.

I don't have the answers for every community in northern Ontario. We are not going to relax our efforts one bit in trying to encourage development and secondary manufacturing in that area. The development and employment project, the one the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is chairing along with the Minister of Industry and Tourism, is directed specifically at encouraging new manufacturing and job opportunities across this province. I am confident we will see some action in northern Ontario with regard to that.

But there are limitations, we know, because of our great distances and our small populations. Some 90 per cent of the land mass is north of the French River but only 10 per cent of the people, 900,000 people. What's the population of London, Ontario? It has got to be close to a million. The population of Kitchener and London is equivalent to the whole of northern Ontario.

The odds are stacked against us as northerners. It's true we have the resources, but we have a couple of problems with it. One of them is the lack of population and the other is the great distances. We have to accept that and meet that challenge, knowing those problems are before us. So while I welcome the member's input, I certainly will not let it go to gather dust in the Hansard papers; I will read it and my staff will read it, because it does give us food for thought.

Mr. Wildman: In regard to what we have been discussing, can the minister indicate what is happening with the proposal by the chambers of commerce of northwestern Ontario? In this proposal, made to the provincial cabinet in December I believe, for the formation of a study group for the development of an industrial strategy for that area, they were looking for $112,000 for a two-year program. I understand, in the words of Mr. Jobbitt, one of their spokesmen who is quoted in the article I am reading here, that:

"The north has been inundated with consultants being flown into our area from centres other than northwestern Ontario, and while we recognize the expertise of consultants must be utilized from time to time, we feel that one must live in the environment to understand its needs and potential and to properly appreciate it."

I understand that at that time the Premier (Mr. Davis) was unable to commit himself that the government would fund such a study. The Minister of Northern Affairs indicated he would look at it and discuss it with his cabinet colleagues, in the hope that something could come early in the spring.

I understand that the chambers of commerce were concerned not only with encouraging new investment but retaining the existing businesses that are already in operation there. I wonder if the minister could indicate what is happening with that.

At one point I think he said he was going to give us some indication of what success he could point to in terms of the Manitoulin economic development committee. In relation to that, I would be interested in an update on what Dr. Lupton, of the ministry staff in Sudbury, has been able to come up with in terms of the North Shore Development Association and any proposal by the ministry to assist the communities in those areas in trying to bring about an industrial strategy to produce some kind of secondary industry and service industries for those areas.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I would be glad to report on the progress we are making with regard to input from northwestern Ontario.

If I could just go back a few steps and relate to the members the issue we are discussing. It refers to the establishment some time ago of the development councils, and I think there were eight or nine across northern Ontario. It is fair to say the ones in northwestern and northeastern Ontario were the most active, the most aggressive and the most productive right across the province in providing information and in being a watchdog, a group that would provide input to the planning process. But other areas of the province were not as efficient, as effective or as productive, so the Treasurer of the day felt very strongly that they had outlived their usefulness and he abandoned them completely.

In the period that followed the new Treasurer, who had responsibility for planning, established what we call the municipal advisory committees the MACs. We have one in the northeast and one in the northwest. He felt very strongly at that time, and I think it is fair to say that I shared his view, that if we are going to get a group involved in the strategic industrial planning for a specific region and getting some very valuable, constructive and responsible input, it should come from the elected representatives of the area rather than from the various pressure groups, lobbyists if you will, which had a variety of interests.

He felt a municipal politician, who had to go back to his electorate every two years, should interface with the politicians here at Queen's Park. I think the idea has some merit, there is no question. It still has merit. In my meetings with the municipal advisory committees there has been a rapport, a sharing of the ideas. They do not burden the government with wild-eyed plans and proposals, knowing full well they as politicians will have to share some of that responsibility. So it has some benefits in that regard.

I think it is fair to say that both municipal advisory committees are working very effectively right now in the northeast and northwest. In the northeast we have already established the location of the executive director, who will be in Sault Ste. Marie adjacent to the office of the assistant deputy minister, Herb Aiken. I think the office space has been allocated and the furniture has been purchased. The advisory committee executive is now working on the selection of an executive director. It will be in essence their executive director; he will be their man, working very closely with the Ministry of Northern Affairs because that is the interface as it was spelled out by the government.

In the northwest we have a similar situation taking place. The MAC approach has come a long way in the last three or four years. There was that parochial problem where Thunder Bay seemed to overshadow all the other little communities with regard to their input and attitudes, but that has changed. I think the whole MAC arrangement now is looking at the needs of the region, be it social or economic or transportation or whatever. They are looking at the overall region; which of course makes it much easier to deal with. So we have that in place and in step and moving ahead. They will have an office established in northwestern Ontario.

What we see on the other hand is the remnants of the old Northwest Ontario Development Council, which was headed up by that very able gentleman, the late Lackey Phillips. He had done a tremendous job but he reported principally to a mix of people, some in the municipal field, some in the chamber of commerce group. I don't think there were any labour people or native people involved; I don't think the unorganized communities were involved. Principally it was the chambers of commerce—the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce—and the municipal organizations.

Since the establishment of MAC I think it is fair to say those other groups—the chambers of commerce, the labour unions, the native people and the unorganized communities association—have felt outside the input process. They want to provide input, as most northerners do. They have come forward and asked, "Is there some way we can give some input, that we can give our expertise and our ideas?" They claim—and I am not here to argue or debate it—that municipal politicians have certain biases with regard to their job, to their outlook; and maybe they do not have the expertise that a member of the chamber of commerce or a member of a labour union would have, or a member of the native community or a member of the unorganized communities would have; that expertise or that input or that attitude would not be there unless it came through from the other direction.

They have asked us, and they have asked the Premier, if there is some way they could work with the MAC, outside of the MAC in some vehicle through which they could be formally recognized. We do not have an answer. I went to the northern Ontario municipal association and laid it right on their doorstep. I said: "We have to hear those people. There are groups out there that want an input. They have some valuable contribution to make, in a number of different fields. I feel obligated to find a way to get that input and to get that co-operation."

I have asked them to sit down and share with me some ideas. Just recently I have written to the municipal advisory committee suggesting the same thing: that they look at a number of different ways in which we can get the input from these particular groups. Is it a subcommittee of the MAC? Is it part of the MAC organization? I don't think we should have three or four different groups feeding input to the government. I think it is much easier, if one is doing planning and this type of work, to have it come through one specific body.

The issue is before them now. We will be having some discussions with them. I have asked MAC to get back to me by late June with some suggestions of how they feel we could implement the planning and get the support and input from these various groups.

That is well in hand and moving ahead. I don't know what will come out of those discussions and those ideas, but I can assure you that we are anxiously trying to find a solution.

You asked about the Manitoulin Economic Development Association. You will recall we did assist in setting up an association that consisted of nine municipalities. We contributed something like $40,000 a year and the local municipalities would match this from municipal taxation. To date they have hired a manager and a secretary. They have opened an office and a brochure on the association has been developed and is now being distributed.

From the work of the association, seven new enterprises have been established in the area, creating 11 new jobs. Discussions are presently under way with four new prospects with an employment potential of eight additional jobs. A very successful trade fair was held in Little Current on May 11 of this year. It received wide acclaim. So they are in place.

This is another example of how we could help with a self-help agency. Dr. Lupton of our staff was very much involved with in working closely with this group, to get their input, their ideas, and then of course to give them that seed money to get off and running.

There are no better salesmen than the local people themselves, if they are given the support, resources and expertise they need to go to the outside world and create the attitude and atmosphere they require to improve their own small industries and, of course, to create jobs. I am particularly pleased with their success to date.

Item 2 agreed to.

Vote 701 agreed to.

Mr. Bolan: I'm glad to see that we have finally moved off vote 701. I am not being critical, however; this merely emphasizes the problems which exist in northern Ontario when we have to spend close to eight hours just dealing with that one particular item. As I say, I am not being critical. In fact, perhaps we should spend more hours on these estimates.

I notice that when we went through the last estimates, 11½ hours was allocated, and we are now up to 13 hours. It's just like the budget, onwards and upwards. We're shooting for 15 hours the next time.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Revise my budget upwards?

Mr. Bolan: I would hope that the budget will increase in the same percentage as does the number of hours required to do the estimates.

I just have one matter to raise on this item. It has to do with the programs of the government which the people of northern Ontario are to be made aware of. I'm talking about the services of the Northern Affairs officers.

The function of the Northern Affairs officers as set out in the estimates is to make residents of northern Ontario aware of the programs, services and facilities available to them from the government. There is at least one area here which causes me concern. It is one of the programs introduced by the government which I feel has been of tremendous benefit to the people of Ontario, particularly those in northern Ontario, and that is the OHRP program, the Ontario Home Renewal Plan. There is only one thing wrong with it, there is not enough money for it. If there ever was a program designed to increase and improve the housing stock, this certainly is the one.

When you look at all the spinoff effects this particular program has, first of all it improves the home, which means that the assessed value of the home goes up, which means that the taxes will go up correspondingly, and rightfully they should. It means the small businessman gets into the act, because he's one of the contractors who will go out to replace the roof or put in a new septic tank or drill a new well. The benefits are just astounding.

My concern is just what role does the northern affairs officer play in dealing with the OHRP programs. I do know that if somebody comes to him an application is made out in his office. I'm talking about the groups in unorganized townships. The application is made in his office and he'll make a search of the title at the registry office or he'll have that done, which is all fine indeed. But specifically, what attempts does the northern affairs officer make to go out and to inform the public in unorganized townships and communities of the program?

I know in my area we had one northern affairs officer, who no longer is with us, Mr. Cazabon, an excellent officer. He did an awful lot of OHRP work. He would go right out and knock on their doors and say: "This program is available. Are you interested?" He really went out and sold the plan. However, I understand this is not the case with all of them, and I can understand that too. They have other things to do.

I'd like to know if you have any specific instructions to your northern affairs officers as to what they are to do to inform the public of the OHRP program, other than, of course, to have the pamphlets made available in the office.

In my particular area, what I did is I sent a letter to all of the citizens who live in the unorganized townships to inform them of the program and to inform them where they could get more information, either through my constituency office or the Northern Affairs office in North Bay or in Sturgeon Falls.

If you don't have any particular instructions to your northern affairs officers, I would ask that you consider that, because the benefits of it are just fantastic.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I certainly appreciate the member's observations on the fine job our northern affairs officers are doing, not only with the OHRP program but all the government programs they deal with.

The OHRP program, as you are well aware, is administered by the Ministry of Housing, and through the excellent cooperation we get from the ministry, having our northern affairs officers be the front line people in the field has worked out exceptionally well—there's just no question—right across the north. I don't think there's a member in northern Ontario that hasn't written me about the OHRP program and the excellent results he or she has received from this program and from our northern affairs officers in handling this particular program.

They're given a blanket instruction to promote government programs. As you know, many of them have their own little columns in the newspapers, many of them have spot radio shows, some even go as far as to have television programs where they talk about Ontario government programs and let the general public know how to go about it, how they can help them in a number of different ways. They've also been instructed, where possible, to speak to various groups, large or small, in the development of those programs.

Also, I think it's fair to say in the rural areas—and I followed it in my own area, it was very, very effective—it is word of mouth. We had a couple of programs in my community; and believe me when Ron Willis, the northern affairs officer, came in to meet with the individuals—and they were senior citizens—to discuss with them a new roof, an addition to their house for a bathroom—the very basic needs, something that was really needed; and then to roll out the repayment program, which was very minimal: that went through the town like wildfire, so Ron Willis was pretty busy for a long period.

I guess one of the weaknesses of the program is the amount of money we're allowed. I would like to see it increased. I think you would too. I am constantly pressing my colleague, the Minister of Housing, for his efforts in improving that overall program. It has such benefits, as you correctly pointed out, to the areas of northern Ontario that have many small, frame houses. That $1,000 or $2,000 can do a tremendous amount of improvements to them. We see it every day and I just hope it continues because we're going to be in there promoting it and doing everything we can to improve the quality of life.

Mr. Wildman: To supplement that, I certainly add my feelings about the OHRP program to those of my colleague. I think this is one program that has the support of just about every member of the House. It's gained a great deal of praise.

I'd be interested in finding out if you have any specific training seminars or workshops worked up for the northern affairs officers themselves with other ministries, like the Ministry of Housing in relation to OHRP or, say, the Ministry of the Environment in relation to their program on the rural, privately-owned septic tanks and wells, that kind of thing.

There have been a lot of very good things done in my area, and in others in the unorganized communities under OHRP. There have been a few administrative problems, however, and I can understand that occurring with one person basically doing a lot of different projects in different areas. I wonder if you have any ongoing training programs for northern affairs officers on those two programs. Also, I would be interested in relation to the one thing you said about the radio shows and TV shows, if you could give me some ideas of who could go on those shows.

I've had a couple of occasions where, just by coincidence I'm sure, I have made one or two public statements that might be a little critical of government policy where, within a few days or a week or so, the northern affairs show in Sault Ste. Marie has dealt with the very same topic and has not always agreed with me about what I've said. I just wonder if there is any opportunity for rebuttal to some of the things that are said on the Northern Affairs programs, though, in terms of advertising government programs I think they're very worthwhile shows.

Those are my only two questions on this vote. Could you give me some idea of what ongoing upgrading and training you're doing for your officers in those various programs and also if you could give me some comments about how the shows operate?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I should just relate to the member the selectivity that we go through in picking a northern affairs officer first. I think it's fair to say that we have a long list of people waiting to become northern affairs officers. Over the years they have built themselves up into a pretty respectable group. Sure, the salary is good. They are very broad and general in their approach. They're dealing with human issues, doing things for people, and we select those people for their knowledge of the way government operates. They may have been former civil servants who have a background of a ministry or a number of ministries, so they come to us with some knowledge of how the system operates.

We build on that with regular training seminars, because it is important to keep up with the various changes that take place with regard to the programs that they promote and they administer. I'm told here that we have them on a very regular basis. In fact the next one is on the 30th of this month; a two-day one in the northeast. What they do is get other government ministries to send up their people to talk to our northern affairs officers. Even the Ombudsman met with the northern affairs officers to explain his role. In fact, he was so impressed he thought our northern affairs officers were mini-ombudsmen.

We just don't relay the programs ourselves. The ministries that are responsible for those programs actually go up and meet with the northern affairs officers and exchange views with them. It's an ongoing thing with all the ministries we deal with, Labour, Environment, Natural Resources, not so much Natural Resources because they have so many people in the field, but Housing, Intergovernmental Affairs and so on.

Over a few years those people have become very versatile and very broad in their approach, very broad in their thinking, and of course in the administration of provincial programs. We have an excellent group, something like 29, right across northern Ontario, serving the public exceptionally well; not only those 29 but the satellite people working for them. I want to take this opportunity to publicly thank those people who are working in the smaller communities on a satellite basis with no pay, no compensation. It's just a referral system. People know the northern affairs officer is coming to a certain town or a certain community and they leave their names with the satellite officer who, in turn, passes it over to the northern affairs officer who makes that call. It's a very effective network of service and one that cannot go unrecognized, because they make a tremendous contribution to their fellow man. I want to thank them publicly for it.

The member asked one question at the end. What was it? I didn't get it?

Mr. Wildman: I asked about the television programs. If the minister would like a further explanation, I will give him one example. It's not a major thing I'm raising here, just a matter of interest.

At the time the provincial parks camp fees were increased, I indicated I didn't agree with that and I pointed out, when the report came out a year later, that the percentage of people visiting the camps was down. I think it was about 11 per cent last year, and in our area it was higher, about 15 to 18 per cent. Not long after I made that statement and pointed to that figure, which the Minister of Natural Resources had supplied me with, there was a program on in the Sault, a Ministry of Northern Affairs show, and they had a long discussion about whether the increase in the provincial parks fees had affected the numbers of visitors to the parks in our area. They didn't agree with my position. I have nothing against them for not agreeing with what I said, but I am just interested to know whether I could have gone on the show and made my position clear to the interviewer as well.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I suppose our northern affairs officers are very well informed and we always like to keep the record straight, so to speak. No, I can't answer that specific question, but I guess we have made it an unwritten rule, there is nothing written, to keep away from politicians on those shows. I don't think you have seen the minister on those shows.

Mr. Wildman: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't think it's the place for politicians. We have a forum. There's nothing better than the Ontario Legislature as a place to spout off. Of course we also have the route of news releases if we want to issue them ourselves. I'm sure the radio stations carry our news releases, as do TV shows and so on. I think we should leave to the northern affairs officers the responsibility of outlining to the public just what those programs are and how they can help everybody in general, no matter if they are NDP, Liberal or Conservative. They'll help them all. There is no discrimination, no bias.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, project development and implementation:

Mr. Bolan: Just one small point on this: I suppose it's as good a place as any to bring this up. The minister says one of the functions of his ministry is to work in concert with municipalities and other ministries in developing plans to improve northern community conditions and to respond to those in need. I just have one question on this and it has to do with the educational channel, TV Ontario.

In northern Ontario the only way you can get this channel is if you have cable television. I think we all know the benefits of TV Ontario.

I am wondering if this ministry has any input with respect to this. I am wondering if the minister is prepared to undertake to the House that he will liaise with the other ministries which may be responsible for this. I presume Culture and Recreation would be the line ministry on this.

In any event, many of those in isolated communities can get the regular CBC channel or whichever one is in the area, but TV Ontario has to be one of the better things which have come out for a long time.

There are some good government programs. There's OHRP there's TV Ontario and there are others as well. We don't mind pointing these out when the time comes to point them out. But in terms of educating many of the people—and I mean adults here; the children get their education in school. I'm talking about the adult residents of northern Ontario in some of our isolated communities who could certainly stand the benefits of this very excellent program.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well Mr. Chairman, the honourable member has hit on a very sensitive issue for me personally. It's one that I have been—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It's one that's shared.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm talking about the overall lack of improved television across northern Ontario, not ETV. But no, as was spelled out in the throne speech, you'll recall that the Ministry of Northern Affairs was given certain responsibilities. We are supposed to accelerate better television coverage across northern Ontario. Our goal is to have at least three off-air channels, these being CBC, CTV and ETV. I think that's our minimum goal. Now cable will follow that.

Mr. Wildman: And French.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And French, oh yes, there's no question about that. French is moving into CBC in many areas right now. So we have that as a goal, in fact I am getting a little annoyed and frustrated with the lack of a decision by the CRTC.

Mr. Wildman: It had to do with an election.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That further infuriates me, really. The member for Rainy River—and he was a member on June 4—stood up and said, "The CRTC had made their decision, but we can't tell you today, we're going to tell you two weeks from now," which would be three or four days before the election. It never did happen. We still don't know who the selected carrier is.

I can tell you we're going to crank up our efforts to get a decision and to get on with the job, because there are new developments occurring in northern Ontario. There are developments with the satellite dishes. They are coming on rapidly. In the town of Dryden just about two weeks ago, after about three months experimenting, the local cable operator tied into the satellite and brought in Atlanta, Georgia, clear as a bell. The colour was exceptional, the voice was perfect and there they were, the people were watching baseball games coming in live from Atlanta, Georgia, through the satellite.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's educational?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Bolan: How about ETV?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If we can get ETV and CTV through that route I think that's the way we should go, because the costs have just been reduced tremendously by this satellite if they can be worked in.

Mr. Wildman: Cable's just not viable for most of the small communities.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is now with the dish antenna in place. In fact the fellow told me that he figured out it would cost him about 10 cents per customer if he was allowed to use the satellite dishes. Now he's totally illegal, and he recognizes that; that's why he brought it in during election time, so they wouldn't shut it down. But nevertheless it's in place, it's working and we're going to accelerate our efforts as a ministry to get on with the job, because northern Ontario needs it and deserves it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall item 2 carry? Does nobody wish to speak further on the item?

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported a certain resolution.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

LEGAL SERVICES CONTRACTS

123. Mr. Ziembra: What are the names and business address of lawyers that performed contract work for the government last year; and how much was each paid? [Tabled April 5, 1979. Interim Answer April 19, 1979. Approximate date information available May 18, 1979.]

See sessional paper 74.

SCHOOL BOARD STATISTICS

181. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry table for each school board in Ontario for 1977, 1978, 1979, using interim and estimate figures where necessary: 1. The average daily enrolment; 2. per pupil grant ceiling; 3. per pupil expenditures; 4. total expenditure; 5. total local taxation; 6. total provincial assistance; 7. rate of grant on recognized ordinary expenditures; 8. provincial contribution as a percentage of the total local school board expenditures; 9. rate of grant for French language instruction; 10. decline or increase in number of students from previous year; 11. decline or increase in number of full-time equivalent teachers from previous year; 12. number of self-contained special education classes; 13. number of full-time equivalent teachers of special education classes; 14. number of heritage language classes; 15. number of students studying heritage languages; 16. number of pupils whose first language is neither English nor French; 17. number of self-contained classes for pupils whose first language is neither English nor French; 18. number of full-time equivalent teachers of classes for pupils whose first language is neither English nor French? [Tabled May 15, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to the above question. The answer will be ready for tabling on or about Thursday, June 7, 1979.

CIVIL COURT PILOT PROJECT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I will be introducing for first reading this afternoon the Provincial Court, (Civil Division) Project Act, 1979. The purpose of this bill is to establish in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto a pilot project court where methods of reducing expense and delay in the adjudication of civil action can be implemented on an experimental basis and evaluated.

The pilot project involves the establishment in Toronto of a civil division of the provincial court for a period of three years. This project is proposed for Metropolitan Toronto because that municipality already has most of the resources necessary to handle the case load that will come into the civil division. It is my hope that if the project proves successful it can be extended to other parts of the province.

The newly created civil division will assume all the jurisdiction of the small claims courts in Metropolitan Toronto. In addition, the civil division will have jurisdiction over civil claims up to $300. The bill provides that rules may be made to govern procedure in the project court. Although the details of the rules have yet to be worked out, they will be based on a form of simplified procedure where innovative measures may be tried and assessed. Particularly in the pre-trial and pleading stages of a civil action, there is room for new approaches and a more streamlined structure for civil litigation.

An individual will be free to hire a lawyer to represent him in the civil division, but steps will be taken to keep legal fees down and to reduce the overall cost of litigation.

The judges presiding in the civil division will be those small claims court judges appointed by the province who are currently sitting in Metropolitan Toronto. The existing court offices and court staff will be utilized in the project. Some increase in resources will be necessary but, hopefully, the increase will not be great.

The bill establishes an advisory committee to advise and make recommendations on the establishment and operation of the pilot project court and on its practice and procedure. My ministry is committed to making the courts of Ontario more accessible to the average citizen and to providing less expensive and less prolonged methods of settling disputes. A number of initiatives in this direction have already been made, such as the unified family court in Hamilton-Wentworth. These efforts must be continued and expanded.

I am confident that the provincial court (civil division) pilot project will be a significant step in achieving the goals I have outlined and that the experience and insight gained by the project will prove to be invaluable.

OPP TRAINING CENTRE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would like to take this opportunity to announce to the House plans for a new training facility for the Ontario Provincial Police which, fortunately, also allows the government to further rationalize the rehabilitation programs of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

This announcement is of some interest and importance to the citizens of Brampton who have so compassionately assisted the staff of the Ministry of Correctional Services adult training centre in their progressive work with non-violent offenders in that community. As many will be aware, the need for this facility has altered as a result of the ministry's development of creative community programs and the tendency of the courts to consider methods other than jail for dealing with the non-violent offender.

The Minister of Correctional Services will deal more specifically with some of these changes in the rehabilitation framework and the plans for the staff in more detail later. The result, however, is that the adult training centre is now redundant as far as the programs of the ministry are concerned and the centre will be vacated on August 31, 1979. At the same time, the Ontario Provincial Police have been seriously searching for quarters more suited to the wide-ranging programs of the Ontario Provincial Police Training and Development Centre presently located in inadequate quarters on Sherbourne Street in the city of Toronto.

The officials of the OPP have examined the 97-acre Brampton site and have concluded that with some modifications it will satisfy the force's need for expanded training facilities. It is anticipated that the centre will provide accommodation for 150 students and an increased administration staff. It is, therefore, a pleasure for me to announce that the Ontario Provincial Police Training and Development Centre will commence moving from its location on Sherbourne Street on September 1, 1979.

Brampton is an excellent location for the new training centre.

Mrs. Campbell: You are so right.

An hon. member: Tell it to the Premier.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It offers easy access to the force's general headquarters and to the students who will be attending from across the province in that it is close to Toronto International Airport and highway 401. The site will also facilitate all anticipated expansion needs.

Mr. Sweeney: How can you smile when you are talking about so important a matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The new training centre will provide year-round courses to members of the force and will include all academic subjects related to police science as well as motorcycle and physical training instruction. Supervisory and senior management courses will also form an important part of the curriculum and an indoor firearms range and swimming pool will be constructed to instruct force members in the use of police weapons and scuba diving.

An hon. member: Don't tell Tom Cossitt about the swimming pool.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The OPP training centre programs are not intended to supplant the curriculum offered by the Ontario Police College in Aylmer, Ontario. Rather, they are supplemental and aimed specifically at the needs of members of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Although I am certainly pleased to announce the Ontario Provincial Police will locate in Brampton, I am somewhat saddened at the need to close Brampton Adult Training Centre. This correctional facility opened in 1947 and was the forerunner of many advanced, community-oriented programs for dealing with the young and non-violent offender.

CLOSURE OF BRAMPTON CORRECTIONAL FACILITY

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Correctional Services will co-operate with the Ontario Provincial Police to ensure the smooth transition of Brampton Adult Training Centre from its present use as a minimum security correctional facility to a training and development centre for OPP staff.

Brampton ATC will close its doors as a correctional facility on August 31, 1979. Transfers of inmates to the centre have been terminated. The limited number of inmates who will not have completed their sentences at the centre by the end of August will be transferred to other correctional institutions or community facilities.

All permanent civil servants currently employed at Brampton ATC will be offered alternative employment in the Ontario public service. In the majority of cases it will be possible to place these staff members in vacant positions in other institutions located within reasonable commuting distance of their present homes. In this regard, five other major correctional facilities are situated within a 25-mile radius of Brampton. Commencing today, representatives of the personnel branch of this ministry will be on site to interview all staff members regarding future employment possibilities and to assist them during the transition period.

The phasing out of Brampton ATC is another indication of the progress which has been made by the Ministry of Correctional Services in the development of community-based programs as an alternative to incarceration for well-motivated, non-violent offenders.

When the centre first opened its doors in February 1947 it represented an entirely new concept in the province for dealing with young offenders between the ages of 16 and 24. It was the first correctional facility in the province in which offenders were not under constant supervision. There were no bars on windows and no security fences surrounding the grounds. This situation encouraged inmates to develop a sense of trust in themselves which, in turn, contributed to their positive response to the training and treatment program.

The open setting philosophy of the centre gained wide acceptance in the community to the point where many young inmates began working at gainful employment in the community or attending classes in the community educational facilities. It is certainly worth noting that the temporary absence program which operates in Ontario with a 98 per cent success rate had its beginning in Brampton. The first four inmates to be permitted to attend classes in a community school during the day while completing their sentences at a correctional centre were residents of the Brampton ATC. That was in 1968.

Ironically, it is this very success of the kind of community programming pioneered at the Brampton ATC which has provided the community alternatives that will now permit the phasing out of the Brampton setting as a correctional facility. This new emphasis has included extensive use of community supervision, temporary absences to work or receive academic and vocational training, and the establishment of 34 community resource centres of which all except two are operated by private agencies and individuals for this ministry. In addition, the courts are sentencing more people to perform community service, or, are recommending immediate temporary absences to allow offenders to retain their jobs in the community.

Thus, the needs of many of the individuals previously classified for Brampton ATC, are being met in the community by CRCs, the House of Concord which is operated by the Salvation Army, or by placing them on parole. Those offenders requiring training in a correctional setting can be accommodated at such facilities as the Maplehurst Adult Training Centre, which has an excellent educational training program.

The success of the Brampton ATC program over its many years of operation can be attributed to two main ingredients: an outstanding and dedicated staff, and a community whose citizens provided acceptance, understanding, and a willingness to become involved in the challenge of assisting offenders. I wish to express my personal appreciation and that of the ministry for the tremendous contribution made by staff of the Brampton ATC to the development of pioneering correctional programs in this province. Certainly the correctional facilities to which these staff will now be reassigned will benefit immensely from the experience and knowledge these employees have to offer.

On behalf of the Ministry of Correctional Services, I would also like to thank the citizens of Brampton for their valuable support and their immensely important contributions to the program at this adult training centre over the past 32 years.

Mr. Kerrio: You guys would do anything to save that seat.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I know they will continue to participate in the programs at our two other Brampton facilities next door—the Vanier Centre for Women and the Ontario Correctional Institute—and they can be counted upon to extend the hand of welcome, as well as their co-operation to the Ontario Provincial Police staff.

MUNICIPAL LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Wells: Today I will be introducing a bill which contains a number of amendments to the Municipal Act. Many of these amendments are the result of consultation and requests from municipalities, while others are of a housekeeping nature, designed to improve or clarify certain sections of the present legislation.

I would like to take this opportunity to outline briefly the amendments being introduced today for your consideration. Following the 1978 municipal elections, representatives of several municipalities indicated they would like to be able to administer the municipal oath of allegiance and declaration of office in either French or English.

This bill will authorize the minister to provide all forms required for the purpose of the Municipal Act in a bilingual version. These forms are currently provided in English only. The choice of forms to be used will be left to the discretion of each municipality. Use of the bilingual version will enable a municipality to administer the oath of allegiance and declaration of office in either English or French.

A number of the amendments will expand the authority of municipal councils. Councils will be able to lease or license the use of untravelled portions of highways in areas zoned for residential purposes. They will be authorized to allow municipal sewer inspectors to enter onto private, commercial and industrial property, but not a residence, without a search warrant for the purpose of examining industrial discharge into municipal sewers.

Councils will be authorized to extend the deadline for making the oath of allegiance and the declaration of office for reasons council considers to be valid. The current minimum and maximum fines for leaving a motor vehicle unattended will be repealed, and councils will be able to prescribe fines in amounts not exceeding $1,000.

The existing reward provisions will be expanded to enable municipalities to provide rewards for information leading to the location or return of missing persons or property, and the requirements for the approval of the Minister of Housing for municipal roads of more than 30 metres in width will be deleted.

Several changes will be made to the provisions dealing with financial matters. Councils will be able to set their minimum tax bills at any level up to $10 or another amount prescribed by the minister. This will particularly assist smaller municipalities where the incidence of tax bills for smaller amounts is highest.

The requirement in section 224 that municipalities make public their financial statements will be extended to counties. Councils will be required to deal themselves with applications for tax reductions because of sickness, extreme poverty or reassessment, rather than delegate this responsibility to the assessment review court.

Loans provided to municipalities under the Main Street Revitalization Program and the Ontario Downtown Revitalization Program will be exempted from the requirement for obtaining the assent of the electors. The permissive upper limit for tax penalties will be increased from one per cent to one and one quarter per cent per month. Such a move should avoid financial hardship for municipalities, while encouraging taxpayers to pay their taxes on time.

The bill will authorize a provincial court judge to issue an order to prohibit a person guilty of contravening a bylaw from continuing or repeating such contravention.

In line with a recent amendment to permit municipalities to invest in credit unions, as well as in trust companies and chartered banks, municipalities will be authorized to permit the payment of municipal taxes through credit unions and caisses populaires. At present, such arrangements can only be made with chartered banks, trust companies and the Province of Ontario Savings Offices.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Niagara Falls on a possible point of privilege.

DIOXIN IN FISH

Mr. Kerrio: Some weeks ago, I made reference to the fact there was enough dioxin in dumpsites in Niagara Falls, New York, to poison the population of North America. That statement was erroneous and I wish to correct it.

The minister then referred to the amounts that are dangerous as a shot of vermouth in a 28 million ton martini. Now I would like to read into the record the correction:

Dioxin is in the same megapoisson category as botulism and shellfish toxin. With up to 2,130 known pounds in dumpsites used in the 1960s by Hooker Chemical Company, there is enough within leaching range of Lake Ontario to wipe out the world. US authorities, however, are now actively working to contain or, where possible, to remove them.

Though parts per trillion sounds harmless, dioxin in five parts per trillion is known to cause cancer in test rodents and such microscopic measurements are destined to join nuclear rems in the lexicon of a pollution-conscious public.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment would like to add something further by way of correcting the record.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I really don't think the member opposite had any disagreement with anything I was saying. The reference to various illustrations of parts per trillion was an illustration to bring to the attention of everyone the very, very small portions that can do harm. At no time did the member or myself disagree with the infinitesimally small parts of dioxin that can be harmful.

Mr. Mancini: Changed your tune now, eh?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the member's privilege was one of disagreement with myself as much as he wanted to correct the record and on that we agree.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order or a point of privilege that I, as chairman of the select committee on Hydro affairs, want to raise with you and through you, with the House. A rather strange situation has developed. Normally it is handled by the House leaders but in this instance it has been frustrated by the House leaders.

Last Thursday, you will recall, I brought in a report—no, it was during your absence so you will not recall. I brought in a report from the select committee, as a result of a resolution passed the previous day by a majority in the committee, requesting the House to endorse the proposal the Rolphoton plant should not be put back in operation—it is now down for maintenance—until the committee had an opportunity to explore that great and growing concern with regard to nuclear safety.

At the House leaders' meeting on Monday, when the acting House leader, in the absence of Honourable Mr. Welch, was there, the argument was made that since the business for this week had been decided and announced last Thursday, there could be no change in that business—an argument, Mr. Speaker, I think you will regard as being not wholly accurate, since we have changed business to conform with the needs or the requirements of the government, or sometimes the opposition, many times.

The situation is this station is going to come back into operation at the end of this month, which is the end of this week. Therefore, a debate on that motion from a majority of the committee is meaningful only if it takes place before the end of this week. It could be scheduled on Thursday, but the acting government House leader has blocked it. It seems to me, as the chairman of a committee having brought back a report from a majority of that committee, I have an obligation to draw to your attention and to the attention of the whole House that an opportunity to debate that whole matter has been frustrated by the position taken by the acting government House leader at Monday's meeting.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, many times business has been changed from what is a tentative scheduling of business for the coming week, when new circumstances arise. Thursday night of this week, when we may have time to go back to budget debate, I am told, after two or three relatively inconsequential bills, would be the appropriate time to debate this resolution. Otherwise, it becomes a meaningless debate.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if I may attempt to be of some assistance to you as you consider this matter, you might recognize that members of our party on the select committee wished to have the Rolphton matter dealt with as follows: We felt the station should remain closed until the safety matters had been looked into by the select committee. We furthermore felt the logical thing to do was to take advantage of the fact it was down for maintenance and have the select committee immediately seize the matter of the Rolphton referral and bring in those witnesses pertinent to the matter so they could understand as quickly as possible whether or not the safe operation of that reactor should be re-undertaken.

Interestingly enough, the votes of the other two parties on that committee rendered the following situation the case: They accepted that the Rolphton reactor should remain down until the matter was looked at, but then turned around and refused to look at it until the month of July. That to me is utterly nonsensical. The committee should have looked at it then. They should have taken the earliest opportunity to look at it. Why the members of the other two parties decided not to remains to this day a mystery to myself. I would suggest that rather than take the time of the House to debate Rolphton, the committee should immediately sit down and look at that precise reference, which is what we wanted in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, just to put the sequence of events in perspective for the House, as the member for York South has pointed out, the committee did meet last Wednesday. After hearing a petition and some other information brought before the committee by the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), and then after a very short discussion—an hour or an hour and a half—they decided to vote on the resolution before it.

Subsequently, in the ordinary course, the House leaders met on Thursday at noon to conclude and agree upon, as is always the case, the order of business for the following week, which is this week. At that time, the matter was not only not agreed upon, but not even raised by any of the House leaders present; that is a full 24 hours after the committee had passed the resolution. There was also no secret at that time about the intended reopening of the plant in question.

Subsequent to that, at two o'clock last Thursday after the House business had been agreed upon for this week, my colleague, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld), rose in this House and set out the definitive government position upon the situation with regard to that plant which, I would remind the House, is a fairly complete statement. It indicates, as far as the ministry is concerned and, I believe, so far as the Atomic Energy Control Board is concerned, that there is no problem with the reopening of that plant.

At six o'clock last Thursday, the government House leader rose, as he always does, to read out the agreed-upon order of business for this coming week. At that time, almost a day and a half after the committee had met and dealt with the issue, the matter had still not been raised.

What I indicated at the meeting yesterday was that there really was no managerial change in the circumstances from the time the resolution was dealt with by the committee last Wednesday until yesterday, which would bring the statement of the minister of last Thursday into any doubt whatsoever. It goes without saying that the committee is free to meet at any time to deal with the various matters it wants to deal with regarding this plant. At any time it wishes to do so, it is so authorized.

The plant will continue to undergo ordinary maintenance—I emphasize this point—and reopen in the ordinary course in accordance with AECBs permission and the approval of Ontario Hydro which operates that plant. If, at any time, the committee wants to meet and pass its own judgement on whether the plant is a safe one, then so be it.

Ms. Gigantes: I have a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We could continue this all day. Is it in connection with the one raised by the member for York South?

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, it is.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear you.

Ms. Gigantes: Last week in the press the leader of the Liberal Party was quoted as saying that the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs had voted no—in other words, the NDP and the Conservatives had joined and voted against having immediate hearings. He has repeated that today in the House, and that is incorrect. There was no such motion.

I put one motion after discussion, Mr. Speaker. I feel obliged to bring it to your attention, as it is very important. There was one motion after discussion. It was discussed, and it was the motion which came out of the select committee. I call upon the leader of the Liberal Party to withdraw that incorrect statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is obviously a difference of opinion or a difference of interpretation as to what transpired in the meeting.

Mr. Mackenzie: It's a question of the truth.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The purpose of the member for York South in rising was to seek my intervention with regard to the ordering of the business of this House. I want to remind him and all other members that it is not the responsibility of the chair to order the business of this House or the committees of the House, which are creatures of the House. The ordering of business is the responsibility of the government House leader in consultation with the other two House leaders.

Following on the sequence of events as they unfolded, as related by the acting House leader, you wouldn't want the chair to be forcing its position on the ordering of the business of this House or its committees. It must be resolved by the proper authorities. There is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. Martel: But he was misleading.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order with regard to an inaccuracy in the statement of the acting government House leader.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, I have heard the position of spokesmen for all three parties. I want members to appreciate that it is not the responsibility of the chair to order the business of this House. That must be done by other people who are well known to you.

Mr. J. Reed: I have a point of privilege to correct the record, if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear it briefly.

Mr. J. Reed: The acting government House leader suggested that the information concerning the Rolphton matter had been brought to the select committee by someone other than myself. I should like it to go on the record that I, on behalf of my party, was responsible for bringing that information to the select committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a new point of order with regard to an inaccuracy in the statement of the acting government House leader.

Mr. Speaker: An inaccuracy really doesn't offend the privileges of the member unless he or she is personally affected. If this is the case, I'll hear it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, you have stated that if there's an inaccuracy and one wants it corrected, one should do it on a point of order immediately it's been said.

I brought in a report at three o'clock on Thursday afternoon last week. That indicated a desire on the part of the majority of the committee for a debate. The business of the House wasn't announced by the government House leader until six o'clock.

Our procedure is that reports from committees are dealt with on the following Thursday evening. That is a standard procedure we've been following for some time. Therefore, for the acting government House leader to say they hadn't been informed and that I didn't rise and raise the matter is a gross misrepresentation of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, the member is asking the chair to intervene or to rectify something that is beyond his power to do so.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am just correcting the record.

Mr. Speaker: I think the member knows the avenues he has available to him if he wishes to prevail upon the House leaders to change the order of business.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the intervention of the member for Carleton East with regard to her matter of privilege, because her privileges are involved here, if I might, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Very briefly.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Carleton East pointed out that in fact there was not a vote on the question of whether the Rolphton matter was to be taken up immediately.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why don't you get the facts straight, for once?

Ms. Gigantes: Why don't you read the Hansard?

Mr. S. Smith: I may say there was neither a motion nor a vote. She is correct in this. But the Liberal member, the member for Halton-Burlington, representing our party, sought the agreement of the other two parties to have the matter dealt with expeditiously and immediately—

Mr. MacDonald: Why don't you move it?

Mr. S. Smith: —and such agreement was refused by the other two parties. Let that be on the record.

Mr. Mackenzie: You haven't the courage of your convictions. Twisting the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. S. Smith: Read the Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: All honourable members of all parties know what their terms of reference are with regard to select or standing committees of this House. If their will is frustrated in the committee they can't seek recourse by coming and asking me to intervene.

That ends the matter. It's beyond the purview of the chair. It must be resolved either in committee or through consultation between the House leaders. That's the end of the matter.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw to the attention of all honourable members that we have two very important guests in our gallery, as guests of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld). They are the Honourable W. F. Birch, Minister of Energy, National Development, Science and Technology, for New Zealand, and Mr. Philip Harland, the Consul General of New Zealand.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Health. The minister has said that people of Ontario should always accept X-rays rather than refuse them and run the risk of a poor or improper diagnosis. I would like to ask the minister what he would advise, as Minister of Health, for those people who are subjected to routine back X-rays for the purpose of being accepted into employment or for the purpose of continuing in employment.

Is the minister familiar with the procedure whereby applicants for a job, if the job involves lifting, are sent for routine back X-rays, even if they have no symptoms to indicate back problems, and are told that without an X-ray of this kind they will not be hired. The ostensible reason is to reduce compensation claims, and so on and so forth.

Should citizens be forced to take X-rays as a condition of employment? Should they take those X-rays, even if there is no indication of illness from the clinical examination?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I want a few days to consider that and discuss it with my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), as it pertains to employment standards and the rights of labour in employment application situations.

I'm not familiar with that type of situation. If the member has details of any specific company or a particular type of industry where it's come to his attention that this is happening I would appreciate having that information. It would help in my discussions with my colleague.

As regards diagnostic radiology, that of course is a clinical decision, as the member knows; it is for a physician, a dentist, a chiropractor or whomever to decide, using his best judgement, what is in the interests of the patient.

Mr. S. Smith: I would certainly appreciate it if the minister would confer with the Minister of Labour and report to this House, since it appears to be a common practice that people are asked to undergo these X-rays as a routine before taking heavy jobs.

Since the minister has just mentioned again the question of chiropractic X-rays, is he now prepared, upon reflection, to state to the people of Ontario that they should accept or refuse the full-length X-rays which are frequently recommended by chiropractors? If he recommends acceptance, will he tell us what the risk is to the patient of not accepting it? Will he also compare that to what the radiation dose is? Could he give us the latest figures in his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I had some figures with me a few days ago, as a matter of fact, on a comparison of exposures of typical radiological views in chiropractors' offices and hospitals, I am sorry; I have misplaced them, but I will find them in a couple of days. Again, however, that is a clinical decision of a person registered under the laws of Ontario, under the Drugless Practitioners Act, and it is one which he makes in the best interests of the patient in his office.

Mr. S. Smith: They should accept?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I do not for a moment—nor would I—countenance an X-ray for the sake of an X-ray. But if I am with my doctor, or with whomever—

Mr. S. Smith: Or with a chiropractor.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and he recommends it as part of my diagnosis, then I will accept it.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since it is now more than two weeks since the minister indicated he was prepared to offer more funds to Dr. Taylor's group in the task force that was designed to reduce the dangers of excessive radiation through X-rays, can the minister report whether his ministry has concluded discussions with Dr. Taylor's task force, how much extra money is being given to that task force and by how much time their program of work is to be shortened as a result?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in meetings with Drs. Hobbs, Taylor and Johns, I indicated to them that, if they were to submit a proposal for a program that would accelerate the development of these radiological standards and improvements in the delivery of radiological services, we would be prepared to fund it. To date, they have not submitted such a proposal. But we still stand ready to do that; in fact, we are in regular contact—indeed, I would say daily contact—with this group, because it is important that we know what they are doing at every step along the way and that, likewise, they know the day-to-day activities of our branch.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: I would like to ask the Minister of Health what he thinks of the ethics involved when an applicant signs a form giving a company the right to look at his medical records and submits to an X-ray examination, the results of which are then compared to X-rays that are on file in a hospital. Would he care to comment on what he thinks of the ethics of that situation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that falls within the ambit of the original question on the apparent practice—of which I had not been aware until today—of some employers to ask for, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, an X-ray. It seems to me that falls within the ambit of what I want to discuss with the Minister of Labour. As well, it seems to me that is the sort of thing that the royal commission, under Mr. Justice Krever, is examining as part of the whole question of access to medical information.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker. Since he is undoubtedly aware that Interflow and K-D Enterprises, against whom he has laid something like 138 charges, is now succeeded by a company which is essentially the same but with a new name—namely, Frontenac—can the minister explain why Frontenac appears to have the approval of the ministry in setting up a transfer station in Welland, the apparent aim of which will be to blend various liquid wastes and to then ship them for burning in Mississauga? Why would the minister be interested in continuing to expand the operations of this particular firm, given its pitiful record in Hamilton and the fact these charges are still pending; and how does he think he can establish such a transfer station in Welland without an environmental assessment hearing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think the latter is necessarily so, although I'm not sure of that, Mr. Speaker.

I think one of the things we have come to realize is that regardless of how we treat our PCB material here in Ontario we are going to need some transfer of waste from municipalities, perhaps even across the border both ways—I want to make that very clear: both ways, both coming in and going out—so we have the proper mix of material in order to destroy it adequately. I am informed that you just don't take pure PCB material and burn it; you need an adequate mix. Of course, as the member knows, right now there is a more fantastic dilution than anything that has ever been done before. I think the dilution at the moment is one gallon to 5,000 gallons. But always, I am told, you need to dilute materials like PCBs in order to incinerate them.

Mr. S. Smith: Perhaps the first question was excessively lengthy and complex, but part of it was not answered. Does the minister intend to have an environmental assessment hearing of some kind prior to the establishment of this transfer station in Welland?

Is he saying the reason we have a possibility of PCB-contaminated material being imported from New York for waste disposal is we don't have enough oil here to burn our own PCBs? Is that why we have to import PCB-contaminated oil from New York? What is the reason we have to import PCB-contaminated material from New York, as reported in the New York Times of Sunday, May 20? It says waste oil from Queens, New York, will be coming all the way up to a cement kiln near Toronto and incinerated, obviously referring to the St. Lawrence Cement situation. What is the reason we have to import the stuff?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think I ever said we needed to import PCB-laden material. I said that to burn PCB-laden material we may very well need to import other oils and chemicals because it's extremely important to have the proper mixture to destroy the material completely, 100 per cent.

If it's going to be a permanent station, yes, there will be a hearing. I think we made that very clear some time ago. If the station is to be there on an interim basis, there may not be a hearing.

The experience at Smithville gave us very clear indication so we are not going to talk of transfer stations as something that would allow a continuous storage operation. A transfer station, from my point of view, is one where the material is in today and out tomorrow. Normally, with liquid wastes that isn't the way it is; it's on a continuing basis. Therefore, a public hearing will be held. We have had that policy for some time.

Mr. S. Smith: If I may ask one more supplementary, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence: Would the minister explain why he is still doing business on an expanded basis with the Interflow and K-D people operating under a new name while the other charges are still pending? Can he explain why any kind of transfer station which will be blending fuel, however transient the station may be—although one has serious doubts about that—should be established in Welland without a proper hearing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I didn't say that at all. I'm sorry, but the Leader of the Opposition is twisting that a little bit. I think while the charges are before the courts we have to respect that aspect of it. I think we also have to respect the fact that if a company makes a significant change, it is legitimate that they be permitted to continue in business with new personnel.

Mr. S. Smith: There is one new person. They are the same people, one person is new.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the member would agree there has been a very significant change in that company. I am not going to stand here today and defend the company, not at all; that isn't my duty nor my responsibility. But I think the member should be aware there has been a significant change in the management aspect of the company. Whether or not he accepts that, the fact remains it is so.

Mr. S. Smith: One guy from New York.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Quite a new management team has been put into place, one from the States which had a good deal of experience in this particular subject matter. We will deal with this company on the basis of the evidence we have presented and that we can obtain. We will not prejudge a company and say because it has once been in conflict of our orders it will forever be banned from business. That would mean the many convictions we have had in the province would forever put out of business all of those companies. This would hardly be a fair and equitable way of dealing with the law.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Energy arising out of the report we had on the radiation incident at the Bruce nuclear plant and the report which was received yesterday.

Since that report confirms evidence which was before the select committee a week or two earlier, can the minister explain why it is neither of the two workmen who received excess doses of radiation, both came from the Bruce heavy water plant, had any training in handling this kind of radiation situation in which they were working, and that even the workers with green qualifications who were meant to be supervising these two mechanical maintainers did not have training that included the radiological safety aspect of incidents with damage to irradiated fuel?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I can't, but I would assume that is one of the questions that will be addressed tomorrow when the committee is dealing with the report.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: What credibility should we put in the ministry's claims about the safety of Ontario nuclear power plants in view of the fact this report contains a summary with two and a half pages itemizing the failure of Ontario Hydro to protect the safety of the workers who work in a radiation environment?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think all three reports were tabled, as I understand it. The question of safety at the Bruce plant is one the select committee is looking into.

It would seem to me from reading the report that Hydro is aware and is carrying out the recommendations that were made about further training and further equipment, communications and so on. I assume the select committee is going to be inquiring further into whether the plans of Hydro are adequate or not.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact there have been many reports in the United States about the problem of human error jeopardizing safety or security at nuclear power plants; and in view of the fact the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning had a study last year which said essentially the same thing and warned of the problems of operator error or human error in nuclear power plants, can the minister say why it is that Hydro was not taking action in order to eliminate this many errors and problems in its safety procedures for cleaning up a radioactive accident? Can the minister say now how we can put credibility in Hydro's attempts to say that it is going to be safe from here on in?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think it has been said before by Hydro, by myself and by my predecessors as Minister of Energy that the operation of the nuclear plants is one of constant postulating of incidents, of changing procedures, improving procedures and improving equipment.

I would imagine that will continue forever because people are not perfect. I think the system they have adopted must be, compared to elsewhere, a pretty good one, inasmuch as they have an extremely fine safety record.

ECONOMIC IMPACT OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet, Mr. Speaker. On April 30, the Minister of Natural Resources told the Ontario Mining Association that effective last year the cabinet had implemented an overall policy of accountability to require an evaluation of the economic impact of all new proposals. He said that the cabinet is going to be required to know whether any new program duplicates existing programs and the impact on jobs, on investments, on the private sector and on the civil service.

Can the minister confirm whether it is the government's policy to do economic impact analyses on new programs in legislation, and will he undertake to table those documents in this House?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The ministries are requested to submit economic impact analyses when they are introducing legislation. I think that the tabling of those should be up to each individual minister, if he or she so desires.

Mr. Cassidy: If I can direct this to the Chairman of Management Board, since he is the person who apparently sees these impact analyses, can the minister tell the House if the government has done formal economic impact analyses on the abolishing of succession duties, the connected increase in OHIP premiums or on individual grants under the Employment Development Fund, and will the minister undertake to see that those documents are tabled in the House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can tell you the answer to all three without any doubt, and it will be totally contrary to what you people want it to be. It is in the budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been directed to the Chairman of Management Board.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has indeed.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The items to which the leader of the third party refers are budget items. No, we did not have economic impact analyses of those prior to the budget.

Mr. Makarchuk: What did you do? Use a dart board?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes. It has your picture on it.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say then how is the government planning on major fiscal measures if economic impact analyses are not being done on those particular programs? On those programs where economic impact is being analysed, can the minister explain how is this Legislature meant to deal in a reasonable, informed kind of way, if those analyses, saying what the effect will be on taxes, on investment and on jobs, are not make available both to members of this Legislature and to the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The leader of the third party should be able to dream up his own questions. That very subject was the subject of quite a fine bill that the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) introduced last week in private members' business. At that time, I gave an extensive answer to the very points that the honourable member is raising.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, following the information received in report number one of the food price monitoring program. Is the minister aware that the statistics showing the results of price changes in the major cities of southern Ontario all show that the Toronto market had higher prices?

Since Toronto is a much larger market and in all probability should have lower prices generally, can the minister explain how the review board conclusion was received by the ministry and if the ministry is looking into the reasons behind that apparent shift of expectations of prices?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I would have expected that because of the scope of the market the Toronto prices would be lower. The interesting thing is that increased competition in the markets other than Toronto are the reasons for the lowered prices. In addition, there is also the fact that prices in Sudbury are much lower. I think that is a direct result of the fact that stores have really chopped to the borderline because of the prolonged labour dispute which has cut down purchasing power in the area.

Mr. Breithaupt: In any review which the minister may make of the monitoring going on under this program, is he aware there is still a problem with respect to metric conversion? There are some price differentials resulting where quantity may have decreased even though the price may not have increased for the same product. Has there been any review of metric conversion to determine whether that decrease in size of packaging might have an effect on the price monitoring program which he is undertaking?

Hon. Mr. Drea: We are in constant consultation with the federal government. The federal government has assumed the role of monitoring the changeover to metric specifications, both liquid and solid, to make sure there is no price increase just because of the different containers.

Let's go back to Carnation milk. Carnation milk maintained its unit price so therefore it dropped its total price when the smaller metric can was used. That can now is back to the same price as the former large can because the federal government increased its support price for milk products. So the two aren't necessarily a price increase. One was done fairly within the metric situation. The other one was a change in federal government support prices.

Some weeks ago I was told there would be hundreds of metric complaints forwarded to me here by just one member of the third party. Since then I have received five. None was from that member. All have gone to the federal government and in no case was there really a price increase dictated by the switch from North America standards to metric.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Would the minister tell us if he's doing any follow-up where he finds there is an unreasonable price increase or where there's a wide discrepancy between prices in one area compared to another? There is an example in beef, which is about 60 cents a pound more in Ottawa than it is in Toronto. Is the minister notifying the companies of his displeasure when he finds unjustified increases and asking why there are these discrepancies?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, my people quite often talk not only to the retailer, but to wholesalers, to processors and, indeed, in the case of a farm product like beef, to the cattlemen's association. As a matter of fact, the cattlemen's association is a very good provider of information on just exactly what is happening today, what's likely to happen tomorrow and next week.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) I would like to ask the Premier why his government is forcing yet another Windsor hospital to go through court procedure to secure adequate resources to meet health-care needs in my community? Further, I would like to ask why he is doing this in view of the fact that Dr. Fry, Dr. Echlin, Dr. Lee and Dr. Baryluk, all doctors on staff at Metropolitan Hospital, have clearly indicated in affidavits that the needs of that hospital and health-care needs are not being met because of cutbacks in budget and closing of beds.

Why is the Premier forcing them to go through the court process? Why doesn't the Premier come to terms with the problem on his own?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I didn't get the last part of the question but dealing with the first part, I will be delighted to find out that information for the honourable member from the Minister of Health.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, on this very important issue, which surprisingly enough he has absolutely no facts on, maybe the Premier would also find out why yesterday in the social development committee the Minister of Health stated there would not be a closure of beds, simply a conversion of beds in Ontario, yet in Windsor 109 active treatment beds are being closed and only 85 chronic care beds are being opened. This gives a net loss of 24 beds as of April 1 this year.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With respect, I really think that is the kind of question that should be discussed during the estimates, but in that the member wants this information or further explanation—

Mr. McClellan: If he would stick around we could ask him.

Mr. Breaugh: He keeps running away.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, if the member for Oshawa wants to ask a supplementary question, I have never sensed that the Minister of Health would run away from him in any physical or mental sense, I have to tell the member—

Mr. Breaugh: He ran away yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and there is no reason on earth why he would ever need to. If there is one member over there who wouldn't inhibit me it would be the member for Oshawa in the health field. I say that with kindness.

I will get the answer for the honourable member if he doesn't get it during the estimates.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Premier if he is aware that the establishment of the burn unit at Metropolitan Hospital took over facilities or space that meant approximately 16 beds were eliminated; and also that they do have a cancer unit, which means that unit can no longer be used for emergency cases; and that approximately 40 per cent of the emergency cases in the city of Windsor use the facilities of Metropolitan Hospital and, as a result, would the Premier not reconsider the bed allocation for that hospital?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am only going by memory, and I am sure the member for Windsor-Walkerville has a better recollection than myself, but I think that the health council within that great community had some part in making these determinations. Knowing the support the member for Windsor-Walkerville has always publicly given to the health council in that community, as he does so many other public-spirited bodies, I don't think he would want to contradict the recommendations they have made.

Mr. Cooke: Your government set the ratios.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Surely the member for Windsor-Walkerville would expect us to accept their recommendations, because I sense that that was the origin of this particular decision. If that assumption is in error, and I will check it with the Minister of Health, then I am sure he would be quite prepared to discuss it further with the member.

DIOXIN IN FISH

Mr. Kennedy: This is in respect to the first question of privilege raised by the member for Niagara Falls. We couldn't hear down here. I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment, did the member provide the source of the statistics and the information which he read into the record in allegedly correcting an earlier point of privilege or statement that he had made?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In answer to the honourable member, if he did, I didn't hear it. I have no doubt that the member for Niagara Falls will tell us whether that was a scientific journal or a news magazine. I don't know what it was. Perhaps you would give him that privilege now, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Playboy.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Hush. Flash.

Mr. Speaker: If the member for Niagara Falls wants to volunteer that information, I will allow him to do that.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will enjoy getting into the habit of answering questions; I think we should do that.

Mr. Speaker: Just the source, please.

Mr. Kerrio: Yes. The information that I read into the record was taken from this month's Maclean's, and—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Will the honourable member please table that document?

Mr. Kerrio: I really understand what it feels like over there now, I really do.

Mr. Speaker: That is a very full and complete response. Thank you. That is the way all questions should be answered.

ABITIBI PROSECUTION

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, in regard to the province's prosecution of Abitibi Paper Company Limited over pollution by its Iroquois Falls paper mill, which has now been halted by the Ontario Court of Appeal.

Why did the ministry officials privately, in correspondence, lead Abitibi engineers to presume that it would not be prosecuted provided it completed its improvement program, and then publicly turn around and lay 22 charges under the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources

Act, which prosecution, in the words of the provincial court judge, was "an abuse of the court process"?

Mr. Roy: Oh, shame, shame.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I appreciate having had some alert to this. I believe it was in 1976—some time ago—when that correspondence took place. Then the appeals and counter-appeals took place. We won one and we lost one. At the moment, I understand, we are contemplating whether to go to the Supreme Court of Canada on that particular issue.

Mr. Gaunt: The charges were laid two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's right. We have had an appeal and we won the appeal. They appealed that decision and won it. It is now up to us to decide whether or not to take it to the Supreme Court of Canada. We haven't made that decision yet.

Mr. Warner: Shades of Dow Chemical.

Mr. Roy: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As to why that was in the correspondence, I can only look at that correspondence of some two or three years ago, and I am prepared to do so.

Mr. Roy: It sounds like another Dow Chemical.

Mr. Gaunt: The minister really hasn't answered my question, but let me pose a supplementary. Since this is another example of what appears to be an emerging pattern—we can think of Reed, Dow, and now Abitibi—where the ministry says one thing privately and then does another publicly, when is the ministry going to develop some consistency in making the polluter pay, and why hasn't the ministry brought in a system of automatic fines in a number of cases of non-compliance with control orders?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think if I have ever heard a misnomer, it is "an automatic fine." I really do believe that for automatic fines to apply, if there is such a possibility, first of all, one has to be sure one has monitored the situation correctly and accurately. That has to be proven. That isn't exactly an automatic fine. It is another illustration of where one has to make one's case. So there is no easy way of assessing an industry just by reading the meter. That just doesn't work. I think that should be on the record.

Mr. Warner: You paint yourself into a corner.

Mr. Roy: Why is the minister not consistent?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am glad the member reminded me of that and I thank him. I think we are very consistent. The truth of the matter is that many of the prosecutions—

Mr. Roy: The minister is consistent in his inconsistency.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member will be quiet for a second—

Mr. Speaker: Why does the member for Ottawa East have to be so consistent in his interruptions?

Mr. Roy: You don't want me to embarrass him, do you?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Not as much as the honourable member is embarrassing himself.

One of the things we are considering in our ministry is how much we should brag about our prosecutions. If memory serves me correctly, in the last nine months between 30 and 50 charges have been laid, many of which have been successfully prosecuted. We don't, as a matter of policy—and there are valid reasons for this in law—go out and tell the world about what we are going to do relative to charges and how successful we are in the prosecutions. There is some denial of natural justice in so doing.

Perhaps that does in a political sense and a policy sense make it somewhat difficult for the members of the opposition who are genuinely interested in this issue—not necessarily the member for Ottawa East, but I am sure the member for Huron-Bruce—to know of our record in this regard. I would be more than pleased to supply members with those numbers of charges that have been laid, say, in the last six months.

Mr. Warner: And how much the fines were.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think members would be impressed, not only with the quantity but with the quality and the broad cross-section of people who were brought to the courts to answer for their misdemeanours, relative to the concerns of the environment.

Mr. Samis: Were they even fined?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think our enforcement policy is far better than perhaps the public is now aware. That concerns me a great deal. To make it better, we are going to have to appear to be bragging about prosecuting, not just the big offenders, because that offends my sense of natural justice, but we have to put the whole record here for members to see, from the very large corporations of this province to individuals.

Mr. Samis: Hawkesbury is a great example.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That record is there. If members would like it, I would be glad to supply it. It is a very consistent record and members would be impressed by it if they saw it.

ELECTRICAL IMPORTS

Mr. Laughren: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that we import 55 per cent of Canadian purchases of electronic goods and 28 per cent of the consumption of electrical products; and in view of the fact that annual imports of electrical goods alone, amounting to $2.3 billion, are costing the people of Ontario approximately 52,000 direct jobs and about 150,000 jobs if one considers the spin-off job effect, will the minister tell us if he has received the report of the task force on the industry which he set up last year and, if so, if that task force report recommends the urgency of a program of import replacement?

Will the minister also tell us when he will release to the House the full recommendations of that task force report and begin a serious program of import replacement in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I indicated during estimates, I am expecting that report in June. Soon after I get it, I will make it available, as I indicated in estimates, to the members of the House and to the public at large. Obviously, we will be responding to the recommendations of that task force.

I should also add that any study of our "shop Canadian" program will indicate that this government above all governments in this province was first into the "shop Canadian" program. It was our idea.

Mr. M. N. Davison: There is only one government in this province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A major component of the "shop Canadian" program is import replacement.

Mr. Laughren: The minister has a funny way of showing his concern when it comes to this industry by the time he is taking to respond to the need there.

Since the minister promised yesterday he would carefully monitor foreign direct investment in the fruit and vegetable canning industry in order to make sure that decision-making and ownership remained in this province in that particular industry, will he make the same commitment for the electrical industry, which is already 65 per cent foreign-owned? Will he assure us that he will reject any applications that will lead to increased foreign ownership of this industry, which is of critical importance to Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the member on the first count. Of course, we always carefully monitor all the Foreign Investment Review Agency applications with a view to the best interests of our province.

Mr. Laughren: You agree with them all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On the second count, I think it is overly simplistic to pretend that all applications should be either approved or rejected.

Mr. Laughren: You don't care about jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no question about the fact that the member's party takes a philosophical position that all FIRA applications, whether they create a lot of employment or not, ought to be turned down.

Mr. Laughren: It's costing us jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If we followed what you fellows think, there wouldn't be any jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our party, and I think most parties that think about it for a moment, will agree that one can't prejudice all FIRA applications. Obviously there are other trade-offs to be concerned about.

Mr. Laughren: We're talking about 150,000 jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You would stop the world.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For example, I want to make it quite clear to the member that if we got an application from a large firm in the electronics industry which would create a lot of long-term jobs with local decision-making and a sufficient degree of innovation so that we would have some assurance that the job flow out of that industry would stop, then the member is quite right, this government would look quite happily and positively upon that long-term, job-creating application.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's party, obviously, would say if it's job-creating but foreign-owned, it doesn't want it. We take a different position.

ALCOHOLISM TREATMENT

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have an answer to a question which was directed by the member for Ottawa Centre to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) on Friday, May 25, relating to the matter of halfway houses for the treatment of alcoholics across the province.

I would indicate, initially, that six years ago the Ministry of Community and Social Services was funding three halfway houses for persons with alcoholic problems across the province. Today we are funding some 25 halfway houses in Ontario, from Windsor to Kenora and Cornwall, for a total of 492 beds. I believe this is an indication of the seriousness with which the ministry has attempted to address the problem.

In Ottawa, we are already funding two halfway houses, the 20-bed Maison Fraternité and the 11-bed Serenity House. In Renfrew, we're funding the 20-bed MacKay Manor. In Merrickville, we fund the 15-bed Buena Vista-on-the-Rideau, and in Cornwall, the 16-bed Friendship House. Those are the eastern Ontario ones at the present time.

Our approach, I believe, has been a very co-operative one with the Ministry of Health. Most of the halfway houses funded by the ministry would not have been funded if it had not been for the Ministry of Health's seed funding, through their grants in aid committee, over a period of several years.

Funding by my ministry under the Charitable Institutions Act is 80 per cent, with the corporation having to raise an additional 20 per cent. We are funding 25 halfway house beds for women at the present time. As the honourable member noted in one of his questions, there are 17 beds in Grant House in Beaverton and eight beds in Pedahbun Lodge in Toronto.

We're not funding more beds for women at the moment because during the four-year period when we had open funding, we didn't receive further proposals for women, although they were welcomed during that period of time.

The above commitments do not count the literally hundreds of hostel beds which the ministry is also funding in which basic food and shelter and a comfortable environment is provided for persons with alcoholic problems. Moreover, we are finding that many of the halfway houses, on their own initiative, are now developing financially self-sufficient room and board operations at no cost to government for alcoholics who have completed detoxification and the first stage of rehabilitation at the halfway house. By stretching out the time frame for the alcoholic person, there are now indications the rehabilitative results are significantly improving in some of those operations.

I would suggest to the honourable member with respect to his particular interest in the Amethyst Women's Addiction Centre, he might encourage them to approach, through the municipality, the matter of funding under the hostel program. Although there is no funding at the moment for additional halfway houses, I would certainly be willing to look at any proposal that requested funding under the hostel program for that portion of their program.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has admitted there is in fact, almost no halfway house accommodation for women alcoholics who are seeking rehabilitation, can he explain how it is that programs being shunted off and told to function like hostels are in fact going to work in a rehabilitative way, since the funding for hostels is really only enough to cover the room and board component and certainly not enough to cover any further services that may be necessary, such as counselling and those kinds of things to help alcoholics, female or male, get out of their sickness and get themselves better?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the perspective on that differs depending on who one discusses it with. I would point out to the honourable member there are a number of programs that appear to be operating with considerable success, at least relatively so.

I must say none of the programs being operated are spectacular in their results, as I'm sure the honourable member understands, as a result of the very nature of the condition that's being dealt with.

I would point out there are a number of programs functioning quite well across this province under the hostel funding arrangement. Perhaps the honourable member might suggest to Amethyst House they re-examine some of their program proposals with respect to the cost implications to see if they could fit in with the other funding arrangements.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Ms. Gigantes: I have a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Could it wait until after question period?

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to do it right now, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get it on the record right now, while the leader of the Liberal Party is still in the House.

Earlier, the leader of the Liberal Party asserted that the NDP members on the committee had insisted that any investigation by the committee of the Rolphton nuclear plant and its safety should be held off until July.

I have obtained a copy of the Hansard report of that committee meeting, Mr. Speaker, and, for your benefit, I would like to read exactly what I said in discussing the matter.

Mr. S. Smith: Read what all the members said.

Ms. Gigantes: "We have a very special responsibility in Ontario to look at the public safety aspects of nuclear power and the Candu program. I agree totally with Alan"—Alan Schwartz, our legal counsel—"that to begin hearings on Rolphton tomorrow would amount to having the lawyers, perhaps, and the petitioners involved in the Rolphton action come before us and present their case. It would involve having Hydro and the AECB come into present their cases."

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the honourable member is saying is that there is a difference of opinion or interpretation as to what transpired in the committee. That is quite legitimate. But I do not think it is a legitimate way of using the time of the question period in this House. There is nothing out of order. There is a difference of opinion. I do not think any of the member's privileges have been abrogated, and I do not see any legitimate point of order or point of privilege.

Mr. Warner: He can twist and distort all he likes.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

STRIKES

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Would he report to this Legislature on the position of two strikes in my area, one being the strike at the Pyrotenax of Canada Limited plant in Trenton and the other being the strike of the Canadian Union of Public Employees against the city of Belleville?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the employees of the city of Belleville, the member will recall that I was in Belleville recently and had an opportunity to speak to the acting mayor about the situation. I have been advised, as recently as yesterday, that there may be a meeting of the parties this afternoon about the matter. I have no information to report on that meeting, naturally, but I think the fact they are getting together is very important.

As to the question of the Pyrotenax company in Trenton, it is my understanding that the mediator, Romaine Verheyen, has arranged for a meeting of the parties on Monday afternoon.

Mr. O'Neil: As a supplementary, could I ask the minister if it would be possible for him to speak personally to the people who are handling especially the strike at the Pyrotenax plant at Trenton, to see if they would approach it to try to get a quicker solution? They have been accused of not being too enthusiastic, or not trying to get the parties together to come up with a solution.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I cannot let that go by without a comment because, frankly, I think the mediators usually do a superb job, and everywhere they go they receive praise for the energetic way in which they try to mediate without meddling. Romaine Verheyen, the mediator who is going to be bringing the parties together on Monday, is one of our finest mediators. I will be pleased to reinforce the member's concerns with him, but I would also like to reinforce the support that I feel I have for those mediators.

CHILD SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. I wonder if the minister would be prepared to give us the specific locations of the labour camps in northern Ontario in which comrade minister is proposing to incarcerate persons who are delinquent in their child support payments?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that today's press release by the honourable member is one of his more colourful ones. I thought that he might refer to me as the tinpot demagogue, as he did in the—

Mr. McClellan: Okay; tinpot demagogue.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am sure that the honourable member realizes that, on occasion, people other than himself might engage in a little hyperbole and rhetoric.

Obviously the point I was trying to make was that, in my opinion—and this is what I was trying to express—there are certain limits to the bounds of appropriate behaviour in any community. It seems to me that when we, in this society, see about us fathers who have abandoned their children and their wives, and who are in a position where they could afford to continue to support those people, that is inappropriate behaviour. That is behaviour that I do not, and will not, condone.

Mr. McClellan: Everybody agrees with that. Let the minister tell us about his fatuous deductions.

Mr. S. Smith: This isn't the first year it happened.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McClellan: Everybody agrees with that. Tell us about your fatuous suggestions.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Realistically, the member understands and I understand, and I believe everyone in the House understands, that there are other ways of enforcing those orders which were discussed here in the House yesterday. When I was asked how I felt about it, I obviously engaged in a little rhetoric—

Mr. Bradley: The member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy) had to chase you.

Mr. McClellan: Impetuosity overcame you.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to try to point out that that was behaviour I really thought should be condemned by our society; and figuratively speaking, it's the kind of behaviour for which one ought to be banished from our society. I stand by that.

Mr. Martel: You said northern Ontario was Siberia.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously there are no such labour camps in existence or contemplated.

Mr. Bradley: You got the headlines; the member for Sarnia gave them to you.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Leaving aside the Siberian solution, I don't understand, and I would like the minister to explain, what is the big difficulty the government has in persuading the family court judges to issue garnishees or attachment of wages against people who are delinquent in their child support payments? What is the big problem here?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In terms of those specific aspects, I think that question might more appropriately be referred to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

Mr. Warner: Redirect it; let's get an answer.

Mr. McClellan: I will redirect it.

Mr. Bradley: He's about to leave the House.

Hon. Mr. Norton: But I would point out that I do believe the system of automatic enforcement is one possible answer.

Mr. Breithaupt: You could check out Minaki, it isn't being used.

Mr. McClellan: What excuse is there for your failure to deal with the issue?

Hon. Mr. Norton: There is also, I think, an important responsibility upon all of us in this chamber, and others assuming certain responsibilities throughout our society, to clearly get the message across that with or without changes in the methods of enforcement—

Mr. McClellan: Enforce the law; never mind the lectures, enforce the law.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —there is such a thing as responsibility—

Mr. Warner: You've shirked yours.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and the fathers of those children have a responsibility. It should not be up to government in every case to expend money to see that people live up to the responsibilities they have assumed for their children and families.

Mr. Warner: You've shirked your responsibility.

Mr. McClellan: May I redirect?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nipissing.

Mr. Bolan: Does the minister not think he owes the people of northern Ontario an apology for thinking they are nothing more than some kind of a cesspool for those people of southern Ontario who are not doing what they should be doing? It's his ministry's responsibility. Why doesn't he hold up his responsibility?

Mr. Swart: That's two of you, you and Stuart Smith.

Mr. Warner: He wants to close Windsor and you attack the north.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I now know who placed that anonymous and mysterious telephone call to my office first thing this morning.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The member for Nipissing.

Mr. Bolan: I wish I had thought of that.

Ms. Gigantes: It's really funny, eh?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously there was no slight intended for northern Ontario—

Mr. Bolan: Apologize.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —but having made a passing reference to Siberia, and having decided that probably the Russians wouldn't want them, I had to find an alternative.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk.

Mr. Nixon: With a new question.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, Bob.

Mr. Nixon: I'm not in default of any of my payments.

STRAWBERRY MARKETING

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food if he recalls the situation about a year ago when imported strawberries replaced those produced on our own farms, resulting in a financial loss to our own producers and the plowing over of so many acres of the producing strawberries, particularly in the Norfolk area? Whether he recalls it or not, does he have a program whereby we are going to see that our locally-grown strawberries are put into the stores at a price from which the producers would benefit as well as the consumers?

Hon. W. Newman: I didn't know the member had planted so many strawberries.

Mr. Conway: Let Joe Clark have them in his cabinet.

Hon. W. Newman: Anyway, I would like to point out to the member that I recall very well what happened last year. If he will recall, in the final analysis as far as strawberries were concerned last year, most, if not all of the top quality strawberries, were moved onto the market and sold.

Mr. Kerrio: What you said was let them eat shortcake.

Hon. W. Newman: Because the member saw certain pictures and certain things happened—but he has the background on that story now because he knows I told him what had happened.

Mr. Nixon: It was in my riding. Don't tell me what happened. I was out in the fields.

Hon. W. Newman: Last year, I want to make it very clear, most Ontario strawberries were moved out. What I'm saying is that this year, through our Foodland Ontario program—

Mr. Gaunt: Tell us about Ontario food land!

Hon. W. Newman: Do you want to listen or not? Through our Foodland Ontario program, in co-operation with the chain stores, we are hoping that—unfortunately, because of the way the weather is this year—

Mr. Roy: If there is a problem, it's the feds' fault.

Hon. W. Newman: It looks as though all of the strawberries could come on again at the same time this year, the way things are shaping up. We are making every effort to work with all those concerned to make sure the Ontario strawberry crop is moved onto the market and moved out so that the farmers will not suffer.

Mr. Kerrio: Can't you bring some of them on sooner?

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister explain to the House whether or not "every effort" means having someone on his staff go to the big supermarkets and actually arrange for the crop to come in and be featured in the major urban centres? Does he recall that only Knob Hill Farms last year carried the strawberries—maybe as a loss leader, I don't know. That was the only concern that really moved any significant number of fresh strawberries in the Toronto market, the rest were all coming in from California and Mexico.

Hon. W. Newman: It is all very well to make statements like that, but—

Mr. S. Smith: Driving down the domestic prices.

Hon. W. Newman: The member knows so much. I am amazed he is there. He wouldn't know a strawberry from—I won't get into that.

We will be working with the chains; we did get co-operation from them last year. There was a back-up at the first when US strawberries were coming in, but one thing these members forget is—no, I am sorry, things have changed. If a certain party dropped tariffs in 24 hours and had they put those same tariffs on they said they were going to put on we wouldn't be faced with a problem at all this year. We are doing our part, but they didn't do theirs.

Mr. Makarchuk: In view of the fact the testimony that was given to the public accounts committee by representatives on the Ontario Food Terminal operation indicated they did not have a policy of giving preferential treatment to Canadian or Ontario growers, would the minister talk to them and ensure that Canadian growers of strawberries and everything else get preferential treatment? Alternatively, would he ensure there is a policy within that organization to ensure that Canadians get first chance at selling their crops vis-a-vis the Americans?

Hon. W. Newman: I doubt if the member has ever been out to the food terminal, nor does he have any idea how it works or even operates. Has he been there?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes.

Hon. W. Newman: All right.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have a response?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I would be glad to respond and point out there are many stalls out there for the farmers of this province.

Mr. S. Smith: There's one right now.

Hon. W. Newman: There is one for that member too. There are many out there for the use of the farmers who bring their produce in to sell wholesale to all the buyers for all the stores across the province.

As far as the wholesale houses are concerned, they lease space on a long-term lease basis. I think it is a 30-year lease, renewable. They lease space and we have no control over what they handle.

As far as the others are concerned, farmers by the hundreds and thousands do bring their produce in there to sell each day. The member should go out there some morning at six o'clock to see it.

OHC EVICTION

Mr. di Santo: I have a question for the Minister of Housing. Is the minister aware of the case of a North York tenant who was evicted last week by Ontario Housing? Subsequently, while the case was in court, the eviction order was cancelled by Ontario Housing. The OHC lawyer told the court on Thursday he was unaware of any action taken by the housing corporation to nullify the already-executed eviction.

Can the minister tell us if he has investigated and if he has found some responsibility in the spiteful behaviour of Ontario Housing officials and if he is ready to punish the responsible people?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am aware of the situation that developed last week and I believe it has corrected itself. Clearly there had been an experience with that tenant for some period of time in rent arrears. There had been a court order obtained by the Ontario Housing Corporation back in December, which was not acted upon, on legal advice, until later on in the year.

As a result of further discussions with that tenant, with her legal counsel and the lawyers representing Ontario Housing Corporation, to the best of my knowledge the problem has been resolved.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Ms. Gigantes: I attempted to cite a question of personal privilege earlier in the question period. The Speaker suggested that it was a question of opinion about what the facts had been in the case. I believe there was a misstatement of fact which may have been caused inadvertently by the leader of the Liberal Party because he was misinformed by members of his caucus about what had happened at the select committee. I would like to bring those facts back to your attention because I feel my privilege as a member of the House and as a member of that committee has been abridged.

Mr. Speaker: Is the honourable member suggesting that her privilege has been infringed upon because somebody disagreed with her?

Ms. Gigantes: No, Mr. Speaker. I am suggesting that the problem is not a difference of opinion about what happened, but rather a difference of fact. The facts as presented by the Liberal leader, however inadvertently, were misleading to this House and were an infringement on my privileges as a member. I would like to read the section from the select committee deliberations in which the question of whether we would consider the Rolphton safety question before July was discussed. The Leader of the Liberal Party said that the NDP members had not been willing to discuss the matter before July. What I said on page HA-1535-2, Mr. Speaker, was: "We have a very special responsibility in Ontario to look at the public safety aspects of nuclear power and the Candu program. I agree totally with Alan"—Alan Schwartz—"that to begin hearings on Rolphton tomorrow would amount to having the lawyers, perhaps, and the petitioners involved in the Rolphton action come before us to present their case. It would involve having Hydro and the AECB come in and present their cases, but we would have none of the incident reports. We would have none of the documents we can obtain from Hydro concerning this particular plant, which would help us in our questioning on this matter. We must settle how we get hold of those documents, which ones we will have and when they will become available to us as a committee before we can undertake any satisfactory hearing of the question."

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that these lines from Hansard indicate that it was my concern, as a member of that committee, that we have those documents, which are starting to be made available. The steering committee of the select committee is meeting with Ontario Hydro tomorrow to obtain the first documents. My only concern about starting the hearings early was that we would be proceeding before we had adequate documentation on which to question either AECB or Ontario Hydro. I therefore feel that it is incumbent on the Liberal leader to—

Mr. Speaker: Order! What the honourable member has said just confirms what I aduced from what was said: there is a difference of opinion as to what transpired, what was said, what was intended in the committee. Surely, it's not an abrogation of your privileges as a member of this House. There is obviously a difference of opinion, but don't ask me to adjudicate it.

MOTION

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved that notwithstanding the orders of the House, the order of precedence for private members' public business be changed so that Mr. Epp's ballot item be listed and called for debate June 14, Mr. Ruston's ballot item be listed and called for debate June 21, and Mr. Reed's ballot item be listed and called for debate on July 12.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 103, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 104, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes a number of amendments to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, many of them requested by Metropolitan Toronto council. It will authorize the council to impose terms and conditions when delegating its powers to lease or license the use of sidewalks and untravelled portions of Metro roads to an area municipality. It will exempt the O'Keefe Centre from realty and business tax and it will authorize the O'Keefe employees to join the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System, that is the OMERS pension system.

The bill will extend to the Metropolitan Toronto council certain powers given to local municipalities and counties in the Municipal Amendment Act, 1978, number 3. These are the authority to provide liability insurance for members of council and local boards to invest in credit unions, to accept historic documents and to control parking on municipal property.

It will enable the metropolitan corporation to control the effluent discharge from area municipal sewers into Metro's trunk sewers and treatment plants, and finally, it will increase the maximum rates of interest that the metropolitan corporation may charge an area municipality for failure to pay its levy from one per cent to one and a quarter per cent per month.

CONDOMINIUM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 105, An Act to amend the Condominium Act, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The proposed amendment to the Condominium Act, Mr. Speaker, is to delete the requirement in section 53(3) for a proposed declarant to pay interest on the moneys received on account of the purchase price prior to delivering title to the purchaser. The amendment is necessary because of the addition in the new act to section 51(6) which sets the limit on the amount of rent or occupancy charge which a purchaser may be required to pay prior to receiving title.

The original intention of the requirement for payment of interest was to ensure that a purchaser of a proposed unit was in no worse position than a purchaser of an actual unit who received title. The limitation on the amount of rent to be charged contained in section 51(6) ensures this continuance. The additional requirement for payment of interest is inequitable.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Epp moved first reading of Bill 106, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Motion agreed to.

[3:45]

AGRICULTURAL INVESTMENT DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. Riddell moved first reading of Bill 107, An Act to provide for disclosure of non-resident investment in agricultural land in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riddell: The purpose of the bill is to establish a means of ascertaining the nature and extent of non-resident ownership of agricultural land in Ontario. The bill requires every non-resident person, as defined in the act, to submit a report to the Minister of Agriculture and Food concerning each purchase of agricultural land. The bill also requires land registrars in Ontario to inform the minister about every conveyance of agricultural land registered by the land registrar that bears an affidavit indicating that the transferee is a non-resident person.

The minister must report to the Legislative Assembly on an annual basis concerning the nature and extent of non-resident ownership of agricultural land and the report is then referred to a standing committee of the assembly for consideration.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANCY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 108, An Act to amend the Public Accountancy Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The present section provides for a $25 maximum on fees. This maximum has remained unchanged since the act was first passed in 1950. The amendment permits a counsel to set the fee, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 109, An Act to amend the Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The amendment to this legislation permits the use of the official translation of statutes in French-language proceedings.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Administration of Justice Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The purpose of the bill is to authorize the fees payable in court proceedings for the services of court officers to be fixed by regulation made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Fees are now fixed under the rules made by the rule-making body for each court. The amendment will create the machinery to fix a more realistic tariff of fees.

JUDICATURE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this legislation contains a number of amendments of a routine nature, including an amendment to complement the proposed changes to the Administration of Justice Act with respect to tariffs and fees payable to court offices.

As well as a number of routine amendments, there are several substantive amendments, which are as follows: Section 4 provides for interest to be payable on judgments at the prime rate. Section 5 provides for the divisional court to sit as a single judge in certain instances. Section 6(5) permits the rules committee of the Supreme Court to fix a rate of interest to be applied in determining the capitalization value of an award in respect of future damages.

COUNTY JUDGES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 112, An Act to amend the County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to remove the term "junior judge" from the amended act and related acts. The term "junior judge" has no significance as far as jurisdiction is concerned, but the amendment has been brought in because the term "junior judge," although it may well have been appropriate at one time, no longer accurately reflects the nature of the office and the duties performed.

PROVISIONAL COURT (CIVIL DIVISION) PROJECT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 113, An Act for the Establishment and Conduct of a Project in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto for the Development of Improved Methods of Processing Certain Civil Actions.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this legislation refers to the statement I gave earlier establishing what might be termed more succinctly as the Provincial Court (Civil Division) Project Act.

SCHEDULING OF BUSINESS

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I want to obtain your assistance in the matter that was being debated this afternoon with respect to the way in which the business of the House is conducted.

I realize the Speaker cannot thrust himself into ruling whether or how things will be debated, but the impression the acting government House leader is trying to convey to the House is that once the order of business is scheduled on Thursday of one week, it cannot be altered under any circumstances during the next week. In fact the minister today already went against his own suggestion when he moved the change in orders for the private members' bills. That was not discussed with anyone, although I did not raise the matter at the time.

If the government House leader is going to play that type of game, which he tried to imply this afternoon he was prepared to play, then he should not be allowed to introduce a motion such as he just introduced saying we are going to change the order of business.

I can give you at least five illustrations, Mr. Speaker, where the House leader had arranged an order of business on a Thursday and the government was forced to change it the following week. I remind the acting government House leader that the government introduced three bills on a Tuesday evening which were not scheduled for debate. I can remind him of the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) who decided he would withdraw from the private members' debate on the spur of the moment last Thursday. I can remind him of the fact that the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) didn't come into the House because he was fogged in—it's not unusual, but he was fogged in that day—

Mr. Laughren: It has nothing to do with the weather either.

Mr. Martel: —and the order of business had to be altered. In this case they are hanging their hat on that because they don't want to debate the matter; they don't want to sit down and discuss it. Yet when it is convenient to change the order of business, long days after the order of business has been read for the following week, the government prevails on everyone else around here to change that order of business.

They can't have it both ways, Mr. Speaker, and I am asking you, sir, if the government is in a position where something which was scheduled cannot proceed are we in a position to see the House adjourned, as was the case when the member for Prince Edward-Lennox did not proceed with his bill, or when the government introduces three bills because it had run out of business?

Am I to assume that in the future when something occurs which changes that order of business we simply return to our offices? From what the acting government House leader said today, the order can't be changed once it had been debated last Thursday. It is etched in stone when it is convenient for the government, but it can't have it both ways. I have no objection to a change in the order to accommodate the member from Fort Frances, but there was no discussion.

What they are playing over there is a little game that can't be tolerated. It's either what's announced on Thursday at 3:30 p.m., or it's not. If they want to change the order of business as a matter of accommodation then they have to do the same as the Liberal House leader or myself when we have problems that arise. I think what they are attempting to do is simply nonsense. If they want to proceed that way, there is no way this House can work with any type of harmony. I would ask your intervention, Mr. Speaker, on that basis.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if I may quickly respond, to correct the record, I really didn't say earlier that the schedule as agreed upon was etched in stone. The system is that the House leaders get together and try to agree, so that everyone will know what the order of business is for the following week.

In deciding from time to time whether we are going to accommodate certain things that happen which more or less are unforeseen, obviously, the history of how these things came about is quite relevant to the considerations that the House Leaders have to make. What I was pointing out to the House earlier was that nothing had changed from Wednesday afternoon to today, and nothing had changed from Wednesday afternoon until Thursday when the House leaders met and could have gone through all of the matters that have been raised today.

All the circumstances were known at that time and, clearly, lest the impression be that the NDP House leader has been badly dealt with by the other House leaders, we should make the record quite clear. The items he is complaining of were not in fact discussed at the traditional tribunals and meeting places and times established by the three House leaders.

He then comes to the House this week and suggests that he is being unfairly dealt with because matters which were foreseen by him, fully known to him and his party last Thursday at noon, now they have decided they are unhappy with the decisions they made, so they are appealing to this House, alleging that someone is saying the order is etched in stone, or that someone is being unco-operative. In fact, the very harmony the member refers to depends upon all these matters which he is aware of being discussed at the regular meetings on Thursday so that the House can be informed on Thursday afternoon on the basis of all the facts which everyone has at hand at that time.

To come in this week and to suggest that there there is now something that is urgent or pressing that wasn't known about last week is to attempt, by the very nature of that allegation, to destroy the very harmony the member suggests he is so anxious to preserve.

Mr. Martel: That's not quite factual, because—

Mr. Nixon: Don't we have any business to do here?

Mr. Martel: —I went to the government House leader Friday morning. I didn't wait until this week. The report my colleague moved was moved Thursday afternoon after the House leaders' meeting. The statement by the Minister of Energy was in fact made Thursday afternoon after the House leaders met. So he can't play that game. I simply ask the acting government House leader how he moves a motion today about switching the order for private members' bills in consultation? When did that occur?

[4:00]

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there's a difference of opinion as to the process between the House leaders. As I indicated earlier, when it was raised during question period, it is not within the domain of the chair to order the business of the House. The matter is closed.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answer to question 185 and the interim answers to questions 182, 183, and 184 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 2326.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might confirm that with the consent of the opposition House leaders the votes on these matters will be stacked to 5:45 this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Is the committee agreed to that suggestion?

Agreed.

NIAGARA MUNICIPAL HYDRO- ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Consideration of Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, the members of both of the other parties will have received an amendment from me some time ago on section 4 of this bill. I would like to move that motion now.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 4(17) of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following clause:

"(c) may direct, before the first day of October 1979, the the commission established by section 2 in respect of the municipality to commence on a day specified by the bylaw the distribution and supply of power in some areas of the municipality that Ontario Hydro served immediately before the coming into force of this act and on the specified day subsections 10 and 12 to 16 and section 7 shall apply with necessary modifications to the assets and employees of those areas of Ontario Hydro in the municipality."

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I think the intent of this amendment is clear to all members of the House, but perhaps I should point out the general part of subsection 17 which reads as follows: "The council of each of the towns of Grimsby, Lincoln, Niagara-on-the-Lake and Pelham and the township of West Lincoln, with the consent of Ontario Hydro and without the assent of the municipal electors, by bylaw, . . ."

There are two clauses following, the first of which may direct the commission to service the whole municipality and the second which may dissolve the commission. This adds a third section which would provide that the municipality, before October 1, may review the commission boundaries within their municipalities and pass a bylaw which would establish boundaries which would be different from those which existed 10 years prior to this time when the municipal Hydro commissions were frozen.

It is my hope that the parliamentary assistant, the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), will reconsider and accept this amendment. I suggest that it is a logical amendment, after the steps which the government has taken to change the general program for restructuring hydro in this province. The member for Durham West will remember that the original intention of restructuring hydro was to provide for hydro authorities to be established at the regional level where regional governments existed. Subsequent to that, the government changed its policy so that local municipalities could be the authority for providing hydro within that municipality.

Mr. Haggerty: Isn't regional hydro what the government wanted?

Mr. Swart: Subsequent to that, the government backed down once again and decided that it would permit two authorities within a municipality to provide hydro, one the rural hydro and the other a hydro commission to serve a given area.

This amendment would not be before this House today if the government hadn't taken that last step to permit two authorities to provide hydro within the local municipality. But that step has been taken. I suggest to the government and to the other members of the House that if we are going to have two authorities within a municipality, the local hydro commission basically to serve the urban area of the municipality and then Ontario Hydro serving the rural section of the municipality, there should be a logical division between those two areas.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that that logical division in the Niagara region is not the urban boundaries which existed 10 years ago. There has been, as he must be aware, although he lives quite a way from the Niagara district, an expansion of those urban boundaries. Incidentally, I'm dealing here with a situation that doesn't exist in my riding in the municipalities of Welland and Thorold because by this act the whole municipality is put within one commission.

Mr. Haggerty: Is there not a problem in Thorold though?

Mr. Swart: There may be a problem in Thorold but the amendment that I'm introducing will not deal with that problem. In fact, the council of Thorold has determined that it will go ahead and have one hydro commission to serve the whole municipality.

What this deals with is the problem that exists in Niagara-on-the-Lake, in Lincoln, in Grimsby, in West Lincoln and in Pelham. In at least four out of five of these municipalities, the old boundaries of the hydro commission, which were the old boundaries by and large of those small urban municipalities which were amalgamated with the neighbouring rural municipalities, no longer represent the urban boundaries in those municipalities.

For instance, in west Lincoln the unincorporated village of Smithville had a hydro commission to serve it before. It was a police village at that time. By this bill, the government has re-established the same boundary area, but four new subdivisions which had been built at that time continue as the old urban area of Smithville and they will be left on the rural hydro system where rates will be 10, 20 or 30 per cent more than those within the municipal hydro commission boundaries.

It is so absurd, in fact, that half of one subdivision there will be served by the West Lincoln Hydro-Electric Commission and the other half will be served by rural Hydro. A population of about 700 in the Smithville urban service area of West Lincoln will be served by rural Hydro.

The situation is very similar in Pelham, where about one quarter of the population around the old village of Fonthill—again in a contiguous urban area—will be left in the rural Hydro system, yet their neighbours right across the street will be paying the lower urban hydro commission rates.

The same holds true in Niagara-on-the-Lake. In fact, the member for Lincoln is now here and, although he does not represent Niagara-on-the-Lake, he represents three of the other municipalities where there is concern. In Niagara-on-the-Lake they have officially requested that the subdivision area of Mississauga Beach be included within the Niagara-on-the-Lake Hydro-Electric Commission boundary. This, of course, will prevent that.

Grimsby is in much the same situation; there has been substantial growth outside the old urban municipality of Grimsby, and that contiguous urban area should be taken into the new hydro commission.

I would think that the government, represented here today by the parliamentary assistant, the member for Durham West, in a bill which in effect is establishing hydro commissions, would want to establish them on realistic boundaries. When he rises to speak on this, I hope he will explain what he expects to happen in the future with regard to these areas. He must be aware that the Niagara Peninsula, like much of the rest of Ontario, is not growing at the rate at which it grew previously. He must be aware that some of the municipalities, such as the Smithville area, have very real limits on how far they can grow because of the services which can and cannot be provided in that area. He must also know that in some of those municipalities, the West Lincoln area in this century, and perhaps for many decades after that, it is unlikely that the municipality will be able to take over the whole hydro system, which is an option provided in this bill.

The alternative, unless my amendment carries, is that we must carry on with half of the urban area being served by the West Lincoln Hydro-Electric Commission, a municipal commission, and the other half of that contiguous urban area, inside the same urban service area, being served by Ontario Hydro's rural system.

I suggest to the government that it makes no sense whatsoever to have those kinds of conditions existing when a bill is now before us to establish hydro commissions.

I also say to the parliamentary assistant that the reason given in the debate on second reading of this bill for not extending these boundaries almost amounts to blackmail against the municipality and totally misrepresents what I said in this House at that time.

After I spoke, in his reply he said: "I think it's also fair to say that there's no doubt, leaving it this way with the existing boundaries with the ultimate choice—and the choice will be local to expand to the boundaries of the municipality—yes, it would ultimately put, I would think, some pressures on the council to look at that, and possibly ultimately make a decision. But if they always knew that they could just expand it another street or two would they really ever take on that task and take on that responsibility? No, they would turn around and blame it all on Ontario Hydro for raising their rate levels higher than the local percentage increases, which as I mentioned in terms of numbers has to be inevitable”

First of all, he infers that my amendment which I had spoken to would give the municipality the right at any time to take in another street or two, and of course that is not the case. Once this bill is passed and once my amendment is passed, as the parliamentary assistant well knows, there will be no further changes in those boundaries unless this government, or the government that happens to sit here at that time, brings in further amendments. There will be no changes. This is not the old system. All we're proposing here is we set realistic boundaries at this time on those hydro commissions within the basically rural municipalities.

Second, when he states that he thinks it would put some pressures on councils to look at that and possibly ultimately make a decision, ultimately make the decision to go out to the limits of their boundaries, he must be aware that several of these municipalities will never get to that state, at least in this century, and as I have said before perhaps not for many decades after. Would the honourable member suggest—does he know the Smithville area—how many decades he would think it would be before that municipality could afford to take in all the rural hydro systems? I don't know whether the honourable member has looked at this report, but if he looks at it and reads the estimates of the costs to that municipality if it did that, where rates would have to increase by 30 or 40 per cent even above the rural hydro rates, he must be aware that they cannot possibly do that anytime in the foreseeable future. With the slower population growth generally, this is going to be true of all of those five municipalities within the Niagara region.

So I just say to the parliamentary assistant, and to the members on my right, that it does make a lot of sense if we are establishing, within a rural municipality, a commission to service the urban area that it should take in all of the urban area as it exists today, not just half of it or two thirds of it.

Certainly if we were establishing new commissions now and there were no commissions in existence, he wouldn't think of drawing the lines where he is drawing them under this bill. He couldn't possibly think of doing that. He would take a realistic look at it, consult with the municipalities and say: “What portion of your municipality should be within that hydro commission boundary?”

I say there are going to be real problems and real resentment if this amendment is not passed, because people who have looked forward to getting within those urban hydro serviced areas when the freeze was lifted, now find they are going to be left out, now find their rates will continue to be 20 or 30 per cent higher than those across the street from them; even though they are paying the same sewer rates and the same water rates and they have curbs and gutters and are totally urbanized for all other purposes. They are still going to be connected to the rural hydro.

The final point, Mr. Chairman, a final argument that I want to make for this, is that it makes eminent sense not to set up two systems side by side, two full systems to serve an urban area which is divided. It makes good, economic sense to have one transformer station, one system serving that area. So I would ask the members to give favourable consideration to an amendment which simply gives the option to those five municipalities to take a look at the urban areas within their municipalities and see what is the logical hydro service area for each municipality.

There's no compulsion in my amendment, as you will recognize. They can determine, if they wish, to stay with the old area. I suggest none of them will, and that's one reason they should be consulted. But it gives them the option to stay with the old area, to move out to what is a reasonable service area or to take in the whole municipality.

I am thoroughly convinced this is what the municipality wants there. I am thoroughly convinced it makes sense. I am thoroughly convinced that when the government has backed down on the position it has, that it is going to allow two authorities to provide hydro within one municipality, there should be some regional division of the area that is going to be served, not the rural hydro serving a rural area plus half the urban area and then the urban hydro commission just half that urban area. It makes no sense whatsoever and that's the reason there's an amendment before you to make a logical division in those five municipalities.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to the amendment proposed by the member for Welland-Thorold. The new section included is section (c) and I make reference to section 17(a). The only change I see in this amendment is that under (a) it is "may direct the commission established by section 2 in respect of the municipality to commence on a day specified by the bylaw distribution and supply of power in all areas of the municipality." The amendment that has been proposed is "may direct before the first day of October, 1979, a commission established by section 2 in respect of municipalities to commence on the day specified in the bylaw the distributions and supply of power in some areas of the municipality."

There may be a difference there, but the intent of the bill could indicate we want the regional reconstruction of Hydro there to remain status quo. I suggest to the member for Welland-Thorold perhaps he should move an amendment in reference to the explanatory note that the customers in Wainfleet will continue to be served by Ontario Hydro until the council of the township of Wainfleet establish a hydro-electric commission for the township. Until the commission is established, that council is required to review the distribution and supply of power and the township at least once every three years. I suppose there are difficulties in a number of municipalities that have been mentioned—Grimsby, Lincoln, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Pelham; perhaps there are even other areas—West Lincoln for example, there is a problem.

I think it was mentioned in one of our discussions with the minister in Thorold where there may be some difficulties in extending the hydro utilities out into the rural areas. That could cause considerable cost, providing that service out there by the local utility.

I would go along with an amendment to the whole bill in the sense that if you are going to move in that direction, then perhaps we need further assessment and review of the situation in these outlying areas. I don't think the bill should be held up on the basis that this amendment is going to solve the problems. After all, if you look at the purpose of regional government it is to enable municipalities to become more viable.

I suggest if we are going to use that term "more viable," then municipalities should be able to handle the adjustment as it relates to restructuring hydro utilities in the community. Sure, it is going to be an additional cost to many customers in these areas. If you go back to the establishment of regional government, Mr. Chairman, we had what was called proposed uniformity in water and sewer rates—that does not take place because a different cost is assessed to each municipality and cost may vary at a considerable charge to that locality.

No matter how we move into restructuring hydro-electric utilities within the region as proposed under this bill, we are not going to have uniformity in the cost of electrical energy to the customers because there is a different need, a different environment, from one municipality to another. We will never attain that goal under a single tier or under the proposal in this bill that it remain at the local municipality level.

I am not quite clear on "some areas." I think the mover of the amendment should spell out just what municipalities he is discussing under "some areas." "Some areas" could refer to almost every municipality because it means there is going to be an additional cost to these areas.

As I discussed in the original debate, in the second stage of the debate here, I was concerned about the cost of adjustment, the capital debt cost to these municipalities. There are some cases where municipalities may have difficulty in financing the scheme. I look to the member's assistance there. Perhaps this is one area we should be taking a close look at, whether some of these municipalities can afford the change from rural Ontario Hydro to a public utility hydro commission. I suggest they may run into some difficulties but I don't think it is any reason that the bill should not be moved forward. Maybe the member for Welland-Thorold will consider including these municipalities with the township of Wainfleet which was excluded from this particular bill pending review in one or two or three years. Maybe we should be looking at that as a possible solution if these municipalities are going to be severely hit on cost.

I don't like to see customers charged too much for the use of hydro-electricity in the area. My secretary in Toronto tells me that her Toronto bill is similar to mine in rural Sherkston. I am a customer of Ontario Hydro and there isn't much difference between the cost of my hydro and the cost to some hydro users in Metropolitan Toronto. I wish the member would be more specific as to the meaning of "some areas."

It is unfortunate that perhaps through poor planning over the past number of years, we have allowed urban sprawl to take place in a number of communities. It has happened in almost every community within the region. Through that type of planning, or no planning at all, we have to suffer the cost today; somebody has to bear the cost, particularly that municipality, I guess, until the matter can be corrected.

So I would like to have further explanation of just what the member means by "some areas" of municipalities. Does he wish it to remain as status quo? Are we going to have two hydro commissions in a municipality, such as the local utility and Ontario Hydro, continuing with their present program? I interpret this amendment to mean it would maintain the status quo.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Chairman, I spoke at length on my opposition to the principle of this bill on second reading. I do not intend to go over old ground again. The member for Welland-Thorold has proposed an amendment to the bill which is a substantial amendment. It is my impression he supported the bill in principle when it was put forth, but now wishes to make a major change in it.

In my earlier comments I said I would not be more fair to provide an option to local municipalities to adjust local boundaries. I certainly felt there was some logic in the member's comments along this line and I share some of that logic, bearing in mind boundaries and these commissions were frozen many years ago and a lot has happened since that time. Yet, in the bill as proposed we are sticking either to the option of the boundaries that existed prior to the 1970 regional government or, indeed, a commission which would take over the whole of any given municipality.

For those in the House who do not see the import of this, if they are not in a constituency of a regional nature, municipalities have of course grown tremendously in size and they are not the same municipalities to any extent they were in 1970. Therefore, they are not being given very good options under this bill, as was mentioned in the discussion on second reading.

I feel the small municipalities and the Hydro restructuring committee tried to identify this problem and, without being parochial, finally opted for a two-county system accepting a regional system on which the government nevertheless turned its back. I made it quite clear I feel an injustice has been done to the smaller municipalities which, because of many constraints placed upon them in the last 10 years, including a higher standard for water and sewers, and urban area boundaries in the Niagara region, even if they were growth minded, do not have the options for growth they had prior to regional government and when they were able to fund their own sewage and water systems which now have to be funded, processed, approved, administered and owned by the region.

While I say I feel badly for the rural areas in my riding, it disturbs me to want to be a part of making things worse for rural areas all over Ontario by setting a precedent which I fear might be set here and held up for display, if indeed, the member for Welland-Thorold had his amendment carried. Actually, in the final analysis, maybe the only fair way to treat such a basic commodity would be to have equal rates all over Ontario for Ontario Hydro, as we now try to do with heating oil and gasoline. We do this by licence breaks and by any means we can, so basic essentials such as these are provided fairly and at equitable cost to everyone in the province.

The government obviously picks up the tab for a lot of these special costs. They seem to have a great difficulty making the mental leap of providing this basic service on an equal cost to everyone in the province. The government, in my view, particularly in regional Niagara, has abandoned its concepts and principles of broad sharing of basic costs over a large area for the benefit of all.

As I pointed out earlier, the small extra cost it would have meant to the urban areas in Niagara to have permitted a regional structure would not have amounted to much. But the burden placed on the smaller municipalities as a result of this two-tier setup is substantial in the areas with less income, greater distances to cover, and all sorts of difficult municipal costs to face in this time.

I would like to see a whole redressing of this matter. I think Ontario Hydro, to its credit, in the earlier years recognized that electricity was so basic it should be available to all. Indeed, great efforts have been made to have it made available to all. We don't give cheaper power just because you are close to a hydro-electric site, or because you are near to a nuclear site. The basic rate structure across the province is, at least, equalized now. I suggest that hydro is in the category of those other items that are indeed needed to keep us warm and to permit us to travel in this province.

Electrical energy may be a much more important aspect of travelling in this province as the electric car becomes a reality in five, 10 or 15 years from now. At that time, will the government say that the fellow who lives in a small town should have to pay three times as much to run his automobile as the person who lives in a city?

There is not equality in this bill, and therefore I am not happy with it. However, I don't want to make it any worse for the rural areas than it already is, because of the concern for areas that have not faced restructuring, and for obviously what would happen under the member's amendment where one community after another would reach out and seize land, to the detriment of the rural areas surrounding it.

For my part, I think the whole thing has been poorly handled but I can't support the amendment for broader reasons.

Mr. Kerrio: I have to think that when we talk hydro, Niagara Falls might immediately come to mind. Historically, one of the major power plants in North America, perhaps in the world, was at Niagara Falls. While some members might discuss and debate the equality of costs to various people, when Hydro was first structured the rates were much lower in those areas immediately surrounding the generating plants in Niagara Falls, Ontario, and in Niagara Falls, New York.

There was, therefore, a great influx of industry to those areas, which meant many job opportunities as well as other opportunities. But, by the same token, the people in the area were subject to much inconvenience, with the canal cutting right through the centre of the city, and with other tax problems on very, very costly land used by Ontario Hydro.

I am bringing these matters into focus, because it becomes very obvious that when you equalize the rates and leave those people in a given area with all of those inconveniences, while the rates may be one thing, if you equalize it right across the province there are those people who would suffer the consequences of all the inconveniences in one locale.

I don't know if we could ever talk about having equalized rates across the province. One way or another, there will be some digression from proper equalization of the rates. It also may lead to the problem governments are having, and that is, when one tries to be all things to all people it is going to cost us more to do everything we do in everyday life. While on the one hand it might be very important that we try to equalize the rates across the province, there may be some impracticalities.

There are those people who prefer to be living out in rural areas—and we all know it costs more money to string lines to take power out there. If those people have some advantages we do not have in the city, it may not be worth our attempting to make such equalization of rates that we would give all these services to those people who move out from centralized areas, because in that way sewers, water, electricity, whatever one mentions, could cost fourfold or fivefold, and ultimately we would not have an equalization of rates; we would have the people in the central area subsidizing those people who want to live that nice life in the country. Therefore, I am not going to support the amendment to the bill.

I would like also to suggest that it is quite obvious there are those from different parts of the peninsula itself who, for different reasons, look at the bill through different eyes. I, for one, had proposed an amendment, which had been supported by the city of Niagara Falls, both the rural area and the urban area. I had brought that support here for an amendment.

Mr. Chairman: But that amendment is not before the committee.

Mr. Kerrio: Subsequently, the city has seen fit to change and now would support the bill as it stands. I thought I should say that so the Chairman would understand that I am talking to the bill and to the amendment.

In any event, I would like to read into the record one thing that was mentioned by the member for Welland-Thorold on May 1. He said, at page 1484 of Hansard: "Regardless of whether amendments are adopted in the House in the committee stage or whatever takes place, we have to pass this bill this spring and get on with the job, regardless of how the structure is set up." To expedite that kind of thinking, we would be very wise not to support this amendment and to get on with passing of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Erie asked for clarification of one word. I think the word was "some." I am sure the member for Welland-Thorold could do that briefly.

Mr. Swart: I can, Mr. Chairman. I would have thought the amendment was fairly clear. The word "some," in "some areas," leaves the decision with the municipality as to which areas they would attach to the hydro commission boundaries. Normally, we would expect that this would be the urban area, which is now in rural Hydro, surrounding the urban area served by the commission. But that would be left up to the local municipality to determine.

Just one final word: I would point out that this is all subject to the approval of Ontario Hydro, as provided in the first part of this bill.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate generally the support received from various parts of the House. I would like to touch upon and respond to some of the points made by the member for Welland-Thorold in his proposed amendment.

As I think everybody knows, and as was discussed quite widely in second reading of this bill, the amendment is completely contrary to the principles of restructuring.

As we have already heard in this discussion and debate today and in the discussion and debate on second reading, there are arguments on both sides as to whether restructuring should have taken place on a regional basis. I think it is safe and probably fairly accurate to say that from a straight rational, economic point of view a regional utility was probably the best.

Having said that—and some people did recognize and support that view—it was the government's feelings, which I would suggest was strongly supported by many members opposite as well as many members on this side, that stretching regionalization that one step further was not acceptable to most of the elected representatives, whether they were provincial or municipal representatives, or to the people they represented. On that basis, the government changed the restructuring guidelines to accommodate lower-tier restructuring, which is accommodated and reflected in Bill 29, which is before us today.

As for the particular amendment before the House, the member for Welland-Thorold suggest they have a shot at this only once; they may or may not do anything. We're only taking about five municipalities and it's neither here nor there.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman and honourable members, that that's not really the point and I think we all recognize it. If it were allowed in this particular piece of legislation, even on a once-only basis as put forward by the member, we would have very great difficulty denying that same request if it came forward from the multiplicity of municipalities in this province, both within regional areas as well as outside regional areas, which now have a public utilities commission.

I don't know what justification we could use to say "No, we did it for a few municipalities in Niagara, but they're a little different because the member for Welland-Thorold said they were a little different, and we can't do it for you." That's not logical at all.

I think the member made some reference to points I made on second reading. I stand behind those statements. I won't make them again. They've already been summarized and read into the record for a second time. But he did make some reference to "blackmail" to the municipalities—to the municipal council at some future point in time, as a matter of fact in three-year intervals, looking to the economics, to the justification, to the feasibility of expanding their then-contained area to their municipal boundary. That's not blackmail, it's protection for the rural hydro users, both then and for the future. If at some point in time the municipal council sees that it is feasible, economically and otherwise, to expand to their municipal boundaries, they will do so.

Mr. Swart: What you're saying is, we won't let you have it the way you want it; you've got to take it the way we want it or nothing.

Mr. Ashe: It's amazing, Mr. Chairman, that the member didn't make reference to another municipality he represents, the municipality of Thorold. He approached that municipal council and said, "I've got an amendment here that might serve your purposes too. Perhaps you don't want to expand to your boundaries." I'm very pleased to say that that municipal council expressed the view that they were representing a community and wanted to create interest from boundary to boundary within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Swart: They felt they could afford it but some of these others can't.

Mr. Ashe: They indicated to the member that they were quite aware of the economics involved and were standing by their original decision, which I would suggest to him was a very fair and a very equitable one.

Mr. Kerrio: Who represents that area?

Mr. Ashe: It received pretty fair coverage in the news media and I hope that all residents in that area saw what their local council decided—

Mr. Haggerty: They wanted a single tier.

Mr. Ashe: —and what their local member was suggesting.

Mr. Kerrio: Do they have a member down there?

Mr. Ashe: Some would say so.

The thing that makes this particular amendment impractical and, in fact, impossible, has already been alluded to and touched on very eloquently by many of the members opposite. The member is talking about load skimming. Ultimately, he's talking about further financial pressures on the remaining Ontario Hydro customers throughout the province. Keeping in mind his argument that we're only talking about a few municipalities, which I hope I've discussed adequately, this is impossible. We couldn't do that, because eventually we would end up with all the utilities expanding their boundaries to suit their convenience, leaving the rest of the system throughout parts of Ontario exceedingly on a growing costly basis.

Mr. Swart: Give the urban dwellers the same as everybody else gets.

Mr. Ashe: We all would be concerned if that could or did happen, but it shouldn't happen and won't be allowed to happen.

The other member who took part in the debate, the members for Erie, Lincoln and Niagara Falls, discussed both sides of these issues. We've heard eloquent argument on both sides relative to regionalization versus local restructuring. We heard about the various equalities, both ways, of having one rate across the province and so having a different rate close to the source of generation. There is no easy answer, as I think all members would quite readily agree.

Basically, three different kinds of rates affect residential consumers. There is the wholesale rate to the utilities which then varies, depending on the level of service, municipality to municipality; then throughout the rest of Ontario there are the two levels of what are known as rural hydro rates.

Granted, some of those so-referred-to rural areas are indeed not rural areas; I do not think anybody is trying to suggest that they are. What we are saying is that when people move into those areas—and I think this was alluded to by one of the honourable members opposite—they know some of the pluses and minuses of choosing where to reside.

One of the pluses is the amenities that are there: the geography, the larger lots and what have you. One of the negatives in a particular municipality may be a higher hydro rate. I happen to be one of those who pays a higher hydro rate, I may say, in a very urbanized area. But I knew what it was when we went there. The particular municipality where I live is prepared to go the full route in creating a utility commission from boundary to boundary, because it is economically possible to do so.

I hope I have covered, at least to some degree, most of the points that were made. Again, I hope all members of the committee will vote against this particular amendment, because it would make a farce of not only this piece of legislation but also the future of the public utilities commissions, the boundaries and service areas of those commissions and, more importantly, the consumers in the province who are served by Ontario Hydro. It would just make an impossible situation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment to section 4 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 5 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two brief remarks I would like to make before we commence clause-by-clause review of the bill.

I would remind members that since the inception of the Labour Relations Act, and indeed of legislated labour law in this province, section 63 in particular has taken away the legal right of parties to a contract to withdraw services. In addition to that, under section 37(2), we have intervened and required that the parties shall have a grievance arbitration procedure within their collective agreements. Indeed, we have even specified that, if none is included in that agreement, a model grievance arbitration procedure shall be considered to be part of any collective agreement.

It therefore behooves us to follow the course of events and the effectiveness of that interventionist act. If we feel there is any suggestion of disrepute falling upon the grievance arbitration procedure, it is my view that we have an obligation to endeavour to correct it so that the procedure sets out to do what it was originally intended to do, and that it sets out to do what it was originally intended to do, and that it sets out to do without undue delay or undue cost.

By intervening with the proposed legislation that we have introduced today, that is not say there are not good grievance arbitration procedures in many collective agreements. I say in all candour to members of the House that I feel very strongly that those good and sound grievance arbitration procedures that exist in many collective agreements will not be changed by the introduction of this bill. Rather, it will encourage the parties to improve existing agreements that in our view are not responding satisfactorily to the needs that exist in the industrial society. During the course of the procedures today, I will be introducing two or three amendments and on those occasions I'd like to speak to them.

Mr. Van Horne: In response to the minister's comments and also in deference to some predecessors from my party who were involved in the initial discussion of the collective bargaining process here in Ontario—and I go back a few decades when I say that—I would like to make some observations about this bill. I do so under the following headings: Past history; the perceived need; the events of the last month or so; and reference to some amendments that our party would like to put forward.

I don't think there is any question—and I'll repeat the comment I made on April 24—that our party is in general agreement with the theme which supports the need for an arbitration process that is good for all sections of the labour movement. There is no quarrel with that. In so far as past history is concerned, I indicated in my first statement that our party was very involved with the introduction of legislation encouraging collective bargaining in Ontario with the Collective Bargaining Act of 1943. We are proud of that involvement and proud of what our predecessors did.

As for the perceived need, I have not seen or heard any ground swell of requests from the labour field. Rather, this bill was brought to us by a ministry which, in my view, is intervening in the process to a point where it is almost obstructing the process. We weren't apprised of any great demand from those smaller unions or those people who were adversely affected by the Labour Relations Act as it now stands. So I would question the perceived need for this legislation.

The third point I would like to make is that during this past month or six weeks we have seen some interesting happenings. First, the bill was introduced; second, there was an indication that perhaps a second reading and no committee involvement would happen as a matter of routine, if all parties concurred.

As I indicated earlier in April, I was not that well versed in labour matters and determined to seek some input from professionals, i.e., from arbitrators, from senior management people, from professionals in the schools of law, and, not last or least, from those people involved in the labour movement, that is, in the ranks and at the administrative level.

We did inquire and, in reply, we got some 20 answers, either written or over the phone, indicating that nobody felt this legislation was needed. When I made reference to this on second reading, there was some criticism put my way from both of the other parties. I would submit to them that between that time and now I have sought more support information that would help to convince me that this is good legislation. To this point, I have received only two indications that this legislation is very sorely needed. On the other hand, I have received an additional 18 communications, making a total of some 38 communications, suggesting that generally speaking, Bill 25 is not needed.

I provide that as information to the members. I am not using it necessarily to build a strong case against the legislation. It's worth noting that the apparent intent of this bill, expressed by the minister in the statement he made when the legislation was introduced, to speed up the process and to reduce the cost—those are the two main themes he presented to us—is good; those are good intentions. We can't quarrel with them. But the majority of people who have contacted me and with whom I have spoken in the labour negotiation business, both in management and labour, have indicated pretty strongly that they worked hard to come up with an agreement or agreements over the years, that they understand each other and are prepared to work out their problems themselves. They perceive Bill 25, in spite of its good intentions, to be further governmental intrusion.

So, Mr. Chairman, I repeat what I said in the beginning; while our party and I personally agree in principle that arbitration be speeded up and that costs be reduced, we seriously question further intrusion and therefore will make an amendment or amendments to try to change this bill to accommodate those feelings.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will you put the first amendment? Actually, we are not debating the principle of the bill here as I believe you have just been doing. Perhaps I should have intervened earlier, but I understand you have an amendment on section 1. Would you please put that amendment?

Mr. Van Horne: I wasn't sure, Mr. Chairman, if the amendments that were going—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I just find out the question being raised by the member for Hamilton East?

Mr. Mackenzie: I am wondering on procedures inasmuch as the minister has had brief comments and so has the Liberal critic—is that the intent? Because if it is, there are a few words I want to say on the bill as well. I don't think you can have two of them and cut off the third.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You are quite right and I will not do so. I thought the minister was going to make a few comments about the amendments he wished to make and I have certainly allowed the member for London North to proceed and, in fairness, I must allow you the same privilege—I hope not for the same amount of time.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, under section 1 of the Labour Relations Act I think you have a fair amount of leeway in any event and I certainly welcome this bill as a positive step in the right direction. I would have preferred the government to go all the way and adopt the construction union grievance procedures as in section 112a and I don't think it would have been as costly as the minister seems to feel.

It is interesting to note that once that procedure was established, there was no great increase in the number of cases handled under 112a. Indeed, figures from the deputy minister indicate that in 1976-77 there were 273 cases; in 1977-78, 264; in 1978-79, 238. So the argument that we would see a tremendous increase in cases just didn't come about. However, we are not getting 112a so I think Bill 25 is the best thing we can hope for, hopefully with some very minor changes.

It's useful, in view of the long wait for this legislation and in view of the rather frantic and often misleading opposition to the bill, to go briefly into why this bill and the particular sections in it are before us.

Under the current system of grievance arbitration in Ontario, it is true that some unions have worked out a relatively good system, but many of them have not—and justice delayed is justice denied. Justice delayed also leads to increased tensions on the shop floor and these, in turn, lead to further grievances. If one sees the pile-up of grievances in some of the major contract negotiations, in this province, one will know why this kind of legislation is desperately needed.

To use only the example that I am most aware of—and there are any number of figures; I am not sure exactly who my friend from the Liberal Party was talking to when he said there was no need for a single arbitrator in 345 cases presented—there was an industrial inquiry commission on arbitration for the very purpose of dealing with complaints of the labour movement. In my own union, the Steelworkers, the time from the date of the grievance to the award, for a single arbitrator, has been averaging 187 days, with the range being from 58 to 398 days; for a board it is 335 days, with the range being from 27 to 1,408 days; the overall average is 317 days. In discharge cases, 15 per cent of all appeals were decided in six months, 43 per cent took six months to one year, and 41 per cent took more than a year.

The chances of a worker's reinstatement drop sharply the longer the time for the arbitration. Even the most cynical anti-labour person knows that the person who suffers more in a discharge case is the worker who has bills to pay, family to support and a house to keep; not the corporation that is involved. There are many more figures, but we do not need to go into them.

Apart from the delays, there is the question of costs—and I wish that had been outlined a little more clearly in the discussions we have had. If you are lucky, you might deal in the $350 to $400 range—and that is if you are very lucky; in fact, $800 to $1,000 or $1,100 a day is more likely the cost.

There is no justice, even for small locals of a major union, if they cannot carry out their basic function of protecting the worker and seeing that he gets his day in court because they simply cannot afford the cost. I have had cases brought to me on that count; I do not know who is talking to my friend in the Liberal Party.

The arbitration system was designed as a fair replacement for the strike as no-strike provisions were made mandatory in collective agreements in Ontario. If we were going to have this, a need for means of resolving disputes was necessary as well as a means of justice in the work place, for the worker on the job.

The original intent and the specific provisions of this bill were that the arbitration system should be a relatively cheap, quick, simple and accessible means of resolving disputes. In the present state of affairs, that is not happening. The byproduct of the arbitration system that has evolved is that the arbitrators and arbitration boards are generally stating in lengthy details the reasons for the decision, often accompanied by a detailed review of the facts as well as the legal principles on which they base their conclusions. Dissents have been equally lengthy in many cases; the reasons for the dissents have often formed the basis for applications to the courts to quash or reverse the decisions.

While it is true that arbitrators over the years have stated that awards have no binding force on future arbitrations, the search for precedents was and is a constant one.

The basic concept that the arbitration process would provide a quick, simple and accessible means of settling disputes has been lost along the way in many cases. With more than 37 volumes of LACs now, we need more expertise and more costs just to compete in this particular field.

All of this makes a mockery of the criticisms that we have been getting for this particular bill: the arguments that the bill allows the collective bargaining process to be bypassed, thereby reducing its efficiency and leading to a deterioration in employee-employer relations and increased public expense, or represents further government intrusion into an area where private interests are best equipped to make and manage the situation. None of these arguments holds true; indeed, the reverse is probably the case in almost every case.

One of the amendments I have seen—I do not know if the same one is being moved; we will get to it a little later in the discussion—is based on the argument that the bill should be put forward only as an alternative that the parties may jointly agree to use as they see fit. I do not know exactly where my Liberal colleague got the amendment, but he could find it in almost exactly those terms in the brief from the mining association.

I also know that, if that kind of an amendment went through, the people who would be hurt, who would bear the brunt of negotiated pressure to reject the bill, are the small locals, the people right now who need this kind of protection; and the real fight then would switch to that of trying to negotiate it into the legislation, and, boy, I can see the difficulties one would have in some cases like that.

I note that some of the labour arbitrators argue that some of the delays are as a result of interplay between company and union. I think that is true. Unions have to bear part of the blame for some of the delays. But I can tell members from personal experience that in many cases it is because the time costs and formalities are themselves such a deterrent and, because they have had so many bitter experiences with the long delays and the costs in achieving justice that they hold up the grievance procedure in the hope of reaching some kind of a settlement with management without going the arbitration route.

I think the briefs we are seeing avoid the fact that collective bargaining is an adversarial relationship and that at best a small local, even a small local within a big union, is not necessarily the match for a major company. I found it amusing when I read in one of the briefs that one of the companies said the grievance procedure clauses should not be interfered with as they were finally acceptable after 25 years of negotiations. If it takes 25 years to arrive at an acceptable method of handling something as vital as a worker's grievance, then it bloody well should be interfered with.

I trust that the minister will not delay in producing the fee structure, which I regret is not available. I also trust we will have an assurance that he is prepared to bring in amendments, say a year or 18 months down the road, if we find some provisions of this particular bill are not working properly. I also trust we will see some concrete programs to train and supply an additional quantity of arbitrators, which is going to be one of the concerns of the people who are dealing with the bill.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I want to say we have one very short amendment to section 37a, following subsection 7. We will deal with that when we reach that point in the bill.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Van Horne moves that section 37a(1) of the Labour Relations Act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by striking out "notwithstanding the arbitration provision in a collective agreement or deemed to be included in a collective agreement under section 37" in the first, second and third lines and inserting in lieu thereof "except where a collective agreement states that this subsection does not apply."

Mr. Van Horne: I would say a few words on this and in doing so give at least a partial rebuttal to the New Democratic labour critic, the member for Hamilton East. He indicated he was not sure where an amendment of this nature might originate. I would submit that in searching around within our caucus discussion and with the assistance of our research people we were able to find that in legislation passed fairly recently in British Columbia—and I believe at the time there was a New Democratic Party involved with the government in British Columbia, so I am rather surprised the member is not familiar with this—section 96 does permit an opting-out process.

In pursuing the legislation that exists in British Columbia, we were able to find out that the provision it has had in effect for the last five or six years has not caused too many problems, if any. On that ground alone, I think we are able to say there is a precedent and that if we wanted to add to it the Ontario flavour, we could equally support this kind of amendment. We therefore proposed this.

I would add, in supporting the amendment, it is viewed by some that the intervention that is proposed under section 37, although it may be effective in the short run, could perhaps be damaging or not so effective in the long run.

To refer to comments I made earlier about the process we have developed in Ontario, the process of arriving at a satisfactory collective agreement wherein both sides are happy and both sides are prepared to work out their problems, I have to wonder if this kind of legislation we're looking at today won't have some adverse effect on both sides.

The third question I have to ask is about the cost, if all parties to collective agreements across the province are going to have access to the new arbitration process which is really being suggested here. We obviously are going to have to have more and better trained arbitrators. How much is it going to cost? For openers, we don't even know how many there will be. It's pretty difficult to put a handle on the cost.

In presenting a private member's bill last Thursday, a bill I thought about for two years—that is Bill 69—I did take the liberty of looking through the library to find some evidence of compendium information on various bills the government was bringing forth. In the case of this piece of legislation the compendium information consists of a variety of booklets of information—the Kelly report and other things. It's so bulky that only one was provided and it was found in the Clerk's office.

In looking through that I didn't find any indication of how much this piece of legislation is going to cost the taxpayers of Ontario. There was no indication at all. Perhaps the minister could inform us, as he makes some replies to these comments, if any thought has been given to cost.

In summary I would have to think the amendment that had been put forward should be acceptable. It does allow opting out and would, in my view, see that those parties who are content with the agreement they've been able to reach over the years or over this past year—those people who put their minds to the task—would be unencumbered by Bill 25 and we would then see Bill 25 apply to only those who would see it otherwise as a process which might assist them.

I would leave my comments at that point, hoping to hear in reply from the minister.

Mr. Mackenzie: I'll be very brief. We intend to oppose this Liberal amendment. If the parties are content and can reach that kind of an agreement there's no reason why they can't continue with their present procedures now. It's a right that's there if one of the parties feels aggrieved and feels it is not getting justice under the present system or feels it can't afford the expense of going through, if the parties are not able to reach agreement, the arbitration procedures and costs.

I would like the right to opt out of a good number of pieces of legislation myself if I didn't like them. I think it's a very dangerous precedent. I think it has the effect really of gutting this bill. I think it's important that it's not supported.

Mr. Bounsall: If I could make a very brief comment. This section is a permissive section any way. It's of the type you can have in a collective agreement where they may request the minister to go to a single arbitrator. I don't see that you need a clause allowing the parties to a collective agreement to opt out of something, which is a "may" request to the minister in any event. I would say it's a most unusual amendment in that sense because the changes here are of a permissive nature anyway. As I understand it, an agreement needs to be reached by parties in approaching the minister asking for the single arbitrator, in any event. I don't see any sense of the opting out.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I just have a few brief remarks.

I'd like to preface them by re-emphasizing what I said in my opening remarks for the member for London North who is chatting with that sterling fellow from Haldimand-Norfolk, or whatever it is.

Mr. Roy: Great member.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Fine man. I appreciate some of the reasons he's introduced this amendment. I can understand some of the concerns some people have. But I'd like to assure him, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, that section 63 and section 37(2) already intervene in the collective bargaining process, first of all by requesting there shall not be any withdrawal of services during the term of the contract and, secondly, by requesting there shall be a grievance arbitration procedure in a collective agreement. If there isn't, it inserts a model one. Surely that's a firm example of intervention in the collective bargaining process to the most marked degree.

What I've said today to you is because of that intervention, surely, we have an obligation to assess how the grievance arbitration procedure works. With the greatest of respect for the member, and he knows I have that for him, I would submit he is in error if he thinks there aren't problems out there. He is quite correct when he assumes many companies have grievance arbitration procedures that are working very well. Frankly, when they are working well and they've been agreed upon by the parties, I for the life of me cannot see why this bill, which provides a permissive alternative, will cause a bargaining agent to change his direction from the known pathway they've agreed upon to the unknown permissive pathway the minister has offered as an option.

During that collective agreement they have worked on for whatever number of years, they've agreed upon an arbitrator; and they may have agreed upon a great variety of other things. Why would the bargaining agent, the same person, be put under such unusual pressure to accept a ministerial option which, as the member said, is permissive that he would suddenly back out of something that they have negotiated freely and happily and with which everybody is pleased? I just don't follow that logic. I am firmly convinced those companies that have sound grievance arbitration procedures will not feel the effect or impact of this bill for one minute. If they do, then I would suggest it's time to get back to the bargaining table and renegotiate the grievance arbitration procedure.

The member made some reference to some British Columbia legislation. I don't want to get into discussions about that because, frankly, if you're going to take a little excerpt from the British Columbia Labour Relations Act, I think one should review the whole act because there are a great variety of things in the labour act in British Columbia which I'd be pleased to discuss with the member at any time. To take one single section and say that's how they do it there, has to be taken in the context of the whole labour act.

As to the cost, as I mentioned in the act, the question of fees will be settled by regulation. It will be settled after consultation and input from all interested parties; the legal profession, the arbitrators, the labour movement, and management so we can endeavour to reach what is considered and agreed upon by all to be a fair and reasonable fee. As to the cost in terms of the government, clearly, that's the reason we chose this, rightly or wrongly. I think it's right not to get involved in the major public expenditure for this sort of problem. That is a problem with which we feel that parties should deal.

I can assure the member the costs presently involved in the Labour-Management Arbitration Commission will virtually be the same, barring the actual final figures which, of course, can't be arrived upon until the costs are put to Management Board for review. This member and this House have my assurance the cost we now perceive will be very little above the present costs for the Labour-Management Arbitration Commission.

As for the presence or absence of arbitrators, Mr. Justice Kelly made it very clear, and I've made it very clear we see it as a very important part of this legislation that we continue to have available the services of that well-trained group of arbitrators who presently exist in the system. Approximately 60 are already there. To say we are suddenly introducing legislation which will confound a group of untrained people is really not fair. The member can go down to the Labour-Management Arbitration Commission today and review the names on the list of people who are arbitrators who have been selected by joint agreement between management and labour. They are a fine, outstanding, able group of people. I have heard of no fear I have heard of that I accept that there will be any dearth of able, talented people willing to continue to perform in the role of arbitrator.

I must oppose the member's amendment because it robs the bill of its very guts. The essence of it is that if there is a good grievance arbitration procedure in place now this bill will not interfere with it. If there isn't, then it will encourage the parties to bargain and get a better one.

Mr. Van Horne: I would go back to the question of cost for just a moment and dispute the minister's suggestion there will be virtually no additional cost. In so far as the arbitrators are concerned perhaps this might be so, but we are not really sure of that. You are guessing, and quite frankly I am guessing. Beyond that, in this legislation we see a new creature, that is the settlement officer.

This is not speaking to the amendment, and if I am out of order I will gladly speak to it later, but we are talking about costs and they are related to this section. Did you intend, when you gave the answer that they would be the same, that the costs be related only to arbitrators, or are you talking about something else when you talk about settlement officers? Is there an additional cost there? You can answer that in due course but I think it is a valid point.

You also suggest there are many, many, many, many—I don't know how many "manys" you threw into your statement—good agreements and many instances wherein this particular Bill 25 might not even be needed.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Several.

Mr. Van Horne: If everything is so good, you might ask the question why do we bother looking at this legislation in the first place? We have heard some arguments, but again expediency and cost are your answers.

The question I put to you again is are you not interfering with the agreements that have presently been established? Are you not interfering with the good relations that have been developed over the years through the honest efforts of those labour people who are representing their fellow workers and the management people who are representing their company? Are you not putting another avenue on stream for those people who may come along in the future? You are dealing with the present and the past, but I would like to take a look down the road to the future. Is there no possibility of some abuse in the negotiating process with this kind of legislation?

Finally, I have to wonder when you question why we would bring this on stream, why there weren't public hearings by the Kelly commission. Submissions were made, granted, but there were no public hearings.

When we deal with this bill it goes from second reading to committee of the whole House. I have to admit in the initial stages I thought this would be the best way of dealing with this legislation. Having received a fair bit of flak over it, I am wondering if it wouldn't have been good to have a hearing through standing committee, rather than committee of the whole House, and let it all be put on the table. In fairness to both sides I don't think that has really happened.

There is a suggestion too that this is sort of a pro-labour bill. I am not suggesting that I am not pro-labour, but I have to submit there are two sides in the negotiating process. I am sure you are aware of the feelings of many of the management people. I don't have to list the 30 or so who contacted me. [5:30]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I hate to prolong this discussion, but let me assure the member once again. My first premise is that the act, by its very nature, already interferes in the collective bargaining process and by interfering we impose upon ourselves an obligation to review how it works. I said that before and I won't bother reiterating it. It's clear that in many situations it wasn't working well and it behooves us to try and correct it.

It's really that simple. There's no nefarious scheme or plot; it's not a pro-labour or an anti-labour bill. It's a bill designed to improve the system, to improve industrial relations, and that's the sole object. I think it's improper and I would hesitate to view the bill as pro-anybody. I think it's pro the system and pro improving relations in the work place.

As to the cost, I wasn't referring to the costs of arbitration. As the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) mentioned, our experience with section 112(a), which deals with the construction industry, hasn't indicated any increase or any significant increase in the number of arbitrations as a result of that process and I would be surprised if in the long run there are any increases here. There may well be some in the first year or two, who can predict? But I think it will get the parties to address themselves to the issue we should all be concerned about, and that's the grievance.

The costs to which I referred are the costs within government. I can't tell you what those costs will be in any finite detail because we still have to go to Management Board over it, but I would suggest that one of the amendments I have introduced will allow as to phase in the process and get a better understanding of it without rushing into any costly endeavours. It will allow us to gain some experience, add staff and do the things which we think would be appropriate in order to correct deficiencies in the system. I continue with my opposition to the member's amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Van Horne's amendment to section 1 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Van Horne moves that section 37a of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(8) Subsection to subsection 9, an arbitrator appointed under subsection 4 shall render his decision in writing without reasons to both parties within seven days of the conclusion of the hearing.

"(9) Where prior to the conclusion of the hearing either party requests reasons, an arbitrator appointed under subsection 4 shall render his decision with reasons in writing within 30 days of the conclusion of the hearing and that subsection 8 of the said section be renumbered as subsection 10."

Mr. Van Horne: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, the bill as proposed by the government attempts to deal with the problem of delay prior to but not following a hearing on the matter. The government failed to impose any limit on the amount of time an arbitrator must take to make an award. Our amendment is consistent with the findings of the joint management labour subcommittee of the Canadian Bar Association, which also recommends that time limits be imposed requiring arbitrators to render a decision within a fixed period of time. I say that in reference to the first of the two sections on which I made an amendment, and I would stop at that point if the other parties wished to reply.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps you would like to continue with the whole amendment.

Mr. Van Horne: I think, Mr. Chairman, that I will refrain from any further comments, because really they are almost identical in both instances.

Mr. Mackenzie: I would just point out, Mr. Chairman, that we will be opposing these amendments. Depending on whether you use ministry or some of the union figures, once a single arbitrator is appointed, from there to the decision averages either 22 or 23 days; I think this item 9 particularly may very well result in some of the decisions taking the full 30 days. In any event, I think it's better to give the legislation a chance to see what will happen rather than put these kind of time restrictions on it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, just a couple of remarks. I think the point the member for Hamilton East made is a valid one. The statistics we have gathered reveal that when a single arbitrator is seized of a grievance arbitration problem, in 81 per cent of cases the decision will be awarded within 30 days, and that's quite a contrast to other situations where there are larger boards. There's a lot to be said though, on paper, for having time limits down; but let's look at other legislation where there are time limits.

For instance, the Police Act has a 60-day time limit. On one occasion there was a case that went to the Supreme Court because the arbitration award did not come down within that 60 days and the courts held that the 60 day time limit was a directive only. You could say we should make it a mandatory time limit. The problem with that is that of course if the arbitration comes back in 31 days with a decision it is null and void and the whole arbitration process has to start over again. In most situations single arbitrators have dealt with by far the greatest majority of problems within 30 days, therefore a reasonable time limit would be a directive only, but, if you make it mandatory you will force a few cases to go through the whole arbitrary procedure again.

In view of what we feel will be a closer relationship to the whole process once it's a part of the ministry, I think it's unreasonable at this time. I am not saying it won't have to come one day, but I have faith in the process and the figures and the people involved and the facts that I have outlined. I would consider that those are two unnecessary amendments at this time and I would oppose them.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Van Horne's amendment will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East, on what section?

Mr. Mackenzie: Section 1 dealing with section 37a of the act; which, depending on how the vote goes on the other amendments, would involve a new subsection 7. The amendment that I would move is a very simple one.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mackenzie moves that section 37a of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by adding the following subsection:

"(8) Upon the agreement of the parties, the arbitrator shall deliver an oral decision forthwith or as soon as practical without giving his reasons in writing therefor."

The existing subsection 8 will be renumbered subsection 9.

Mr. Mackenzie: The purpose of that amendment, Mr. Chairman, is simply that there are a sizeable number of agreements that could be resolved right on the spot at the hearing if the parties were agreeable to a verbal decision of the arbitrator and it might cut down some of the load substantially.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, it is a reasonable amendment, and it comes partway to meeting some of the concerns of the member for London North. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. Van Horne: I have no objection, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Elgie moves that section 37a of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(10) The minister may establish a list of approved arbitrators and, for the purpose of advising him with respect to persons qualified to act as arbitrators in matters relating to arbitration, the minister may constitute a labour-management advisory committee composed of a chairman to be designated by the minister, and six members, three of whom shall represent employers and three of whom shall represent trade unions, and their remuneration and expenses shall be as the Lieutenant Governor in Council determines.

"(11) This section does not apply to a collective agreement in operation on the day this act comes into force but applies to every collective agreement that is renewed or made after that date.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I have some very brief remarks. The first part of the amendment really does what I intended to do by regulation, but I think it is important that it be spelled out that the selection of arbitrators is something that I feel requires the advice of a labour-management group, and I think that it is important that both of those groups know that I will appreciate their advice in the future, should this amendment pass.

On the second amendment, I think I have already mentioned the thrust of it. It allows us to phase in the act stage by stage so that we can gather together the valuable people who will be needed as we proceed rather than trying, in a rather hurried-up way, to gather together a staff. It will allow us time to do that in a very orderly and appropriate way. It also indicates some of our concern about intruding into the present collective agreements, and it allows the parties to bargain at the expiry of their present contracts to correct any deficiencies they may perceive in their existing grievance arbitration procedure.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the advisory committee part of the amendment is concerned, I am pleased to support that, because I perceive it as a way in which parties may have more input into the process; it is as simple as that, and anything that allows more input is good, in my view.

The other part of the suggested amendment, that is, permitting this to be phased in, as it were, will allow both parties some time to consider revising their procedures so that it does not exceed the limits set out here; that, too, is good. Certainly I feel this is a bit of a concession, and perhaps the anxiety of waiting over these last four weeks and getting a little bit of flak has moved the minister to make this small concession. I do not think there is any question, as originally viewed, if this bill had come into effect, as it obviously would have because our party was the only one that was opposing it in any way, shape or form, there would have been a very strong feeling out in the community that if it became effective right away with agreements that were sitting there it would have been very upsetting to them. This is a concession, I am happy to think, which we might have had some small part in bringing about.

Mr. Mackenzie: I have no problems with section 10 at all and would support it. We have discussed section 11 and will support this amendment as well. I should point out in all fairness that it personally causes me some rather severe reservations. A number of pieces of legislation take effect upon the proclamation. I am not sure that I buy the argument that you need time to phase in legislation. We have waited a long time for some legislation to reduce the delays that seriously affect many people in lengthy or costly arbitration cases.

However, I think this is a positive bill. It is one of the first bills—and for this I commend the minister—that has made an effort to deal with one of the longstanding and severe problems we have had in the labour field. Maybe there are some fears there in terms of the agreements we have in existing collective agreements and in terms of the kind of a panel of arbitrators we are going to have and how the bill is going to work and whether it gets a chance to be eased in or phased in.

It is not the way I would have gone. In trying to understand these fears, however, it may very well be the case that this particular amendment will force the parties that have not been able to reach satisfactory conclusions in the past in the arbitration procedures to sit down and come up with better methods and to do it in the time frame they have before the expiry of their current contracts.

I do want to point out, however, the reason I have some reservations, although I am willing to accept the amendment, is that there are some two-year and there are some three-year contracts around. I suppose at the time this legislation becomes law there is not going to be that large a percentage of the work force involved in three-year contracts, but it does mean if they are not happy with the current procedures, these workers are going to be waiting a fairly long time. I hope what we gain in terms of more acceptance of a rather substantial change in the procedures is worth the costs that may exist to some of those that are locked into fairly long contracts. Having said that, we will support the government amendment.

Mr. Bounsall: Here is where I give the game away. I just wanted to say that I too had some concerns about section 10, but I can understand that there may be some advantages to having a phase-in period for the bill. I gather that more than half of the contracts do come up within the year in any event, so this will be effective for more than half of the contracts. With a bill that is an improvement, I do not like to see a waiting period for those persons who will not have the advantages of it at the same time others will.

In the selection of the list of arbitrators you are being advised by a panel under the other amendment as to who should be arbitrators. Maybe we could well afford to have some experience of the bill's operation before it does apply to everyone in the province, even though I would like to see everyone covered by those positive amendments. It may well be that by the time most people would then use it any procedures or problems that come with introducing these amendments will have been worked out for them to avoid any delays that might come for some of those units in any event. While I am not particularly happy with it, I certainly would not oppose it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I have one further small amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Elgie moves that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

2. Section 96(1) of the act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"96(1) Where a request is made under section 15, section 37(1), or section 37a(1), the minister may refer to the board any questions that arise that in his opinion relate to his authority to make an appointment under any such provision that is mentioned in the reference and the board shall report to the minister a decision on the question."

Hon. Mr. Elgie also moves that the following sections of the bill be renumbered accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: This amendment really adds the reference to section 37(a) in section 96 to allow the minister to refer in case there is any question about his authority to appoint an arbitrator.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 3 to 6 as renumbered, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: We have a number of amendments stacked. I would remind the members that the division bells will ring for up to 10 minutes.

The committee divided on Mr. Swart's amendment to section 4 of Bill 29, which was negatived on the following vote: Ayes 28; nays 62.

Bill 29 reported.

The committee divided on Mr. Van Horne's amendment to section 1 of Bill 25, which was negatived on the following vote: Ayes 23; nays 67.

The committee divided on Mr. Van Horne's further amendment to section 1 of Bill 25, which was negatived on the same vote.

Bill 25, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments and another bill without amendment.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

The House recessed at 6:08 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

MARKHAM AREA SCHOOL NEEDS

182. Mr. Stong: Will the Minister of Education act upon the request of the Community Association for Unionville Secondary Education (CAUSE) to provide a new high school in Unionville? Will the minister review the development applications which provide for approximately 3,000 new homes in Unionville, 2,000 in Risebrough and 3,300 in Markham, the result of which will not only overcrowd both Markham District High School and Thornlea High School, but would call for the immediate construction of a secondary school in the Unionville area? Will the minister immediately undertake to satisfy the need of the secondary school students in Unionville to be educated in their own community? (Tabled May 16, 1979.)

183. Mr. Stong: Will the Minister of Education act upon the request of the Risebrough Community Association in the community of Markham, Ontario, to provide new and adequate school facilities to meet the growing educational needs in that area? Will the minister inform herself of the situation which now exists, in that projected figures indicate that by September 1, 1979, 1000 units of the 1130 units being built will be occupied producing approximately 480 students seeking educational facilities? Will the minister review the present policy which requires kindergarten children from this area to be bused to a school in Richmond Hill and which also sees children in grades one to five being bused to a small school where gymnastic and library facilities are non-existent? Will the minister immediately review and provide adequate facilities in this community to meet the educational demands which will be in existence by September 1, 1979? (Tabled May 16, 1979.)

184. Mr. Stong: Will the Minister of Education cause an investigation to be made into the overcrowding conditions which exist at the German Mills Public School in Markham? Will the minister explain the policy of the Ministry which appears to prefer the busing of pupils to distant empty classrooms in the regional municipality of York rather than construct new facilities or add on to existing facilities where circumstances warrant? Will the minister review the policy of the ministry which requires that prior to the building of a school, there exist sufficient number of children in the area to equal 80 per cent of the projected capacity of the said school and apply that formula to the building of a school on the Flowerdale site in the town of Markham, in order to accommodate the excess enrolment in the German Mills Public School which is equal to 123 per cent of that school's designed capacity? Will the minister review the immediate need for a new school on the Flowerdale site in the light of projected figures over the next five years which indicate that school-age children in the area will increase to approximately 900 and which figure does not take into account the fact that there is presently before the Ontario Municipal Board an application by a developer to build in the area an additional 190 townhouses? If this project is allowed to proceed the projected figures indicate that school enrolment will not decline until 1995. Will the minister initiate a policy which would provide architecturally acceptable but movable school buildings to accommodate the shifting need of the school population? How does the minister reconcile the ministry's policy of fiscal restraint, which includes busing and which dictates against the welfare of children, with the more important need of providing adequate facilities so that the educational and social needs of children may be properly met in their own community environment? Will the minister therefore satisfy the needs of the children in the German Mills area of Markham and build a second school on the Flowerdale site? (Tabled May 16, 1979.)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to questions 182, 183 and 184, Notice Paper 44. The answers will be ready for tabling on or about June 8, 1979.

GLANBROOK LANDFILL SITE

185. Mr. Isaacs: Would the Premier table in the House the advice which he received from the environmental assessment steering committee in early April concerning the proposal that the hearings in Glanbrook be reconvened under the 1975 Environmental Assessment Act; and would the Premier explain why the provisions of the 1975 act are not being applied to major municipal government projects such as landfill sites? (Tabled May 17, 1979.)

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS (concluded)

On vote 702, project development and community relations program; item 2, project development and implementation:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Algoma.

Mr. Wildman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I could be given the same indulgence the minister was given the other night, I would like to have the members join with me in welcoming to the Legislature a group of students from the north. The students in the gallery are from the community of Bruce Mines. I'd like to welcome them.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are they assisted by the Young Voyageurs Program?

Mr. Wildman: Yes, the Young Voyageurs Program is a very good one because my area is just short of one day's travel away.

Mr. B. Newman: They may not want to go home now they have seen Toronto.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Do you think they recognized their member.

Mr. Wildman: They thought I was a bit light headed.

I would like to raise with the minister under this vote matters regarding the function of working in concert with municipalities and other ministries in developing plans to improve northern community conditions in responding to local needs.

As the minister will recall, he said earlier during the debate in these estimates he thought he might have something to announce in regard to Blind River and the need for upgrading the sewage system there in order to allow the town to expand in the face of the spin-off from Elliot Lake and the tremendous expansion taking place there. I hope the minister might be able to bring us up to date on that.

I want to go into more detail in regard to one of the other communities in my area, since I think it exemplifies what we were discussing yesterday in the estimates with regard to one-industry towns in northern Ontario. That's specifically White River. As the minister knows, White River is in the far north end of Algoma riding and it's a community that traditionally was a railroad community and now has become largely a lumber community dependent upon the new Abitibi mill. The minister also knows White River has just experienced a serious flood, one of the many floods in the north this year, and residents are just now recovering from that. They are awaiting word from the cabinet as to whether or not they will have final confirmation on assistance for that community.

Even prior to the flood, there were some serious difficulties in keeping young people in White River, even though there is now an opportunity for employment there. For many years White River experienced a drop in population because the CPR had cut its running trades working out of that community and there just wasn't much opportunity for young people to have employment. Now with the new Abitibi mill being established and expanding its operations, they run into other problems because the mill workers are moving into town. The company intends to bring a large number of bucherons or cutters into the area, largely from the Gaspé and other parts of Quebec, and perhaps New Brunswick, as well as other parts of Ontario.

A lot of the young people from White River itself, have got jobs in the mill, but we have had this influx of people into the community. That led to a number of problems. For a long time they didn't have adequate sewage facilities. That meant they couldn't provide housing for the people who were willing to move to White River. The Ministry of the Environment did agree a few years ago to give assistance, along with the federal government through DREE, to provide a sewage treatment plant and a new sewage system for the new development but not for the old.

As a result, they have been able to build a subdivision in that community. They have built an apartment building and there is a mobile-home park. Even with that they have had upwards of a 200 per cent turnover in workers at the mill because there is a lack of other amenities.

There just isn't much choice in shopping. Prices are high in White River for everyday goods, such as groceries, clothing, furniture and those kinds of things. There is not much choice. They can go to Wawa or Marathon or Manitouwadge, or Thunder Bay or the Sault, but those centres are quite distant.

More than that, there aren't many amenities there. There is not a recreation centre. The community is now moving towards the setting up of a recreation centre. That is very costly for a small community such as White River, even though they qualify for Wintario, the Community Recreation Centres Act grants and so on.

With this kind of turnover you can see the problems they have. In housing, they have had serious problems with the subdivisions. There have been complaints to the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and to the company, but they don't seem to be getting too far. The developer claims he has done what he should have done.

There have been complaints about the conditions and rules in the apartment building. There have also been complaints about the attitude of the operators of the mobile-home park. What it really boils down to is the fact that the cost of housing is very high, as well as everything else. There is the extra cost of fuel because it is so cold in the winter. As you know, White River is famous for its claim to be the coldest place in Canada.

To give them their due, officials of the company did say they would subsidize their workers if they wanted to buy a house by providing up to $2,000 toward the cost of the house. Basically all that did was raise the cost of every house by $2,000.

I wonder what this ministry is doing, if anything, in getting involved in White River with the improvement district board, with the company, with the unions and the business people of White River to try to bring them together to deal with these very serious problems that have led to a lot of complaints, unhappiness and division in the community which, hopefully has dissipated as a result of the tragedy they have recently had to endure where people have come together and worked together. I think this might be a beginning to try to bring people together to try to deal with some of these problems.

What would probably bring down the cost of housing and what I am leading to is if there could be some competition and if some more land could be made available for housing. We have a tremendous amount of crown land all around the community but it is not available. The municipality has been negotiating with Marathon Realty, that is the realty section of the CPR, for some land that they own so that can establish a municipal subdivision. If that municipal subdivision had been available at the time the other subdivision was going in perhaps there would have been more competition and the price would not have been so high. But it wasn't in operation; it still isn't and it isn't going to be now for some time.

Are you doing anything to try to speed up the negotiations with the CPR and the approvals of the various authorities—the Ministry of Housing and so on—for the municipal subdivision? What, if anything, is the ministry doing? I know it has been very much involved in Hornepayne; we have had discussions about Hornepayne, the other most northerly community in my riding. I would like to see the same kind of operation in White River that the ministry has had up there, and perhaps in Atikokan and other places.

If the minister could give me some indication on Blind River and tell me what role, if any, his ministry has had in White River—or, if it has not had any, what role it intends to have in White River—I would appreciate it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, before I begin my remarks, I want to join the member for Algoma in welcoming the group from Bruce Mines. In fact, Bruce Mines sticks in my mind as a very popular place, because a former federal candidate in my riding came from Bruce Mines. She is now living in Sioux Lookout, the wife of a very prominent doctor, and constantly speaks of her childhood days at Bruce Mines. It is a real pleasure to join the honourable member in welcoming this northern group to the Legislature this evening.

I hope they will not look at the attendance here tonight as any indication of the interest in the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Mr. Makarchuk: There's a chiropractors' dinner that is just winding down.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I see; the chiropractors have taken over.

Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that, if we went on with our estimates tonight, the estimates would be deemed to be completed at the hour of 10:30. Is that the understanding?

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: Quit stalling; get on with it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: When I look at the order paper, I see there are three hours left, and there are only two and a half hours tonight. But as long as we are agreed that when the hour of 10:30 arrives—

Mr. Wildman: If we hurry along, we will get three hours work done in two and a half hours.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Fine. I agree 100 per cent.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, you are on vote 702, item 2.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I may respond to the honourable member in connection with his inquiry regarding Blind River, I am sure he is aware that the environmental assessment report was just released the other day. It looks at the entire problem of development at Elliott Lake, and in the short term it gives us encouragement that we can move ahead with development there. The report does not have the answers to the long-term possible problems because of the time factor, which was clearly spelled out in that report. The report will be very carefully looked at by my staff as it relates to Blind River and the surrounding area and what will happen and what we can encourage at Elliot Lake vis-à-vis the development that should occur at Blind River.

While I do not have any answers at my fingertips, I want to assure the member that the Blind River issue is one of the problems that is first and foremost in the minds of my ministry, along with Sturgeon Falls, Longlac and a few others across northern Ontario which we hope to deal with in the next short period.

I suppose White River does not really have the same problems as other municipalities, but it has similar problems. These arise when a new industry is established in a community that has been relatively dormant for a number of years; when one gets a large company like Abitibi moving in there, and there is an influx of new workers—and it had difficulty with the mill in terms of getting employees there; we are all aware of that.

I am pleased to say that the Ontario Department of Regional Economic Expansion agreement that brought in a further development of the sewer and water facilities was one of the first I signed as Minister of Northern Affairs. So White River is very familiar to me.

We have to accept the fact that there is a supply and demand problem as it relates to lots. In many instances I do not think northerners have really accepted all the facts about the cost of putting in infrastructure. We who live there look at the massive amounts of land and we say to ourselves, "All we have to do it get a surveyor, make sure we have access to a public road, put in a septic tank, and the land should be relatively cheap." But when one starts developing it, putting in the necessary amenities to which the honourable member refers, then of course the price does go up.

In fact, in my own riding a subdivision was planned in Red Lake. When they finished all the surveys, cost factors and the engineering reports, the lots were $27,000. They had open ditches; not even the storm sewers were in place. That is the kind of problem we are faced with.

We have not been directly involved in a co-ordinating role with White River. To my knowledge, we haven't been asked. We would like to think that the local authorities, I believe theirs is an improvement district—

Mr. Wildman: They are going to become a township.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's a major step forward. But the local autonomy is there. If they required our assistance we would be glad to move in but we certainly don't want to move in and take over, usurping their authority.

We do take a leading role in other communities, such as Atikokan which has peculiar problems with regard to its future economy. The townsite of Pickle Lake was a development project in which we accepted a lead ministry role because we were asked to do so by that community. It is an improvement district, I might say, but they had little experience dealing with government and really needed and appreciated the role taken by the Ministry of Northern Affairs in moving in and giving them their sole contact with a provincial department.

Another area under this vote in which we are directly involved is the English-Wabigoon employment strategy, where we are assisting the native people on the English-Wabigoon River system to become directly involved in commercial fishing and in co-operation with the tourist industry we are working out an excellent employment program.

The public service advisory board, both in the northeast and the northwest, also comes under this particular vote. The Moosonee tourism development project, the Manitoulin Island development agency, and the Parry Sound federal-provincial manpower projects come under this vote. All our DREE projects and agreements are under this vote, as is the Sault Ste. Marie economic opportunities project.

Those are just a few of the areas in which we are involved. When municipalities ask us to play that role we try to co-ordinate, co-operate and do all we can on their behalf.

I was looking at the figures for White River. Last year we spent close to $600,000 in the sewer and water development projects; this year we will wind down that project. I think it is now completed, with just the funding still to go through. About $448,000 is in this year's estimates for payment on the White River services. Next year, 1980-81, we have projected $30,000; so that should wind down.

I share your concern with regard to the lack of lots. I would hope, as I said earlier, that the municipalities could work something out with Marathon Realty Company Limited. I don't see why they can't. Barring that, there is sufficient crown land around White River that could be developed. Thank God, there's lots of land in northern Ontario and surely there is no shortage around White River. However, there may be some shortage in the exact location as it relates to their infrastructure. If they require some assistance from my ministry we will be glad to sit down with them and do everything we can.

Mr. Wildman: One of the serious difficulties they have had with getting the mill and getting the people in there is the cost of housing. Because of the lack of competition, people who aren't directly involved in the mill operation face tremendously high costs. People like teachers, people in the service area and so on who want to come in are not given any subsidy in a subdivision for instance, yet they face these very high costs because of the subsidies given to others.

That is a major problem, and I think this is the kind of thing we should be looking at in terms of assistance. I will certainly pass your comments along to the local authorities to see if they are interested.

Another thing you should look at is the tremendous length of time it has taken since the government made its decision to change its position on the sale of crown lots to appraise them and determine their value. Also, there is the question of whether or not they are going to make crown lots available to provide permanent residences for people who live in the north in places like White River and Missanabie. They're ready to give cottage lots to people from southern Ontario, but we've got people living in the area or wanting to live and work in the area who can't get lots.

I'm a little unhappy it's taken so long for the Ministry of Natural Resources to deal with this kind of problem. There are people in Missanabie, for instance, who applied for lots last year and they still haven't been answered. I think that's a problem in other areas. I've had complaints in the southern part of my riding and in other ridings as well. That's one solution that might help to bring down the costs in these isolated communities.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, in responding to the honourable member I must point out that while the cost of housing may appear exorbitant in some of these small northern communities, I think one of the real dangers and the real fears of a prospective home owner is the resale potential. That is the key. To put out $40,000 or $50,000 for a home in Toronto is nothing. It's easy to get a mortgage, it's no problem. The down payment is relatively low; but the resale value is there, the market is there. When you start applying that to places like White River, and even towns like Sioux Lookout and Hudson are typical examples, the resale value is not there.

Mr. Wildman: That's why they don't want to pay the high cost of housing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. There is fear of loss on investment by the potential home owner.

The problem with crown land adjacent to organized municipalities and the desire of those municipalities to expand is one we're starting to move in on. There are problems, as the member is very much aware.

The taxes in some of these small communities are relatively low so you get a lot of vacant land, and there is no real filling in on the lots. If they're not filled it spreads the community up and down the highway. Then they come along and they want sewer and water services that are spread out a great distance and the cost is exorbitant. Other problems follow, such as the extension of electric services and school bus stopping; all these things create further problems. There has to be some reasonable, orderly development to the extension of further subdivisions in those areas, but that's an area we will be looking at very carefully with the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Ministry of Housing.

I've already had discussions with the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) in connection with the future role of the Planning Act, as it was going through its stages of redesign I suppose we might say. In fact the Minister of Housing will be in Dryden in the middle of June to have one of his public participation exercises as it relates to the Planning Act.

I've encouraged my people in that area to come out and to express the point of view you've just announced and elaborated on, that we have crown land, we have lots of land available. Sometimes I think we're using our crown land in the opposite direction. Sometimes it's a liability instead of being an asset to us. I personally feel more of this crown land should be passed out to the private sector. We can tax them sufficiently and get a return to those municipalities so they can provide the necessary services, such as recreational centres and the amenities of life we want in northern Ontario. If they can't get the land, how can they pay the taxes and how can they develop it and improve the area?

I can assure the member that's one area we will be moving in on.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, what I have to say on this item deals with the question of the work of the ministry in concert with other ministries. In this particular instance I'm thinking of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. What I'd like to know is what you are going to do and what you are going to say about the completely intemperate remarks made yesterday afternoon by the Minister of Community and Social Services when he labelled northern Ontario a work camp for delinquent fathers.

Is that the general attitude of your government? Is that the insensitivity, or does it typify the insensitivity which your government shows towards northern Ontario? I know it certainly is not your view because I know you are sensitive to the issues of northern Ontario and you are sensitive about northern Ontario.

I think this has been clearly demonstrated by your knowledge of your ministry during the debate on the estimates. However, for a minister of the crown to give to the press yesterday afternoon his remarks about northern Ontario being a large work camp, or a labour camp, or a slave camp, if that's what he wants to call it, and comparing it to Siberia—part of another country which is well known—I think is disgraceful. The least he could have done today was to apologize to this House. He did not see fit to do so when I gave him every opportunity.

I would hope, Mr. Minister, when you have your cabinet meeting tomorrow, that you're going to wring his ears and you're going to tell him, "Look, lay off northern Ontario. Northern Ontario is not a cesspool for the scum of southern Ontario."

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Bolan: We don't want those people up there and I'm sure you don't want them either. After all, there are other ways of dealing with them. If they want to stay in southern Ontario, if you want to develop labour camps or work camps in southern Ontario, then go ahead and do so. But would you please tell him to lay off northern Ontario?

What I'd like to know, Mr. Minister, is what are you going to do? What are you going to say about these intemperate remarks of his?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't know how that fits into item 2, Mr. Minister, but go ahead.

Mr. Roy: Right on, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It's project development implementation.

Mr. Wildman: His project is work camps.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I was not privy to the honourable minister's comments. He's a very able minister, one that is very sensitive to human needs.

Mr. Roy: He's misguided as hell though.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm sure he will be able to respond himself. He doesn't need me, certainly.

Mr. Foulds: Do you agree with him?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't know what he said. I'm just taking in what you have said.

Mr. Roy: Don't you read the press?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If anybody said that and it's correct, then I have to agree with you that we are not a Siberia. We are not a work camp area.

Mr. Roy: Right, then tell him that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We hope we're a resource development area, but I'm sure he will be looking after his own comments and will be able to respond very ably.

Mr. Roy: You're big enough, Leo. Take him aside; take him to the woodshed, Leo.

Mr. Wildman: I was just wondering if the minister may have been referring to Minaki when he was talking about work camps. Maybe this is one solution for the difficulty the ministry is having in dealing with Minaki and trying to find some use for it, since they have been taking so long to negotiate with the private sector to take it over.

Mr. Haggerty: I thought it was a governor's mansion.

Mr. Wildman: The only thing I don't understand is his comparing it to Siberia. It seems to me Minaki would be a rather comfortable Siberia. I wonder if that was what he was getting at, that he was going to use Minaki for something like sending all of these delinquent fathers up there to think about—

Mr. Roy: But would you trust them in Minaki?

Mr. Wildman: Who knows.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I will not comment on the member's remarks. The former leader of that party knows very well the attitude of the town of Minaki.

Mr. Wildman: They don't want the south-erners either.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I will let your words stand on the record to further supplement what your former leader has tried to do through the town of Minaki.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Port Arthur has further remarks.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to shift topics considerably and discuss with the minister what role he sees his ministry playing in the extension of highway facilities. I refer specifically, having had some correspondence with the minister and with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, to the matter of highway 589 north to Dawn Lake. Just let me remind the minister briefly in case he doesn't have the material at hand. Highway 589 is the secondary highway for approximately three miles north of highway 591, north of Lappe junction. We will be talking about Lappe later in the estimates this evening. Then it becomes the jurisdiction for a couple of miles of the Jacques roads board, and then it just becomes a trap or a private road.

I have had considerable correspondence with MTC trying to persuade them to push the highway all the way north another three miles in fact, and incorporate it into the secondary road system of the ministry.

The MTC has not been too encouraging. I think it was on March 9 I wrote to this minister. Unfortunately, he hasn't had time to reply. I have just written again the other day giving further information that I had from MTC on the matter.

The point I want to make is it does seem from the strict standard of MTC that highway 589 doesn't fall into its criteria in terms of traffic volumes to justify upgrading it to a secondary highway, although I find that argument a little hard to accept when they have extended part of the highway north of 591 where it is largely for local use for summer cottages and others. It goes to Surprise Lake Narrows as a secondary highway.

It does seem to me that Dog Lake would be the natural terminal of such a highway. It also seems to me in terms of potential development, both of a present tourist resort and other possible resort development on Dog Lake, it would make sense for this ministry to give positive consideration to extending that road as a development road.

I was wondering whether the ministry or any officials have responded to my correspondence internally and whether or not the minister might give favourable consideration to that extent.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I will get some answers.

Mr. Foulds: While you are getting some answers, one of the other members of the Legislature could change topics.

Mr. Martel: While the answer is being prepared, I want to talk to the minister. I overheard him on my squawk box talking about the sale of crown land and I can't understand what the government is doing.

On May 4, 1978, a resolution by his colleague, the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) was almost unanimously accepted in this House that we wouldn't sell crown land to Americans or nonresidents; it would be sold only to landed immigrants and Canadian citizens. The people who spoke in that debate were the members for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan), Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), Algoma (Mr. Wildman), Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) and Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) and I.

Mr. Roy: What does the member for Carleton-Grenville know about northern Ontario?

Mr. Martel: Only the member for Middlesex and, interestingly enough, the member for Rainy River spoke against that resolution.

Mr. Roy: We allow freedom in this party.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I know. That is why your colleague today moved the bill with respect to the sale of agricultural land to non-Canadian. You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Roy: There is no problem.

Mr. Martel: What bothers me is there is a funny history going here on what we intend to do in this province with respect to crown land in northern Ontario.

In 1973, an all-party committee proposed that future land transactions be limited to Canadians and landed immigrants. This report, by the way, was signed by the present Minister of Agriculture and Food. He knows well what the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) speaks of because as a backbencher in those days he opposed the sale of crown land and also agricultural land. He signed that report. In 1974, contrary to the select committee report, the government brought in a 20 per cent land transfer tax. In 1976, two years later, the government decided this was no longer a problem. In 1977, in the spring, the government lifted the 20 per cent tax, despite the fact the government had not determined the extent to which foreign ownership had become a problem.

We studied it for 18 months. When you were minister of Natural Resources, your legal staff provided us with some of the background which led the select committee to make the type of recommendation it did. Then on March 2, 1978, the then minister, who is now the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), announced a new government policy. It said that in the first year only residents of Ontario could buy, in the second year residents of Canada could also buy or lease, and in the third year nonresidents were allowed only to lease.

The minister himself is opposed because on February 28, 1978, he was apparently at odds with the present Treasurer who was then the Minister of Natural Resources. About two months later, on May 4, his colleague the member for Timiskaming introduced a resolution in this Legislature. I will read it for the minister: "Resolved: That in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to legislation that would prohibit the transfer of leased crown lots in the province of Ontario to anyone other than Canadian citizens."

That vote carried. In the face of that vote, the government went its merry way as though the Legislature had not spoken at all. I can no longer understand what votes mean in this House when it is so flagrant that the minister's own colleague, the member for Timiskaming, gets a resolution through the House, and then the government says: "To hell with it. It doesn't matter what the House has said. We'll go our merry way." The then minister used some cockeyed excuse that we will get more development in the north if we sell the land. But that's not a factor. The minister and I both know that as soon as lots become available on a lake they are grabbed up, by lease or any other way.

There's no problem? Well, there were fewer than 200, and they were up in Polar Bear Park, or near it. But the land around the city of Sudbury, the land in the minister's area, as quickly as it came up for lease, was being taken up.

Mr. Wildman: There weren't enough lots.

Mr. Martel: That is the key problem facing us in the north. There are not enough cottage lots available.

An hon. member: What's the member's position?

Mr. Martel: Mine?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Talk to your colleague behind you; get in step with him. You're both out of step.

Mr. Martel: My colleague and I, and my colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Germa), sat on one of the committees which, when the minister was Minister of Natural Resources, he had in the various areas. We got a motion through that we would not build all around a lake but we would create subdivisions with the proper type of environmental controls and leave the lakefront for the people.

The problem is not one of selling land so that we encourage cottage development; the problem is insufficient land.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Oh!

Mr. Martel: Coming on stream from the Ministry of Natural Resources? There is not nearly enough. Anything the ministry could churn out in the Sudbury area would be grabbed up so quickly it is not even funny.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You're not a northerner when you talk like that. You talk like you're from southern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: How many cottage lots does the government have available?

Mr. Martel: In the Sudbury district there are 25 or 30 lots coming out this year. The problem is not what the then minister, now the Treasurer, said. He said we did not have construction because people would not take leased land to put a cottage on. That is not the case at all; the minister knows it and I know it. To refresh his memory, the minister himself, on February 28, 1978, opposed that position taken by the then Minister of Natural Resources, now the Treasurer. It indicated to me how much clout the minister has as the minister responsible for northern Ontario when the line minister was able to beat him down.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No way.

Mr. Martel: The minister opposed his colleague's proposals. On February 28, 1978, he indicated he did not agree with the then Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: For selling land?

Mr. Martel: Yes. The minister was prepared to lease it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You are entirely wrong; you are off base.

Mr. Foulds: You were misquoted before you made that statement, were you?

Mr. Martel: Was the minister misquoted?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have always been in favour of the sale of cottage lots.

Mr. Martel: The minister changed his mind again, but that is not unusual.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I haven't changed my mind.

Mr. Martel: The important matter is that this House voted against that and voted to support the minister's colleague's resolution. My question is: Where does the cabinet get off in going against the majority of this House? Let me tell you who was in the House when we voted on that. We know from their interjections—they didn't take part—but we know from their interjections that there were quite a number of cabinet ministers here; Baetz, Miller, Norton, my friend the late John Rhodes, Bob Welch, they were here. You just look at the interjections when that debate was going on and you know they were in the House. How do you do it? Does this Legislature and what it passes mean nothing?

Mr. Roy: I guess not.

Mr. Martel: The government simply says, "We don't care what the House voted; we are simply going to proceed anyway."

Mr. Roy: I guess we know who the boss is.

Mr. Martel: What kind of hypocrisy is that? That is too much, and I want to tell the minister, it would do him the world of good to go back to the Ministry of Natural Resources and find out what the opinion is over there because there was almost a blood-letting at that time going on in there. The civil servants, to their credit, did not want to proceed with this.

Mr. Wildman: That is right.

Mr. Martel: They didn't, because they could see that the material that your friend was bringing forth was total nonsense. If you want to say, "We simply believe in the sale of crown land," that is fine, but I remind you that it was your government that set up the select committee to study these problems, and your colleague who sits to your immediate left signed that.

I can't see how you can play around with everything that says that to the south of us, within 100 miles of our border, there are roughly 100 million Americans looking for land. They have also got more disposable income than we have, so that in fact they can come up here and buy land. They are driving up the price of land.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They are only leasing.

Mr. Martel: They are leasing. You can't even stop that. Have you looked at what is happening to the lease of crown land, the proportions it is reaching now? It costs $500 and $600 a year to lease a piece of property. Do you know what that means to the average worker who tries to lease land at that price? It is nuts. You are simply taking Canadians and Ontarians out of the realm of even getting a cottage, and the more you allow this to continue the worse it is going to become.

I think it is time the minister, who talks about protecting us in northern Ontario, did something about it and I think it is time he looked at that resolution and took this House seriously, because he can't have it both ways.

Mr. Laughren: You are making a lot of sense.

Mr. Martel: Thank you. My friend—from what riding? Thank you.

Mr. Laughren: Socialists make a lot of sense.

Mr. Lane: It's hard to detect sometimes, though.

Mr. Martel: Where did you vote on that resolution? If I recall correctly, you supported that resolution.

Mr. Lane: I voted the right way.

Mr. Martel: You supported that resolution on that occasion.

Mr. Roy: You don't have to compromise yourself, John.

Mr. Martel: Right. You supported your colleague's resolution.

Mr. Roy: Take the fifth amendment.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We believe in ownership on this side.

Mr. Martel: But you didn't vote that way.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I did.

Mr. Martel: No, you didn't. No. That minister was misquoted then on February 28, 1978. You are always misquoted, Leo; you are always in a fog, even when you are fogged in.

But, I just tell you that the government has changed its position with respect to crown land in northern Ontario in 1973, 1974, 1976, 1977 and 1978. What goes on over there? That is six changes of position from 1973 to 1978.

Mr. Foulds: You would think Stuart Smith was in the cabinet.

Mr. Martel: You would think it was a Liberal cabinet.

Mr. Roy: Hell, we are consistent compared to that.

Mr. Martel: Yes, you only change once a day.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You said that. I didn't.

Mr. Martel: It really bothers me that you pay no attention to what the needs are. I would think the minister, in fact, should be honouring that resolution and be working to get subdivisions somewhat a little back from the waterfront, so that we could provide the services which would prevent the waterways from becoming polluted, and that would lead to the type of financial development we want in terms of small businesses both selling and building some cottages for people in northern Ontario. If the government proceeded in that way, we would have that type of economy which would help northern Ontario.

By restricting the number of lots that come on stream and by opening them up to other than Canadians, the government is making it impossible for Canadians to be in the ball game. The minister should go back and read the select committee's report because it was relevant in 1974 and it is still relevant today. The minister who is leading the way should get on the ball and do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I may respond to the member for Port Arthur, with respect to highway 589, we do not have the details of that access road with us at the present time, but I will get the answers to the member's inquiry and report back to him directly.

Mr. Foulds: I think the important thing for his ministry to keep in mind, in considering the development of a road such as this, is not merely the present traffic flow, which is the framework within which the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has to operate, but it should look at that in terms of the potential of developing the road to a good standard for tourism, for local use and for any other possible development. I don't know what other possible development there might be, but I think it does make some sense in the case of a three-mile stretch of road, of which there is already a base, to use that as a possibility for a modest northern development road.

I put it to the minister in those terms. I thought I had put it to him in those terms in my letter in March. I have obtained additional information from MTC, which I have forwarded to the ministry within the last week or so. I would like them to look at that and to look at what MTC is doing, along with the local roads board, to see if there is some kind of arrangement that can be made that would make that a sensible project.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would be glad to do that. In reply to the member for Sudbury East, it seems to me I have heard his speech on crown lands so many times now I am confused. I don't know whether he is in right field or left field or far-left field or in the ballpark at all.

Mr. Martel: I haven't changed my position at all.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He is crossing back and forth all the time.

Mr. Martel: I have never changed my position—not once.

Mr. Foulds: You can say many things about the member for Sudbury East but you can't say that.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I must say my position has not changed. I think crown cottage lots should be sold to Ontario residents first, Canadian residents second and leased to nonresidents. I think that is a very fair and positive policy and one that will allow Ontarians to own a summer cottage. Ownership is the key. That is the difference in our political philosophies.

Mr. Martel: You are going to eat some of your words.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The members of the third party want big government to hang on. Ninety per cent of the land mass and 10 per cent of the population are north of the French River, and you do not want to give up any bit of it. If you were the government, you wouldn't give up anything; you would own everything.

Mr. Foulds: That is just not true. It is complete balderdash. You might even be misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We don't believe that. We believe in encouraging private initiative, individual initiative and pride in ownership. The members of the third party like to own their own homes in their communities. They like to own their own cars. They like their ownership. They take pride in that. Why shouldn't somebody having a summer cottage do the same thing? Don't worry about the pollution because the Ministry of the Environment has all the rules and regulations.

Mr. Foulds: The minister knows that is not right.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The health unit is there and is controlling those septic tanks.

Mr. Foulds: You don't have enough lots because you can't meet their standards, minimum as they are.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They are all in place. Don't come around here and say we shouldn't be doing these things. If we are going to do something for northern Ontario, there is nothing better and there is no simpler way of creating development and economic movement than to encourage development of summer cottage lots.

If the member for Sudbury East, as a northerner, really moves around the north and talks to northerners, what is the second thing they want besides their home?

Mr. Martel: A cottage.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Exactly right, they want a cottage. They want to own a summer cottage beside the lake.

Mr. Bradley: They want a change of government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are 250,000 lakes in northern Ontario and the members opposite want us to preserve them and not to touch them.

Mr. Foulds: How many cottage lots have you got?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's the law of supply and demand.

Mr. Foulds: Oh no.

Mr. Martel: Baloney.

Mr. Foulds: What's the supply? Have you forgotten so quickly since you left Natural Resources?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have made it very clear to the Ministry of Natural Resources that if they required extra funds, we as the ministry would provide them. We have been providing them with extra funds for cottage road development, for surveying of subdivisions in northern Ontario and we will continue to do that to meet the supply and demand. It has to be there. I would like to see that program accelerated. I think it is a good program and it has to be accelerated to meet the demands of northerners.

My God, we live up there, and if you and I as northerners can't own a summer cottage lot, then we might as well move down to southern Ontario. That's one of the amenities we have as northerners, to own a summer cottage lot, and I see nothing wrong with that.

The policy this government has is a fair and just one for today's society and for future generations.

Mr. Martel: Oh, yes. With respect to this big platitude about the difference between us and the minister over there, let me quote from the 1971 throne speech. He supported that. Now listen to what it says with respect to the matter.

"To further preserve our heritage, crown lands will henceforth be made available only on lease basis." That was in the 1971 throne speech. Does the minister recall it? Don't tell me about the difference between you and us. That's your throne speech.

Mr. Foulds: Who was the Premier then?

Mr. Martel: Let me go on.

Mr. Foulds: That was Davis's first throne speech.

Mr. Martel: The minister supported the budget speech of 1974.

Mr. Laughren: So did the Liberal Party.

Mr. Martel: It says, "In examining the rapidly rising prices for real property in Ontario, it has become increasingly apparent that large-scale acquisition of land by nonresidents of Canada is a significant factor." I didn't say that, the Premier wrote that speech—

Mr. Foulds: No, no, it was the Treasurer.

Mr. Martel: —in conjunction with the Treasurer. And they got somebody to read it. The Treasurer didn't write it. He just went along with it.

Mr. Foulds: It's Claire Hoy.

Mr. Martel: That was the budget in 1974. But if that isn't enough, let's try the "Duke of Kent." In 1976, Mr. McKeough made an inspiring statement. Listen to what the duke said then, in spite of an announcement in October: ". . . would develop a monitoring system which will regularly produce a complete list of land ownership in Ontario." And that hasn't been done.

The minister gets up here with all of that claptrap he just went through a few minutes ago; yet those are the different positions taken by his government to determine what was happening to land. In fact, they said that to retain our heritage, we would have to lease the land. Then they reinforced it. They said it had now become apparent that too much land was being purchased by other than Canadians or landed immigrants. Two years later, the government is going to set up a monitoring system to determine where the land is going and who is buying it. It hasn't been done.

Then he has the effrontery to stand up there and spout that claptrap and say that's the difference between him and us. Can he tell me what changed his mind on all those occasions? How can he move tweedledum, tweedledee and back to tweedledum whenever it is convenient? Tonight he gets up and says, "It's a case of supply and demand." I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, the problem of getting cottage land in Ontario isn't a case of leasing, it's a case of not enough being prepared to put on the market. You know it and I know it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You said that.

Mr. Martel: No. no. The minister said we would put some more on. He said, the "pride of ownership." As quickly as he puts land on the market for sale people are lining up and are still lining up to buy it and put their cottages on it. What has changed?

Mr. Foulds: You can't even put on 500 a year, and you know it.

Mr. Martel: What has changed the government's mind after those types of statements in two throne speeches and the budget speech? They want it every way, but they can't have it. They always come back to that line, "Well, the difference between us and you is that you want big government."

Who has been in power all these years? The minister says we want big government. If the government has a lot of problems, they have been the authors. They have been in power all those years.

Mr. Foulds: Who created big government? You're the biggest one of them all.

Mr. Martel: They created a whole ministry for him.

Mr. Laughren: That's big government.

Mr. Martel: It's big government that can afford to create a ministry to be a PR agency for the line ministries. And the minister gets up here with this nonsense. But tell me why, all of a sudden, these things which were said and announced don't matter anymore.

Does the minister know where the land is going? Does he know who's getting the leases—

Mr. Laughren: That's business.

Mr. Martel: —or how they're being transferred from a citizen of Ontario to an American after a year or two? Does he have any monitoring systems?

We paid over $2 million for a select committee on economic nationalism and it included a land study. The government hasn't paid one iota of recognition to the work done by that select committee. Nothing. It's just ignored it. In fact, if one listens to the Minister of Industry and Tourism as he gives the bundle away, he flies in the face of the four-year study which says all they want is a portfolio investment, not equity.

There are 21 reports which say that and they're not all done by the select committee; nine of them were done by Kates, Peat, Marwick.

The government is undercutting any proper development of this province and that's why we have 325,000 people unemployed; that's why we have trade deficits galore; that's why we're in the lousy mess we're in.

Mr. Laughren: Put on your clown suit, Leo.

Mr. Martel: I tell the minister he will get up there—

Mr. Laughren: Put on your clown suit, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You guys are a bunch of phonies.

Mr. Martel: Phonies? Look at the deficits. Look at the deficits in every field, whether it's mining equipment, you name it.

Mr. Laughren: You and your wild rice.

Mr. Martel: Whatever field you look at, Mr. Chairman, there's a trade deficit. And now it's land. There's a shortage of land. We knew it in 1971. The thing that led to that study was that the minister couldn't get a piece of land on Lake Erie—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Get with reality.

Mr. Martel: —and he still can't. We did four years of study, we had all these grand pronouncements and finally, a resolution from the member for Timiskaming. Why didn't the minister turn around and tell him that he's in favour of big government? Or his colleague for Algoma-Manitoulin who voted for it? Was he in favour of big government?

Mr. Wildman: Do they not agree with your philosophy?

Mr. Martel: The minister just rambles all over the place. The trouble with engaging in a debate with him is his only argument is a simplistic one. He gets up and says: "All you want is big government. And we have a different philosophy."

Mr. Laughren: We're laughing at you, Leo.

Mr. Martel: Why doesn't he get up and talk about the issues, tell me about these statements and what has changed, and tell me about why he spouts off that it's just this side of the House when the resolution came from the member for Timiskaming?

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Mr. Martel: Tell me about that. Why did the member for Timiskaming move it? Why did the member for Algoma-Manitoulin support it? Because they see the sale of crown land. The member for Algoma-Manitoulin is much closer to the border than the minister is and I suspect now he sees it because his island is predominantly owned by other than Canadians.

Mr. Laughren: He's nodding in agreement.

Mr. Martel: He understands that and he agrees with the resolution moved by his colleague, the member for Timiskaming. But the minister should tell them, too, that they just think in terms of big government, that there's a difference between us and them. The minister believes in ownership. Why did they vote for it? Why did they move it?

Why doesn't he talk about the issue instead of the blustering he always does? I go back a long way with him.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Who is blustering? Look in the mirror and see who is blustering.

Mr. Martel: I remember talking to him about the whole field of mining and he told me I was all wet. But the Ham commission didn't say I was all wet, did it? The minister was the only blind one and he continues to be.

Mr. Laughren: Go back to the Ham commission, Leo.

Mr. Martel: Yes, go back.

Mr. Laughren: Hide your head.

Mr. Martel: We've always heard—

Mr. Laughren: Go hide your head in shame.

Mr. Martel: —we've always heard his blustering.

Mr. Laughren: You set it up because you were forced to set it up. You were embarrassed into it. You were ashamed.

Mr. Martel: Right. The minister had no option.

Mr. Laughren: You were stunned.

Mr. Martel: And he told me I was all wrong about hearing. The Minister of Labour has now established a committee to look into the whole hearing problem, but I was all wrong.

Interestingly enough, it was a hearing specialist who prepared most of my material. I didn't know what I was talking about but the hearing specialist did. And how he blustered, "You don't know what you're talking about."

Now there's a committee doing it. The minister should talk to the issues, tell us about why he's changed and never mind the blustering about my political philosophy, because it was his colleagues who moved it. And tell me why he's gone against the vote of this Legislature. Just for once, talk to the issue.

Mr. Laughren: Tell the truth, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's very simple. The government, in its wisdom, has decided this is the route we're going to go. This is a responsible government. We've decided that a summer cottage lot, which is nothing comparable to the huge landholdings of the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, or the Algoma Central Railroad, it's nothing compared with that—

Mr. Martel: We're not talking about that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's what you're comparing it with.

Mr. Martel: No, I'm not.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's what you're comparing it with. That's what you're talking about. That's the fear you've got. You would deny an Ontario resident, a Canadian resident, ownership to a summer cottage lot. You would. That's what you're doing. You would deny that simple right of an Ontario resident. The government in its wisdom has seen fit and that's it.

Mr. Martel: They moved it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's plain and simple. It's been documented and the route we're going was in the throne speech. We're going in that direction because we think it's the right way. It's the way to go, too, if you're going to provide development in northern Ontario and do the things we want in northern Ontario. People would sell their homes before they would sell their summer cottage lots in northern Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: We're not asking them to.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's there. It's in place and I think ownership is the right way to go, particularly as it relates to a small summer cottage lot. I'm sure the members sitting behind you agree with that philosophy and not with yours.

Mr. Wildman: I just want to raise one very important matter. The member who sits behind the minister introduced the resolution and the minister is rejecting that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Are you against ownership of the summer cottage lots?

Mr. Wildman: I raised with you permanent residence lots and it seems to me ridiculous for you to be selling cottage lots when permanent residents can't get any residence lots in my area. When you can deal with that, then I'll talk about cottage lots.

The one problem with what you're doing with cottage lots and why the ministry was opposed to what the present Treasurer was introducing, is that two years after you sell the lots to the Ontario or Canadian residents, you have absolutely no control over what they do with it. All that has to happen is for some American developer to come in and buy up a whole lot of these lots, develop them, sell them as condominiums or something to nonresidents, and there is nothing you can do about it. If there is something you can do about it, tell me. Tell me how you're monitoring what is happening with the lots being sold? Are you monitoring?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member is totally missing the point. When those summer cottage lots are sold to an Ontario resident, there are certain requirements he must live up to and one is he must expend a certain amount of funds to develop that. That is the economic development and stimulus we want in northern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: That was also required when you leased it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We believe ownership should be supreme, there should be no encumbrances or no encroachments or attachments to that ownership at all.

Mr. Martel: And after two years?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Ontario government has always prided itself that when it gives ownership it's ownership in fee simple. It's there to use any way you see fit. That's the type of freedom we look to on this side of the House.

Mr. Martel: You voted for it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm not answering for them. Let them answer for themselves. They're big enough to answer for themselves.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm not going to sit here and answer for them. I'm telling you what the government policy is today. That's what it is and it's the right one. You'll be on the handwagon in a short period of time supporting that policy.

Mr. Martel: No, I won't.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps we should put it in a little bit of perspective. We had a policy in Ontario that was working and that policy was people would lease cottage land, would lease lakefront land. It was working.

Mr. Wildman: It's just that you weren't putting enough lots on the market.

Mr. Laughren: At the present time, and even in those days, whatever number of lots the Ministry of Natural Resources in northern Ontario put on the market were gobbled up faster than the ministry would put them on the market. There was no question there were not enough lots being sold. There was a lineup. Every time a subdivision on a lake was developed, every time it went to auction, or whatever, the lineup was much greater than the availability of lots. The minister can't deny that.

Mr. Wildman: They had to have lotteries.

Mr. Laughren: That's why they had to have lotteries as to who would buy the lots, as to who would get the lots. The minister can't deny that. If the minister denies that, he is, quite frankly, lying. Everyone knows there are not enough lakefront lots available in northern Ontario to supply the demand by Ontario residents.

Given that, how does the minister justify putting lots on the market that can be sold to nonresidents if there are not enough lots available for Ontario Canadian residents? I don't know how the minister can justify that. We had a system that made sense.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It didn't make sense.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps the minister could tell us why it didn't make sense. There was control over the development of lakes. There were not enough lake lots available for Ontario or for any Canadian residents. Yet now the minister is saying we are going to sell them. By doing that—this is what the minister is saying—he is admitting he will sell them to Canadian residents who will in turn be free to sell them to American residents. That is what the minister is saying, as though there was not enough demand by Ontario residents for those same lots.

Is he really trying to tell us there are not enough Ontario and Canadian residents who want to buy lakefront lots in Ontario? If he is not saying that, then I wonder what—

Mr. Lane: A point of order, Mr. Chairman: I don't think cottage lots come under the Minister of Northern Affairs or this vote.

Mr. Laughren: Well, project development.

Mr. Martel: Project development.

Mr. Lane: I don't think the Ham commission comes under this vote or this ministry either. I would like to know how a minority on the opposite side of the House can force a majority government into bringing in the Ham report.

Mr. Roy: Is he the minister of northern Ontario or is he not?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Good point.

Mr. Lane: What is wrong? Are there not enough things the Minister of Northern Affairs is responsible for that you can talk to him throughout the evening about his ministry? I think the whole thing is out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Wildman: It says here in the briefing notes under "Project development and implementation"—702, item 2—that this ministry: "negotiates with other ministries and other levels of government various programs in their cost sharing." If this is not a government program carried out by another ministry, I don't know what is. So this should apply here. We can discuss this as a government program and it has been carried out by another ministry.

Mr. Roy: Right. You don't need a haircut, Bud.

Mr. Laughren: The last thing the member for Algoma needs today is a haircut.

Mr. Lane: I asked for his barber's name so I wouldn't go to the same one, but he wouldn't give me his name.

Mr. Martel: He might take your moustache, John.

Mr. Laughren: It really was unusual for the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, who supported the bill of the member for Timiskaming, to get up and defend the minister who is in trouble on this issue.

The minister had to distort the debate, didn't he? He is having problems responding to the points made by the opposition.

Mr. Lane: Why don't we talk about that in Natural Resources when it comes up? I want to talk about that under the proper ministry when it comes up.

Mr. Laughren: This is the proper ministry.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the member for Nickel Belt, if he wants to continue, would address his remarks through the chair?

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I will do that. I would just say the member for Algoma-Manitoulin surely was being facetious when he said the government in a majority situation would not have set up the Ham commission because of pressure by the opposition.

Perhaps the member for Algoma-Manitoulin is feeling somewhat guilty about his own role in the plight of miners of Elliot Lake, because that happens to be in his riding. He should hide his head in shame, and so should the Minister of Northern Affairs. You both played roles shameful for a member of the government, and you know it. That is why you brought in the Ham commission, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You have stopped more jobs in northern Ontario, that gang of yours—

Mr. Laughren: We have saved more lives too.

Mr. Foulds: What jobs have you created? Name one that we stopped. Name one.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order. Could the honourable minister and the member for Port Arthur contain themselves and listen to the member for Nickel Belt?

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps in your role as chairman, you could tell us first of all which party has formed the government for the last 35 years. Secondly, could you say what number of those years there's been a minority government and how it is that the minister can blame a minority situation—particularly the third party—for costing jobs in northern Ontario when it's his government that's the architect of misfortune in northern Ontario? As a matter of fact the chamber of commerce in Sudbury put it all together when they described the role of this government as a profile in failure.

If anybody personifies that, it's the Minister of Northern Affairs, formerly Minister of Natural Resources. The Minister of Northern Affairs is not serving northern Ontario well, and he is not serving the province as a whole well, when he will take a program that is—

Mr. Lane: That's not a fact and you know it.

Mr. Laughren: He is the minister of red tape for northern Ontario. That's all he is.

Mr. Lane: That party is always crying about what it didn't get and it wants a good piece of Northern Affairs, and it is getting a good piece of—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Lane: I raised a point of order a while ago saying this is not the vote we're on and it's not the minister we're on. Are you going to rule on it or not?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Lane: Are you going to rule on the point of order or not?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Roy: You're very close to contempt, John.

Mr. Chairman: I appreciate the comment made by the honourable member and the point of order. We are now doing the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, item 702-2, project development and implementation. I believe if the minister in reply wishes to state that he has nothing to do with it, I'd be very happy to hear that.

Mr. Bolan: Wait your turn, John.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps the next time the member for Algoma-Manitoulin feels the need to intervene he could tell us why he supported the bill by the member for Timiskaming in the first place.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the honourable member would return to the estimates.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am asking you if you could ask the member for Algoma-Manitoulin if he could explain to the Legislature why it is that he felt compelled to support the member for Timiskaming—

Mr. Lane: I'm going to talk about that in the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Laughren: —because it is a policy that affects northern Ontario in particular, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lane: I'm going to talk about it when the proper ministry is before us.

Mr. Foulds: You're in good form tonight.

Mr. Laughren: It's with a great deal of restraint that I confine my remarks and make them as brief as I have.

The Minister of Northern Affairs has not done his job. He is supposed to be a co-ordinating ministry. When we as sitting members talk to the other ministries of the government and we mention Northern Affairs to them, they all shrivel up and—

Mr. Roy: Do they smile?

Mr. Laughren: They either laugh or they shrivel up.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You would like to believe that.

Mr. Laughren: The other ministries just feel that the Ministry of Northern Affairs is nothing but an impediment to the development of northern Ontario.

Mr. Roy: And they say, "ah yes, sure."

Mr. Laughren: Because quite frankly, all of the policies over which the Minister of Northern Affairs has any kind of say are already in place in other ministries of the government.

There's no better example of how this minister is selling out northern Ontario than in his policy with lots on lakefronts. He sold out the mineral and lumber resources of northern Ontario and now he has moved into a position where he can sell out the lakefront lots of northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I've said it before, and I'm going to say it again about the attitude of the member for Nickel Belt, the bell rings loud and clear. It's been ringing that way since the last election.

Mr. Laughren: Put on your clown suit, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Northern Ontario was the playground of the NDP. It was their bastion, it was their political base in northern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: The bell tolls for the Conservative government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They said, "We have things under control; they're all socialists up in northern Ontario; they belong to us; they belong to the NDP; we're going to take over and we're going to form the government from that northern Ontario base." Right?

Mr. Laughren: Answer the questions. [9:15]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's what you thought. What happened after the last election? The government formed the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Mr. Roy: What do you mean?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We took some action. We answered the needs of northern Ontario. We got input from northerners; we responded to their requests. We came back with three seats.

Mr. Bolan: I represent two.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You are not. I can tell you right now that you will lose two more seats in northern Ontario at the next election.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I won't tell you. You know.

Mr. Foulds: Do you want to place a little bet on that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No. The Liberal Party now has two seats and I think we will leave them with two. We should have a little opposition, but you will lose two more.

Mr. Roy: We're going to get more, when we've got quality members like we've got.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The base is gone. You know it and I know it.

Mr. Laughren: Answer the question. Always the clown.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The old political base, that old attitude that you people had about northern Ontario being in your hip pocket, is not there any more, fellows, it is gone.

Mr. Foulds: It is not in your hip pocket, either.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, it is not in mine. It is gone.

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. I would like to remind the members—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You're going to bleed a lot more before we are finished with you.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to remind the members that we have an hour and 15 minutes.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just want to say what our role is—pardon me?

Mr. Martel: Back to the issue now. It's crown land, if you've forgotten.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You had to hear that; you wanted to hear that.

Mr. Ashe: Tell him for 15 minutes and call it a night.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Our role is simply to co-ordinate and to bring to the attention of other ministries the specific needs, the unique needs of northern Ontario residents. Certainly our efforts in working very closely with the Ministry of Natural Resources as it relates to the development of summer cottage lots won't be all on the waterfront. They won't be all on the waterfront. They can't be.

Mr. Laughren: Why sell to the Americans then?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We believe in your concept of cluster development; I think that makes sense. No question about that. We will provide funds from our budget for the development of properly planned summer cottage subdivisions that relate to the lake, after a lake survey has been taken.

We are not going to repeat the problems of Lake Simcoe or Lake Erie in northern Ontario—not at all; we don't intend to do that. But there is still lots of room for development of summer cottage lots—

Mr. Martel: We are not saying there isn't.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —and selling them to residents of Ontario and residents of Canada.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, that's a red herring. That's not what you are selling to the Americans.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is no problem with that. I have no difficulty living with it and neither do the residents of northern Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to address myself to vote 702, item 2. The explanatory note says: "The activities include the financial and program planning branch in Toronto and the regional and community development branches in Sudbury and Thunder Bay that perform the following functions," and it gives six or seven items there.

My concern is about the first sentence I quoted here, "The activities include the financial and program planning branch in Toronto." That doesn't leave much for the northern communities to have some voice in the directions in which these communities want to grow and develop, and particularly as it relates, as the member for Nickel Belt said, to job creation.

It goes on to say about one of the other areas "to explore and undertake, where feasible, projects relating to the expansion of the economic base of the region."

For some time now, Mr. Chairman, I have directed questions to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and the Ministry of Natural Resources, trying to get some definite answer in the matter of the Ministry of Natural Resources' report called A Nickel Policy for Ontario. There have been a number of proposals in that study and recommendation. One was to encourage the importation of Inco subsidiaries' technical and nickel manufacturing expertise acquired through recent diversifications and not now employed in Canada, for the purpose of creating new industry and employment in Sudbury and perhaps in other areas throughout north-western Ontario.

Just what steps has the ministry taken in this particular area to diversify the industry in the Sudbury basin and other nickel towns in Ontario, as to what directions have you given to Inco, and perhaps even to Falconbridge, to say that they must take further steps to refine or process other precious metals that arise out of the mining operations in the Sudbury basin?

This is a matter that was discussed I think in some detail during the select committee dealing with the Inco layoff. With the present situation as it is up in the Sudbury basin now, I thought perhaps the ministry had ample time to come through with an economic study of that particular area, as it relates to the present labour dispute that has continued for some nine months. This, I suppose, should never have happened in the first place, but I don't think the government or even the Ministry of Labour has been very effective in getting a settlement to that labour dispute.

Surely, now, there should be an economic study made in the Sudbury basin as to what impact the strike has had on that community and what impact this proposed nickel policy will have on communities in northern Ontario. I think it is long overdue in this particular area.

We, on this side, would like to know just what direction this government is proposing to take in this area of encouraging further mining processing in Ontario. It has been an issue that has been kicked around here for a number of years and I think it is time for this government to state in which direction they are heading; what new employment we can expect in northern Ontario. Could the minister reply to some of those questions and perhaps give us some clearcut direction as to which way the government is moving?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I might say this matter has been discussed at some length in the earlier part of the examination of my ministry's estimates. But I would be glad to review some of the things we are doing in the Sudbury area.

Just to review: The 2001 conference that followed the layoffs at the Inco plant last fall was by local initiative, with representatives brought together at the local level, whereby they would look at some diversification of their economic base. They required a certain amount of seed money. The member will recall the Premier himself went to Sudbury and met with delegates of the 2001 conference. I think it was a two- or three-day conference held at the university. I was pleased to attend the conference with the Premier. At that time he announced $600,000 would be allocated over a three-year period for that local group to look at their problems, to bring the community together, in one direction and try to work on some diversification of their economic base. That is moving ahead.

In fact, the member for Sudbury and my colleague, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) have just returned from the Sudbury basin where they were looking at the Burwash site for a development that may occur as a spinoff from the 2001 conference and that could employ up to 200 people in a field other than mining. That is well underway, that is moving ahead.

We are subsidizing the development of an industrial park in the Sudbury basin known as the Walden Industrial Park. In previous years we have invested well over $2 million in it; this year $752,000 is allocated in these estimates for the further development of Walden Industrial Park.

In addition to that we have commissioned a study, again working with the people of the regional municipality of Sudbury, to look at import substitution. The local people felt there were many products and items being used in the Sudbury basin and that whole general area, that could be grown or manufactured right in their area. That study is moving ahead right now. We think there is good potential, because of the large population in the Sudbury area, to diversify the economic base. I must say that I am confident, with local involvement and local initiative, we will achieve some goals there.

In connection with the controls of the export of raw ores, we have, under section 13 of the Mining Act, if I recall correctly, certain restrictions as to what one can export, where one can export—

Mr. Haggerty: Exemptions, too.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, certain exemptions are allowed after very careful examination, of course, of that application. Also, of course, the member is very much aware of the 30 per cent incentive under the Mining Tax Act that saw the development of Texasgulf at Timmins. He will recall very vividly the former member for Cochrane South standing up and going counter to his own colleagues on that particular issue. He wanted it; he knew what it meant to have that massive development by Texasgulf.

Mr. Foulds: That's one seat we're going to win back next time, too. Your member isn't going to hold it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have fun kidding him about that. Every time I see him I remind him of it. It depends where you're sitting, but he felt very uncomfortable during those discussions. Nevertheless, Texasgulf is going there and putting in further diversification of the development to refine its ores in the Timmins area. The steel-rolling mill in Sudbury is also moving ahead; Inco is developing one there.

To go back to my earlier comments, the free enterprise system is at work. If there is a dollar to be made, if there is profit to be made as it compares to other world manufacturers, I am sure we will get them there, through tax incentives and other incentives. Now that my colleague the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has come forward with the Employment Development Fund, I think we will see further activity in northern Ontario to broaden and diversify our economic base there.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's comments. But the question I was directing to him was about the nickel policy. One of the recommendations by the minister's task force was that there should be a platinum refinery in Canada or in Ontario, and that relates to precious metals. Has the minister had any discussion with Inco or Falconbridge to tell them that they must manufacture more of their finished products here in Canada?

In Huntington, Virginia, Inco has a large research centre. Inco also has a battery company in the United States. We did not derive much benefit from the capital that left Canada to help purchase that battery company. We did not gain any jobs out of that; they all occurred in the United States.

All I am trying to convey to the minister is that it is time he sat down with Inco, or with any of the nickel companies in Ontario, and started to lay down some policy to them; to tell them that they must create additional jobs here in Ontario. I am sure we are going to find out, after the strike is settled, that Inco is not going to employ the 12,000 workers it had prior to the strike.

Mr. Bolan: It is going to go down to 9,000.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes. They will end up with about 9,000. A similar situation has occurred at Port Colborne, where they have had labour disputes over the years; employment has dropped considerably. I suggest to the minister that we are going to have problems in the Sudbury area. One can see it coming; if one follows all the testimony before the select committee, one can see that what the company wanted originally was a reduction in manpower there.

I can pretty well guess that what is going to happen after the labour dispute in Sudbury is settled is that there will not be 12,000 employees there, but 9,000. I think the company has got what it wanted from this strike. I hope it does not happen, but it is almost a sure thing, if I correctly interpret the testimony before the committee. I suggest to the minister that it is time somebody gave some direction to Inco. They cannot call all the shots here. Government is going to have to take some action in this particular area.

The minister's report is called A Nickel Policy for Ontario, and I would like to see something definite come out of that. The people in that area are looking for some direction from the government. I suppose that was their hope, that the government was working in this area.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, A Nickel Policy for Ontario is a Ministry of Natural Resources document. I am not aware where it stands at this time as to being totally accepted by the government. The member might direct that question to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld).

Mr. Haggerty: You're the policy man there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, I'm not a policy man, No, it's a co-ordinating ministry; I'm not setting policy. I want to make that very, very clear. We don't set government policy. We do it as a government.

Mr. Haggerty: Are you a consultant, Leo?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Very much so. I had discussions with the Inco people and the Falconbridge people when I had responsibility for the Ministry of Natural Resources. I had discussions with them on a very regular basis, doing just what you're suggesting, trying to lean on them as strongly as we could to have them refine—of course, they are refining—and maybe even fabricate more ores in Ontario.

But I have to say to you—and I've said it before—that the world is getting smaller and smaller and smaller. As the Third World becomes more developed, as more of the technology and the expertise has become known to them, competition increases. I personally have certain reservations as to what will happen when the 700 million people in China start looking around their backyard when it comes to the development of their country. And it's going to happen. There's just no question.

We've seen what's happened in Guatemala. We've seen what's happened in Australia, in South America—all these places where they have large, rich mineral deposits are now being developed. We're producing the same amount of nickel as we were several years ago. At that time we had 95 per cent of the world production.

Mr. Wildman: Except that Inco is developing those ore deposits.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But what's happened is now the world is using more nickel and they're getting that nickel from some other place.

Mr. Foulds: Developed at our expense.

Mr. Wildman: With our taxpayers' money.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's the worldwide situation. We can't bury our heads in the sand and say, "We're rich in resources; you've got to come to us for those resources." They don't have to come to us any more. There are resources all around the world.

Mr. Foulds: That's because of 35 years of your government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Japan has proved that. They don't have to come to Canada to get their nickel supply.

Mr. Foulds: They go to Inco in other places.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think we have to broaden our outlook. I think we have to become specialists in certain fields. I have a certain amount of feeling for the member for Sudbury East when he says we should be specialists, say, in mining equipment development. I have to agree with that. I don't argue with that. I think that's the kind of thing we should become specialists in.

We've seen what's happened in Japan. They're specialists in the electronics field, which we can't even touch. Other nations are specialists in their field. As Canadians that's the route we should be going, and we're going to have to go that route.

Mr. Roy: Can I get in on this vote?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This is in connection with vote 702, item 2.

Mr. McClellan: Ask him about the Ottawa courthouse.

Mr. Roy: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Just in case some of my colleagues think I don't know what I'm talking about, I want to tell you that first of all—

Mr. McClellan: I've never heard you talk about anything else.

Mr. Roy: —when you're talking about the north, I come from some place in Saskatchewan that's as far north as the communities you represent. I had the fortunate experience—the minister will be interested in this—as a law student to be working up in Dryden. Right in your own riding. I think I've talked to you about that. I worked my summers up there.

Mr. Foulds: Dryden has never recovered from it.

Mr. Roy: I stand here not to be overly political towards this minister. And I won't make any accusations that you were named minister strictly for political reasons—I won't say that. I have said it on other occasions, but I won't say it here this evening.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What did you say? I didn't hear that.

Mr. Roy: What I do want to discuss with the minister is an area of the north which he represents, and that's the town of Dryden, and the unfortunate situation—the existing situation, I suppose—with Reed Limited.

I want to tell you while I worked in Dryden I worked in the pulp and paper plant and then I worked in the back in the chemical plant for a summer and a half. At that time—this was back in 1964-65—I used to look around with a certain amount of concern. Pollution and the environment was not the issue it is today, but as we used to walk out of the plant I was aware of the smell when the wind was the wrong direction over the town of Dryden. But more important, we used to look at that pipe that was gushing out the waste into the Wabigoon River, at the suds and the colour of the water; and then you would look at the Wabigoon River and follow along and see it was dead all the way through.

Unfortunately, I suppose the blame cannot be attributed to any particular level of government because this has been going on now for a number of years. People had not realized the effects of it, but nevertheless it seems to me that certainly the people involved with Reed paper company had some knowledge of the damage they were causing.

What I want to know from the minister is, having seen the waste, having seen the pollution, and having seen over the past years the approach taken by Reed—and we've seen it again recently when they were talking about the fact that if you enforced pollution controls, if you force them into a situation where they have to meet deadlines to cleanup their act sort of thing, there is that threat of closing down, of shutting down the town of Dryden. There is always that implied threat: "If the criteria are too stringent we can't operate; and if we can't operate of course you're leaving Dryden open, because there is very little industry that could take up the slack from Dryden."

I want to ask the minister this, having in mind this implied threat, and having in mind that just recently the government turned down a request for funds—I don't know what the funds were for—

Mr. Bolan: Funny money.

Mr. Roy: Yes, we can call it funny money. Possibly we could supply it with my leader's application form, which I thought was right on for this type of project.

Having in mind that this has been turned down, what is the situation in Dryden? I would think this would be an area that not only as the minister of the north but as a member for that area, he could tell us whether the people of Dryden are still living in fear of this plant announcing somewhere down the line that they're shutting down operations. That's the first thing I want to know.

Second, I want to know what steps did you take as minister of the north, and as member for that area, to attempt to diversify the economy of an area like Dryden? What alternatives have been proposed? Do you have any plans in mind about bringing other businesses or other plants or something else to replace it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: A new courthouse.

Mr. Roy: A new courthouse? Well this minister being from the south doesn't realize that it's not a county town, Dryden is missing that. The new courthouse is Ottawa, Jim; that's where we need it.

So could the minister tell us if there are any plans to cushion the blow should that happen? What steps have been taken so that the people of Dryden—and I have to say,

Mr. Chairman, that they're fine people, they're industrious.

Hon. Mr. Snow: How would you know?

Mr. Roy: How would I know? I lived there for two summers, that's how I know. I got to meet people there.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Did you speak frankly?

Mr. Roy: I wasn't afraid of going up there, Jim.

Hon. Mr. Snow: They don't call me Jacques Neige.

Mr. Roy: They don't call you Jacques Neige? No, they wouldn't recognize you up there. They wouldn't recognize you. They wouldn't know that you were a big-shot in Toronto. In Dryden they're all the same, everybody is treated the same way.

I want to ask the minister what he can tell us? Certainly that's part of this vote. What can you tell us about the situation in a town like Dryden? What steps did you take, first of all to assure that the implied threat by Reed paper does not unduly jeopardize the existence of that town? Second, what steps have been taken so that diversification can take place?

I understand that they're far from the markets. I understand the problem is that you just can't be moving a General Motors plant up there. It's not that easy. But nevertheless Dryden is a thriving community. It's a good area to be living in. What steps are being taken to encourage industry to locate in that area?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am particularly pleased the member for Ottawa East has taken such an interest in northern Ontario and in Dryden. I welcome his input and his concern. It is a real concern to me both as the Minister of Northern Affairs and the local member responsible for that area, one who has been around for many years, long enough to see the great pipe to which you refer.

I can recall when Dryden had about 2,000 people. We used to play hockey against the town of Dryden; I came from the little town of Hudson. In fact, right after the Second World War the hockey team from Hudson on occasion used to beat the hockey team from Dryden, Dryden was that small.

Mr. Roy: They used to call them the Flying Frenchmen in those days.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: When you think of it, that mill has existed since 1913; it has been in existence some 60-odd years, and I don't think there is another pulp mill in Ontario that has had its ups and downs and financial problems. Every type of problem that can beset an industry has certainly come to that mill at Dryden.

You mentioned the Employment Development Fund being denied the Reed paper company. As the Minister of Industry and Tourism pointed out, the application they submitted did not meet the criteria and the criteria were clearly spelled out in his answer to the Legislature.

Your leader just returned from a visit to the great town of Dryden.

Mr. Foulds: Did he really?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: Did he get lost?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't think the honourable member has to worry about his political future if Stuart Smith goes to his riding, I can assure him of that.

Mr. Foulds: No, I didn't even hear of the visit.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't think he made any political impact in my riding. It was a learning exercise.

Mr. Roy: Don't be too sure. I can remember when we had a Liberal member in your riding.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You can? Can you remember that far back?

Mr. Roy: That's right. When I was in Dryden we had a Liberal member.

Mr. Foulds: They almost lost the federal member up there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There have been some good Liberal members, personal friends of mine, both of them.

I don't think he made a great impact. In fact his suggestion was that the government should put in the pollution control equipment at the Reed paper company.

Can you imagine what that would do? Every pulp mill in the country would be lined up at Frank Miller's door and at Harry Parrott's door, instead of going the route the government is going, saying, "Look, meet the criteria we have laid out to you. We will give you incentives. Use your dollars for modernization; use your dollars up to a one-to-three basis for the development of pollution control measures which are required."

Nobody has yet to my knowledge really recognized what that company has put into pollution control programs. I think it is close to $20 million in the last few years. You don't get the fallout in Dryden that you used to get on your car. I don't know if you remember that. You would park your car and it was all covered with snowflakes. Well, that has gone.

The smell to which you refer has been cut in half. They have worked on it. The pipe has gone from the Wabigoon River; you don't see that any more. There is no foam on the river as there used to be. They are working on the primary settlement basin behind the plant. There is work going on but you don't hear anything about that; that doesn't make news; that doesn't make a headline.

If there is one town that is down and which everyone wants to shove down further it is the town of Dryden. I think the time has come to put a stop to it. I say that in all sincerity. I don't think the people in the town of Dryden want to hear any more about their mill. They are the most loyal employees you will find anywhere in the province.

As you correctly pointed out, they are industrious and friendly. They will always be that way. One community in my riding I love going to is the town of Dryden. They are a young group, they are vibrant. They love their community and they love their mill. Don't ever forget that. The resources committee is going out next week and they will get that loud and clear—that the feeling the employees have for their mill is something outstanding.

They want to do everything they can. They are aware of the pollution problems. Like everyone else they are aware there is a problem there. Like anybody else, they would like to get it cleaned up. They also realize there are certain financial problems, there are certain economic limits that must be maintained and lived up to which that company is trying to do. I am not here defending the Reed paper company, I want to make that very clear, but I will stand and defend the town of Dryden until the end.

You ask what we are doing to look to the future. We don't think there is a crisis at stake with regard to the town of Dryden, because that mill will always operate. I am firmly convinced of that.

Mr. Roy: That's not what Reed says.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's going to operate, because if the Reed paper company doesn't operate it somebody else will. The resources are there; all the ingredients are there to maintain that plant. They are located right in the middle of the resources—timber limits are on the north, south, east and west. It's ideally situated. The transportation routes are ideal. They have energy; the gas line goes right through the town of Dryden. They have electrical power from their own dam and from Ontario Hydro. Most important of all, they have a solid, sound labour force; a loyal labour force. They've got all the ingredients and the markets are there. You don't have to be a mathematician or a genius to figure out that mill will operate.

I would hope the resources committee would come back and be realistic when they look at the problems facing that particular plant, given it is two or three years in a 66-year period. Is that going to stop the world? Is that going to stop the world if we allow them a little more time?

Mr. Foulds: Have you talked to your colleague, the Minister of the Environment, about that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I have. He knows my feelings—and we may differ. I say that right here, we may differ. He has a job to do and I respect his responsibilities. I always will and I would not want to interfere or force him to change. But I do think in this instance we have to be very realistic and positive about it and take what you refer to as the cloud away from the town of Dryden. Let's get on with the job.

The town of Dryden has a great future. If you know the geography of northwestern Ontario, you know Dryden is situated geographically in the heart of northwestern Ontario. It is fast becoming the hub of northwestern Ontario in the field of transportation.

The jet port is being developed. Nordair goes in there, as the Minister of Transportation and Communications points out, on a regular basis. In fact, you can leave Toronto tomorrow morning, be in Dryden all day, take a Nordair plane tomorrow evening and be back the same day. That's excellent service and it's because of that excellent jet port.

That airport has been developed through the initiative of the local people. They saw the opportunity, they seized the opportunity and they ran with it. They've done one tremendous job in developing that jet port. Thousands of people go through the Dryden airport on an annual basis. It was stunning to the Air Canada officials when they looked at the number of passengers coming to and going out of Dryden. They couldn't believe the numbers.

Mr. Roy: What's the flight, Toronto-Dryden-Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is one flight which is routed Toronto-Dryden-Thunder Bay-Sault Ste. Marie-Toronto. It goes right through. I think there's another one that goes Toronto-Thunder Bay-Dryden-Winnipeg.

Mr. Roy: That's Nordair.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, it's Nordair. It's excellent service and they are using 737s on a daily basis.

There are things we've done in the area other than the development of the jet port. Natural Resources has spent a considerable amount of money in developing a land base for their Tracker aircraft to fight forest fires in the area.

We built a new provincial building in Dryden. Those members who will go up next week will see that magnificent new provincial government edifice that houses a number of ministries and services the entire area.

We're also going to complete and open up this year the new road that will link Fort Frances with Dryden. That again, will put another spoke into the wheel of transportation into the town of Dryden.

Dryden, of all communities in northwestern Ontario, has an extremely bright future. In fact, last year alone their building permits topped $9 million which was the highest for any community in northwestern Ontario. It's been like that for the last two or three years. The faith of the entire area is in the town of Dryden. I think it's up to us in the Legislature to go along with that faith and support the local people as much as we can.

So I have no qualms or fears about the future of Dryden. The plant will operate and the resources are there. Let's get on with the job of developing and keeping those jobs in place.

Mr. Roy: I am pleased to hear of the bright prospects for the town of Dryden. Having listened to the minister, however, if what he says is a fact about the mill in Dryden, that it will continue to operate, the resources are there, the markets are there and the work force is there, then in such circumstances how is it that this company can sort of threaten the government and say, "If you try to force us too quickly with your pollution controls, we will shut down?" How can that have any impact? Doesn't the approach taken by my leader who says, "Either we lend you the money or we put in those things and you pay for it on the long term" make sense?

If the economic future is there and if the mill is going to continue to operate viably and economically, why can't the pollution be stopped? I appreciate that progress has been made, but you know as well as I do they have a long way to go. The disaster that has been caused in that area is probably the worst in the whole of Canada, unfortunately. I don't say that about it gloatingly, or take any special satisfaction in saying it, but it is a fact.

Considering the pollution still going on there, how can Reed be threatening the community by saying, "If the government is too tough with us we will close down"? According to what you are saying that is a bluff. Why doesn't the government—and I understand the position of the Minister of the Environment—come down a bit harder and have them meet pollution controls?

As you say, everything is there for them to continue. In the long term, the markets are there and they are going to be able to pay for it. What they are doing is trying to bluff their way out of something. I find that sad considering as you say, the future prospects of a town like Dryden.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I want to make it very clear the present company that operates the Dryden mill has never, to my knowledge, threatened the government or the town of Dryden with closure.

Mr. Roy: What the hell did they do in committee one year ago?

Mr. Hennessy: Watch your language. That's bad language.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, they did not say that.

Mr. Wildman: They said that they wanted to sell it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They never said they would close. They have made that statement a dozen times.

Mr. Roy: It was a very subtle threat.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They have clearly stated they have no intention of doing that. They have never threatened the government or the town with closure. What they want is a reasonable length of time to put the pollution control equipment in place. The Minister of the Environment has said 1982. Well, 1979 has gone now, so 1982 has gone by the board.

They are saying, "Give us until 1985. We think that is a more realistic time by which we can do it and we may be able to do it with our own resources. We don't need government resources."

To me, it is so simple. I don't know what the argument is about, except—

Mr. Roy: I do know. The longer they pollute, the worse it is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know, but they have been there 66 years. The trouble is that it has now got into a political battle. With all due respect, I think we have to accept that once it gets into the hands of the politicians. Sometimes we all play politics, and pollution is a good issue. Inco is a good issue as it relates to pollution; Reed is a good issue as it relates to pollution. You may make some marks.

Mr. Bolan: It was the politicians who created the problem in the first place by not doing anything about it when they could have.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is easy to say that. With hindsight it is easy to point.

Mr. Bolan: The facts speak for themselves on that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I remember when I first got into politics, we had a town debate in the town of Dryden. I will tell you if you spoke against that mill you were in trouble in that community.

It has to be eased in and it has been eased in. That is the point I was trying to make. A lot of progress has been made. Even in the town of Dryden, with the new sewage treatment plant and the water treatment plant, they have been working on it. I think it is time to get off their backs. It is time to get off that community's back—

Mr. Roy: We are not on the town's back; we are on the mill's back.

Hon. Mr. Bernier—and give them a fair length of time to do the job. That mill has been unique in Ontario in its ups and downs, to which I referred, in a number of different areas. It is so far from the markets and there are a number of problems related to it. Given a reasonable length of time, without government or taxpayers' resources, I think they can do it themselves.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This is item 2. vote 702. It seems to me we can probably discuss the same thing on vote 703, item 1, regardless of what it is.

Mr. Wildman: It seems to me that the minister made a number of comments just now more in his capacity as the member for the area than as a minister of the crown and Minister of Northern Affairs. What we have seen in this whole debate on Dryden, when the Minister of the Environment referred the question to the resources development committee and then appeared before the committee, as did Reed, is that the Minister of the Environment made clear that his 1982 date was predicated upon the fact that the Treasurer was making funds available. Since there were funds available, in terms of what resources the company had itself and the length of time the government was giving them, he felt he didn't have to consider what Reed had to say. Reed was saying it could do it itself by 1985 perhaps. But the Minister of the Environment said, "That doesn't matter. We want it done by 1982 and we don't have to take into account your arguments because there is money available from the Treasurer's program."

Then Reed goes back and says, "All right, if that is the position of the government, we will make a proposal." They make a proposal and the Minister of Industry and Tourism denies it.

What we have is two positions from the cabinet on that. We have the Minister of the Environment saying he doesn't have to worry about the financial problems because there is money available and that he himself isn't concerned with the criteria. Then we have the Minister of Industry and Tourism coming along and saying, "No, you can't have the money because what you are proposing doesn't fit into the criteria." Now we have a third position from the member for the area, who gets up and says, "We should look at 1985 because the company says it can do it, perhaps with its own resources, by 1985. What are a few more years?"

It seems to me we have three positions from the cabinet, much less three positions in the committee, to deal with. When we get that straightened out maybe, we will get the whole matter straightened out for Dryden. Frankly, I am not sure this has anything to do with the estimates. I would like to see this vote pass.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Let the minister reply and do his best to keep it to the point.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In defence of the Minister of the Environment, who I am sure can defend himself very ably, the company just didn't qualify. That is important because the Minister of Industry and Tourism is handling taxpayers' dollars. If the ministry has established certain criteria to which companies must conform to qualify and if this company hasn't qualified, then it is obvious there is nothing he can do but to deny that request. There is nothing that says the company can't come back with another proposal. The Minister of the Environment is correct in saying, "There is a program in place. Qualify for it." The Minister of Industry and Tourism says, "Look at your original application. This application, as presented to us, does not qualify. If you want to re-apply, that's fine."

There is no split in the thrust. There is no difference. I think we are all headed in the same direction.

Item 2 agreed to.

Vote 702 agreed to.

On vote 703, northern communities assistance program; item 1, community priorities:

Mr. Bolan: Speeding along, Mr. Chairman, as we have been for the past few days debating these estimates, I want to mention two areas. One of them is municipal infrastructure, the Sturgeon Falls water supply. Could the minister bring us up to date on that please?

He may recall that a water study was done of that area. He may also recall that we had some correspondence with him over the fact that they ran out of water this winter. He may recall when the pipes froze underneath the bridge they were out of water for some time. I must say the ministry office in North Bay was instrumental in providing immediate assistance from the armed forces, who were able to bring in the necessary pumps and what have you to try to remedy the situation. I would like to know what the minister proposes to do as far as assisting the community in these repairs.

While we are dealing with this vote, I notice "resource development," "conservation authority," under the heading of "list of major projects." The minister might want to look into or consult with the Ministry of Natural Resources about setting up a conservation authority for the Sturgeon River. Did the minister know there is none? If there had been monitoring of the entire system, including the three dams that are operated by Ontario Hydro along that system, some of the damage might have been alleviated—I am not saying it would have—but it is definitely an area that should have that kind of authority.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, the question of the improvement of the Sturgeon Falls water distribution system is something that is on our table at the present time. I have to say to the honourable member that the former Solicitor General of Canada's mother, Mrs. Blais, who is an excellent councillor in Sturgeon Falls, was most adamant on the basis of information from her son that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was going to come in and help Sturgeon Falls. She had it right from Ottawa, right from the chief himself.

We did some investigating and kept hearing that DREE was not interested in Sturgeon Falls. But Mrs. Blais kept coming around, saying, "My son said DREE was interested and would help. Jean-Jacques Blais said so." We kept going around in circles for about six months to a year; then, finally, the information from our staff was proved to be correct in that DREE was not interested in doing anything for Sturgeon Falls.

Mr. Bolan: But you spent some money to make a study of the requirements.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we spent some money; we have $150,000 in this year's budget for Sturgeon Falls which I think will complete the engineering study. We are also working very closely with the Ministry of the Environment with regard to the management by results rating. Apparently their MBR rating is exceptionally low, and the Ministry of the Environment has gone back to look at their needs.

Quite frankly, in discussions with the mayor there, who is a very able fellow, he has pointed out to me his problems on a number of occasions. I am very sympathetic; he has a serious problem. If I had my druthers, of course, we would get on with it very quickly. I have indicated to him that I will be back to him within the near future as to an answer to his request in the hope that we can get something started this year.

Mr. Bolan: What about the conservation authority?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am glad the member mentioned that. As recently as this morning we had a meeting with the Field forest industries to discuss their future in the community of Field. The proposal that Mr. Jack Hope presented to the cabinet committee was very positive, very fair and realistic, and it will be dealt with at cabinet tomorrow.

I can give the member some assurance, from my own point of view, that that industry will remain. There will be some assistance for them. To what extent, I cannot say at this time. But the Ministry of Natural Resources has reassured them as to their timber supply. They are not interested in relocating the plant, because they think they can sustain flooding up to a certain height—it will not interfere with their operations—on a periodic basis. To suffer through that would be cheaper in the long run than relocating the mill entirely.

We strongly feel as a committee—and there were four or five ministers there—that if we are going to spend public funds in relocating the community, we have to have jobs for those people. Just like night follows day, they are needed; so there will be some positive results come out of that meeting.

One discussion that took place was about the idea of more co-ordination with regard to the watershed area. They pointed out to us that Ontario Hydro was involved, the Ministry of Natural Resources was involved, the federal government was involved in Lake Nipissing, and there was no real co-ordinating authority, and that a conservation authority might well be the vehicle for all those things. The Minister of Natural Resources has clearly indicated to them that was one area he was going to look into, because apparently a number of dams had been let deteriorate over the years and the problem may be attributed to that. That issue is right at hand.

Mr. Wildman: In relation to that, I would point out as well that the same situation exists in the Mississagi watershed and in the Goulais River as well, where there was flooding. There have been proposals made for flood control on the Goulais and co-ordination between Hydro and the Ministry of Natural Resources in the Mississagi watershed. Perhaps that's something the minister should be looking at as well.

I would like to ask a question in relation to the list of major projects you have here in the briefing book, where it gives us specifics on most of them and with Temagami it just says "infrastructure." Could you explain what that means?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In these estimates there's a figure of $280,000 to build up the water supply system. This is in co-operation with the Ministry of the Environment and it follows a report given to us by James F. MacLaren. The spring of 1979 is the period in which the plans will be finalized. The money will be used to improve the water supply problem in Temagami.

If you'll recall that system was operated by the ONR for a number of years. We've long felt that was something that really was out of the realm of responsibility of the ONR, so we've encouraged the municipality to take over the water supply system on the condition that we would upgrade it considerably. This is what it's for.

Mr. Wildman: Also, I would like to know, in the list of major socio-medical projects, how much you're spending on each of those in Dryden, Red Lake and the North Shore. What does it mean in terms of "various locations"? I know what that means, but "manpower needs reviews." What are those manpower needs reviews and how much is being spent on those three other areas—Dryden, Red Lake and North Shore, the projects that are listed there?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: For the development of a home for the aged for the town of Dryden, in co-operation with the Ministry of Community and Social Services, there is $120,000 in these estimates.

We have a proposal from the town of Red Lake for the development of a medical centre that will house the doctors in that area. We're working on a two thirds, one third grant. We haven't got the exact figures but they're looking at something around $200,000 in total. They will raise their third locally and we will assist them for the development of this medical centre to which they could attract doctors. Many of these areas have extreme difficulty in attracting doctors.

It is similar to what we were doing in Ignace. We did it in the riding of Rainy River; we assisted in the development of a medical centre there. Rainy River has come forward with a similar request.

We've assisted in the development of similar facilities in Nakina and in Geraldton to attract and to encourage dentists and doctors to stay in those areas.

Manpower reviews: Yes, we have a figure of $30,000 in this year's estimates to determine the manpower needs and new programs being implemented in northern Ontario by the children's services division. I think that announcement went out today in co-operation with the Ministry of Community and Social Services. That's an indication of how we work with the other ministries providing the funds and doing the necessary things that should be done.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, isolated communities:

Mr. Wildman: Could the minister explain the lower estimate in the 1979-80 estimates? It's now down to $500,000 from the $630,000 in 1978-79. Can he explain the reason for that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We had $630,000 there last year. Quite frankly, there was a lack of applications. In fact, much of the funds were used for the purchase of fire trucks so we didn't receive as many applications as we anticipated. We think the $500,000 figure is sufficient for this year. Many of the requirements and requests have been responded to. Something like 42 municipalities now have received some form of fire protection and assistance so the bigger ones are being looked after—at least until we get to the sewer and water requirements. But the number of applications received was going down and we strongly felt that $500,000 would do us for this year. If we're short, we can move to the regional priority budget and supplement the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, if it's necessary.

Mr. Wildman: If the minister is looking for applications, the community of Searchmont would like to get some further assistance. I mentioned that before. They need a bigger truck. The one they have now can't make the hills in the winter time if they carry a full load of water.

Mr. Roy: That could be a problem if the truck can't go up hills.

Mr. Wildman: If they don't carry a full load they don't have a large enough capacity when they go to a fire. They just get it under control when they run out of water and they have to go back and get more water. When they come back, of course, the building is burned to the ground. It is a bit of a problem.

Mr. Roy: Did you promise to give them a bigger truck, Leo?

Mr. Wildman: Good.

I'd like to know about two matters in relation to inspections. One, who is responsible for fire inspections in the unorganized communities? Two, who is responsible for enforcing the building code?

As we all know, the government came out with a revised building code a couple of years ago. They had seminars for municipal building inspectors—they had a big fanfare with a lot of changes and very complex things. Yet, I don't know who, if anyone, enforces this or gives advice to people with regard to the building code when they're building their houses in unorganized areas.

As a matter of fact, we're carrying out extensive programs, as the minister has alluded to and other members have alluded to earlier, under the OHRP program in unorganized communities. The ministry is carrying out the administrative functions of that through the ministry's Northern Affairs officers, but I don't think anyone is enforcing the building code.

On fire inspections, recently I had a complaint in my area from the Goulais River area about Mountainview School. A number of the parents were very concerned about the fact that an old annex—the old one-room school—was being used as a sort of extra classroom, rather than a portable. They were very concerned that it perhaps didn't come up to the fire marshal's standards. As a result they asked me if I could get an inspection done.

They had approached the nearest municipality, Sault Ste. Marie, and asked the fire chief for an inspection and he said they could do it, he supposed, but it really wasn't under their jurisdiction. I contacted the fire marshal and they did finally make arrangements to have the Sault Ste. Marie fire department go out and inspect them.

Is that a normal situation? Is it really on an ad hoc basis? Or, if there isn't any inspection now, is the ministry ready to make any kind of recommendation to the fire marshal's office and to the Ministry of Housing in terms of these two codes and for the enforcement in unorganized areas?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, the co-operation we have from the fire marshal's office and the Solicitor General is second to none as it relates to the fire protection program in unorganized communities. In fact, we do have the resources to provide the necessary equipment, but we don't move in until the fire marshal's office has gone into that community, looked at it and made certain recommendations following its personal and direct review.

Even after that review is completed and the equipment is delivered, there are extensive training programs to train the people who will be using that equipment to the best of their ability. So, they not only monitor the community before to give it advice as to what equipment should go in there, but they come in after and train the individuals who will be protecting their community with the equipment we have placed there. We just couldn't do without their co-operation, no question about it. We couldn't put equipment in those communities without that type of training.

We would express our appreciation to the fire marshal's office for its continued co-operation and I would like to point out, while the fire marshal does train those firemen to operate the equipment, we have not moved into the home inspection program as yet. In unorganized areas there is no authority, except on a voluntary basis, of course, for people to have their homes inspected. In that case, the volunteer fire brigade—they are all on a volunteer basis—would go.

With regard to public buildings, the fire marshal's office can be requested to come in; schools, libraries, arenas, this type of thing, they will do that on request. But we have not gone into that home inspection program as yet.

The building code is another matter. The Ministry of Housing is grappling with this issue. It is a difficult one because of the vastness of northern Ontario. They have been in touch with us to get some idea of how they would administer. I think Natural Resources has been helping them also to find a solution without bringing in a large number of civil servants to walk around as policemen. It is yet to be resolved as to how that will be applied.

Because of the feelings of UCANO West and UCANO East, the local services board is getting into this type of regulatory control, planning and so on. I don't think we have the expertise to do it, so we have shied away from that. That is why we have gone strictly to the providing of services on the local services board. We are not going to see them administer the building code in those areas. That is something the Ministry of Housing has to come to grips with and there is no question in my mind that if there were proper building codes applied many of our problems related to fire and development would not exist; in other words, there would be the prevention measures that we all want to see. I am sure, as we go down the road, the Ministry of Housing will have answers.

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3, telecommunications facilities:

Mr. Wildman: I have the same question in relation to item 3. Could the minister explain the reason for what appears to be a steady drop in the funding under this program where we have a substantial drop from 1978-79 estimates to those of 1979-80?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The northern communities assistance program; this relates directly to the telecommunications facilities in the far north. Those facilities are now in place. They are completed. The $345,000 is the cost which I believe you will now see on an ongoing basis for the maintenance and the operation of those services in the remote areas of northern Ontario.

Item 3 agreed to.

Vote 703 agreed to.

On vote 704, regional priorities and development program; item 1, regional priorities:

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Minister, with respect to road construction, there is one road in the northwest part of my riding about which you and I have been corresponding. It's the road which runs from Field to River Valley. I see the minister has a map there. It would be identified on the map as highway 539. This is a road which is in very poor condition. I realize you can only do so much with the budget which you have, however, since it is your function to co-ordinate the priorities of road construction, I really would urge you to consider this in your priorities for the following year.

My reason for concern is the road is heavily used by truck operators who are in the logging business. Of course, at the worst time of year, which is the spring, the loads are cut down to sometimes one quarter. They run into some great difficulties as far as making a profitable haul when one is dealing with a quarter or half load. I am sure it's a problem you have heard of in many communities in northern Ontario, but it is a very significant and very real problem to these people, primarily because of the big cutbacks which they have to make on the loads.

It's not a very long road; maybe it's 10 miles long. Basically it's a question of rounding out some curves, shaving down some crests, and, of course, general widening and ditching.

The other road is one which goes north of there. It's identified as highway 805. It goes from River Valley in a northerly direction towards Grassy Lake and other points up that way.

I have had several contacts with loggers who are very much concerned about the condition of this road, particularly in the winter time when they are approaching crossings. They have to cross four level crossings where they encounter considerable difficulties. In fact, there have been a couple of incidents where they nearly ran into a train on coming down hill; the crossing is there.

I've had some co-operation with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications in my region, however, I think it's something which should be brought to your attention since it is your function to co-ordinate the priorities of road construction in the area. I have to say I realize there is only so much money to go around, but nevertheless, when you do consider your priorities again, I am drawing these two specific pieces of road in my riding to your attention.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think it's very appropriate the honourable member should bring it up at this time because there will be great joy. I am sure, in River Valley this Saturday as the honourable member will be there with my parliamentary assistant to deliver a fire truck.

Mr. Bolan: At four o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: At four o'clock in the afternoon, instead of one. I'm sorry.

Mr. Roy: Have you got a parliamentary secretary?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He is a parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Roy: Are you kidding?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The north is so big, I tell you, I spend 50 per cent of my time there, as he does.

Mr. Chairman: I think that comes under the first vote.

Mr. Roy: Is that John Lane?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. He works up and down, bringing the good things to northern Ontario, because I'm so busy I can't do it all myself, quite frankly. There's so much happening up there.

River Valley will be the recipient of a fire truck on Saturday and I'm going to ask my parliamentary assistant to give me a report on road 539; we will certainly have a look at your suggestions when we move into setting our priorities for next year.

Mr. Wildman: I wonder if the minister could give us some kind of update as to what is happening with the study on the Killarney road and when he expects that might be completed, so that people who live in Killarney, the young people, won't have to travel all the way to Sudbury to go to school so that they would have a much shorter route, so that they could attend school in Espanola. Could the minister give some indication when that study is going to be completed and when we might have some kind of government decision on that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have that information at my fingertips, but I will get it for the honourable member as soon as I can and forward it to you. It is one that we are anxiously awaiting, because the local member, the member for Algoma, has as you know—

Mr. Wildman: Algoma-Manitoulin.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —Algoma-Manitoulin— has been most instrumental in pressing for such a development. In fact we have looked at the possibility of airstrip development at Killarney. All this hinges on that particular report that the consultants, with the co-operation of MNR, are doing. I will try to get the information for you as quickly as I can and get back to you.

Mr. Wildman: I will forgo raising the matter of the Granary Lake road once more. However, I would like the minister to consider the question of tertiary roads as well as main highways in the north, the need for upgrading of secondary and tertiary highways, which to an extent may have been put in the back seat recently because of the need, and the very serious need, for the upgrading of main highways like highway 17 and so on. If he is thinking of that perhaps the minister might look at 638 and 552 west in Algoma.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I will certainly take that into consideration.

Mr. Chairman: Shall vote 704 carry; or just the items? The members have sort of strayed around a little.

Items 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On item 4, rail and ferry services:

Mr. Bolan: I see the ONR boys over there; they thought they were going to get away.

I want your undertaking that you are not going to carry out the threats which are being made by the chairman of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission and by his hatchet man up in Kapuskasing, Piche, that you are not planning the decentralization of the Ontario Northland Railway, specifically the bus passenger service, the telecommunications service, as well as the rail repair service. You know, Mr. Minister, and we have discussed this several times before, and I have raised it in the House, that these are the verbal threats, the verbal harassment, which these two members of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission are spewing in northeastern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I thought your party favoured decentralization.

Mr. Bolan: Keep quiet, Gordon we will get to you later. We might find a work camp for you up in northern Ontario; in fact we will build one for you.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Don't you have nasty things to say about northern Ontario; it is a great spot.

Mr. Bolan: In any event, Mr. Minister, I want your undertaking there is nothing like that going on, because I want to be able to say to the people of northeastern Ontario tomorrow, that the ONR is owned by the people of Ontario and that it is not the private railway line of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is very much aware, the commission is given the responsibility to administer the affairs of the ONR in the best interests possible of all the people. I have not heard them talking of any move related to the matters to which the honourable member refers. I see it in the newspapers.

Mr. Bolan: Oh come on now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I said the commission as a whole. The odd individual commissioner may be making noises or—

Mr. Bolan: Yes, but he is the chairman. Didn't you know that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, he is not.

Mr. Mathews is the chairman. I think he laid it out clearly to the chamber of commerce that there was no big move to move out of North Bay. I think that is very clear.

Mr. Bolan: That was after the minister put the whip to him.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They have a responsibility to run an operation as efficiently and economically as possible and in the best interests of the people of northern Ontario. I am pleased to say I think they are doing that, and I am sure they will continue to do it.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to explain what he meant in his answer in the question period that the ministry and the commission have not had serious discussions with VIA Rail. What did he mean by saying that he had not had serious discussions with them?

Mr. Bolan: That is what the deputy minister said up in North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would be glad to answer that. We all know the federal government has passed a certain piece of legislation giving VIA the authority to control and to get into passenger railway service. We met with them in a very informal way, saying, "Look, where are we going with the VIA takeover?" if you want to call it that. They made it very clear to us: "We are not prepared even to talk to you at this point in time. We are interested in getting the trans-continental service into place. We are working with the CNR and the CPR on getting those main lines operational under the VIA umbrella. We will get back to you." That is what I meant when I said we had not engaged in any serious discussions with VIA.

Mr. Wildman: But the minister was interested.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We do not have any choice, quite frankly; that will be their decision. They will be looking to other provinces that have provincial railways too, I suspect, but we have had no serious discussions with them to this point in time.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I want to comment that there may be commitments I have made to the members during the course of the examination of my estimates. I am going to ask my staff, as I did last year, to review all the things we have said and the ideas we have exchanged. If I have made commitments to provide information and not fulfilled those commitments, then I will do so in writing to the individual members. I hope that will be satisfactory.

Items 4 and 5 agreed to.

Vote 704 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On motion by hon. Mr. Grossman, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

The House adjourned at 10:34 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NEW PLANNING BILL

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in tabling for the House the white paper on the Planning Act, which sets out the approach this government will take in drafting a new planning act for our province. Honourable members are all aware, I am sure, that the white paper has been through a long review period. There are reasons for this.

First, it should be pointed out that this white paper does not refer to a series of simple amendments to the existing act. Rather, it proposes a new act to ensure that the planning process in Ontario meets current needs and future expectations. The Planning Act, like many other acts, receives limited attention from the public. Yet it is one of the most important acts of this province as it sets the rules by which municipalities control development and hence determines to a great degree exactly how this province will evolve.

When the original act was passed in 1946, Ontario was heading into an exciting and demanding period of growth. The province was on the verge of a baby boom. It was facing a time when hundreds of thousands of immigrants were arriving to start new lives for themselves and their children in our province. It was a period of rapid development, unparalleled in our history, when the needs for housing and for industrial and commercial expansion were paramount.

The success of that act in bringing order to development, while ensuring that all segments of society were able to benefit, is readily apparent. For more than 30 years, the original Planning Act stood us in remarkably good stead. Yet times change, and the act must also change. Our concerns about providing more housing, more industry and more commerce have been enlarged to include concerns about protecting our heritage and environment and to ensure that valuable resources such as agricultural land, are retained. In addition, we recognize that municipalities are much more capable of looking after more of their own planning interests than in the past.

Without going into specifics at this time, I would like to state briefly that the main changes proposed by the white paper involve: Refining the role and interests of the province in local planning so that there will be no interference in municipal matters, unless it is necessary to protect the provincial interest; streamlining the planning process in Ontario by cutting red tape and by providing municipalities which are capable with more autonomy in deciding their own local planning issues; and altering the role of the municipal board when it deals with planning matters so that it becomes solely an appellate body able to deal with issues more quickly and efficiently.

I wish to make clear that the white paper represents a firm commitment by this government. Recommendations have been arrived at only after careful deliberation. I would add that because of the extensive public input we encouraged throughout the review process we are convinced that a firm basis exists for the changes that we propose.

In 1975, a committee chaired by Eli Comay, professor of environmental studies at York University, began a complete review of the act. Other committee members were Earl Berger and Eric Hardy, with Dennis Hefferon as legal counsel. Meetings were held across this province by the committee to elicit public response. More than 300 briefs were received to help the committee in preparing its recommendations.

In June 1977 the committee's report was tabled in this House and distributed across the province for review and comment. Upwards of 350 briefs were received related to the recommendations of the Planning Act Review Committee. At the same time, we initiated further studies and consulted with other ministries and agencies to arrive at a position that we are convinced is both far-sighted and responsible. The results of these labours are contained in the white paper.

It is the intention of my ministry to again contact local governments and other organizations and groups to explain the proposals before final legislation is introduced in this House, which should occur early next year. We will sponsor eight regional meetings across the province to explain the proposals in the white paper. These meetings begin next week in Ottawa. In the following three-week period, other meetings will be held in Sault Ste. Marie, Dryden, Thunder Bay, Kingston, London, Barrie and Toronto. During these sessions, we would hope to provide an overview to the heads of council and to planning boards on the intent of the proposed legislation.

In September, we intend to hold workshops with municipal staff, during which the proposals for change will be detailed. We have asked the municipal liaison committee for suggestions on where and when these meetings should take place. While we are committed to the white paper and the draft legislation, we are prepared to consider modifications during this final review period.

I would at this time like to acknowledge the contributions of my predecessors, the Honourable Donald Irvine and the late John Rhodes, who gave this process thrust and direction. I think also we owe a debt of gratitude to Professor Comay of the Planning Act Review Committee and to his associates. Last but not least, a special acknowledgement must be given to ministry staff, particularly those in the local planning branch of my ministry's community planning wing, and to the hundreds of other provincial and municipal officials and other interested persons who contributed through briefs and comments to the preparation of this white paper.

We have set a deadline of November 16 for comment on the white paper proposals and on the draft legislation. It is my intention to introduce to this House for debate legislation for a new act as soon as possible thereafter.

Copies of the white paper, together with a summary which has been printed as a special edition of my ministry's magazine, Housing Ontario, are now being forwarded to all municipalities, planning boards, school boards, committees of adjustment and all others who have participated in or are likely to be affected by this review. Copies are also being forwarded to all members of this House and should be in their mailboxes at this time.

This, we hope, will provide a contemporary and forward-looking act which will do as much for this province in the next 30 years as was done by the existing act for the past 30 years.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have a statement from the Ministry of Natural Resources and one from the Ministry of Energy. I don't know whether the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the third party have received a copy of the one from Energy regarding radiation at Pickering.

Mr. S. Smith: No, we have not.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I hope it will be here shortly; it is on its way.

DOVER TOWNSHIP FLOODING

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would like to table the report of the Dover Township Flood Review Committee. As members will recall, I established this committee of non-ministry people to document the events and actions taken before and during the flooding this March in Dover township. I also instructed the committee to advise me how flood warning and response systems could be improved.

The review committee was chaired by Walter Giles, Assistant Deputy Minister of the Environment. His members were Bill Brisco, a local drainage engineer, and Rosaire Sterling, a local cash crop farmer. The review committee's report is based largely on discussions with the agencies that have flood emergency responsibilities and also on interviews with many of the people who suffered hardship and property damage during the flooding.

The report contains 32 recommendations, 26 of which are aimed at reducing the chances of more flood disasters in the area. Without going into detail, let me say that these 26 recommendations cover four main areas that need to be addressed: preparation of an ice management plan; re-evaluation of the partially-constructed dikes along the lower Thames; preparation of a co-ordinated flood contingency plan for Dover township; and, finally, the need to increase awareness among local residents that floods will occur again and to provide better communications between local residents and the appropriate agencies when those floods occur.

Many of these recommendations can also be applied to other areas of the province where flooding occurs. For example, one recommendation is that interagency flood committees should be established and meet annually to ensure that flood contingency plans for a particular watershed are up to date and properly co-ordinated. The committee also recommends that conservation authorities should promote flood contingency planning by municipalities more aggressively. The committee also points out that an ice management seminar should be sponsored by the province.

I am also pleased to see the committee members, after a thorough review, judged the province's policy on planning for flood emergencies to be, in their words, "basically sound." The committee found only a limited number of areas where the policy could be improved. This was the first real test of that policy since it was established three years ago. In that time, we have not experienced widespread flooding until recently. My staff now intends to review that policy on the basis of the report and the experience that has been gained elsewhere this year. I am sure members will agree that this is the kind of policy that needs to be constantly improved wherever possible.

I would like to thank the committee members for a thorough and timely report. My ministry will certainly review in detail all the recommendations. I am sure the report will also receive the careful attention of officials in Dover township and the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority.

Copies of this report will be sent to those residents whose homes were flooded and will be available in the Chatham public library. They will also be made available to local news media. Other copies will be available at the Dover township office and the offices of the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority and the Ministry of Natural Resources. Comments from the public on this report will be most welcome.

TRITIUM IN DRINKING WATER

Hon. Mr. Auld: Due to the anxiety caused by the Toronto Star's banner headline on "Radiation Traces Found in Pickering Drinking Water," I have asked Ontario Hydro to provide the following information which I would like to share with the House and the public.

First, despite the implications in the newspapers, I have positive assurances from Ontario Hydro that the traces routinely found in the water present absolutely no danger to people, wildlife, plantlife, Scotch drinkers or anybody else.

Ontario Hydro has been monitoring the drinking water ever since the station went into operation. The tritium measurements are recorded and placed on record as part of Ontario Hydro's quarterly technical reports which are available to interested members of the public. The measurements are under the heading, "Pickering Township Drinking Water."

The maximum permissible amount in the drinking water is set by the Atomic Energy Control Board at a level which ensures that anyone drinking the water would not exceed their annual permissible limit of 500 millirem. Ontario Hydro's own standard is such that no release exceeds one per cent of the AECB figure. That is five millirem.

The amounts of tritium in the water supply are far lower than Hydro's own conservative standards. In fact, drinking the water in question would result in far less than one millirem per year. To put this one millirem a year in perspective, natural background radiation is about 100 millirem a year.

The total amount of radiation from all sources at Pickering is about three millirem a year. Of that, less than one millirem represents total tritium emissions and an even smaller amount represents the drinking water measurements. In fact, the amounts of tritium released to the lake from Pickering contribute only a small proportion of the total levels which come mainly from cosmic rays and weapons testing.

Mr. S. Smith: Point of order: The Minister of Energy also sent a statement on the damaged boilers at Pickering nuclear station. I don't know if he intended to read it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I didn't get a copy of that.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister didn't get a copy?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It was kind of a busy morning this morning. I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Peterson: Do you know what's in it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Ah, yes, I went over it at 20 to two. It took a little while to get the copy.

Mr. Peterson: We have a lot of confidence in the minister.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, we do.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable members are so wise.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Following my last statement to the House on May 25 concerning the damaged boilers at Pickering B generation station, some honourable members posed further questions regarding the contracts for these boilers. I said at that time that I would seek further information from Ontario Hydro on these questions and provide it to the House.

On May 28 the Leader of the Opposition asked why competitive tenders were called for the Pickering A boilers in 1965 and for Bruce A in 1970, but not called in 1973 and 1974 for the Pickering B boilers.

The main reason for ordering a repeat of the Pickering A boilers for Pickering B station from the same supplier was to obtain the benefits of economy, efficiency and operating standardization. I think I mentioned that in the previous statement.

The Pickering A boilers had performed well and continue to provide excellent service. I should like to emphasize that Pickering A has achieved world renown since its four units began operation between April 1, 1971, and May 1973. It has broken many production records and, in 1977, on a world-wide basis, Pickering A's four units ranked first, third, fourth and sixth for reliability among more than 80 nuclear units of 500 megawatts or over. Hydro's objective in reordering the boilers for Pickering B was to achieve the same high level of performance as for Pickering A.

As I mentioned in my statement of May 25, Ontario Hydro advises me that at the time Hydro placed its orders with Babcock and Wilcox Canada Limited for the Pickering B boilers, that company was the only one in Canada which had the necessary manufacturing facilities in place—and I underline "in place"—to build this type of boiler.

It is quite likely, as suggested by the honourable member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), that had another Canadian company been awarded a contract for nuclear boilers in the early 1970s, it could have tooled up and delivered the boilers. However, I am advised by Ontario Hydro that the typical schedule for a repeat order requires about 14 months less than for tendering for new designs.

As honourable members will recall, the 1973-74 period was one of great turmoil and uncertainty in the energy field due to world crude oil price increases and embargoes. In this context, Ontario Hydro felt there was some urgency to order the boilers for Pickering B and to have them delivered. Clearly, this was an additional factor favouring a reorder from Babcock and Wilcox Canada Limited.

Nevertheless, as mentioned earlier, the predominant consideration in Hydro's decision not to go to tender for the Pickering B boilers was to obtain the benefits of economy, efficiency and operating standardization.

As the attached chronology indicates, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited placed the order for the nuclear boilers for the Candu station being built in Korea with Foster Wheeler Limited of St. Catharines after a competitive tender in 1976, some two years after the Pickering B orders were placed.

Despite the fact there is a constant flow of information between AECL and Hydro, Hydro informs me it received absolutely no information from AECL which suggests that AECL's decision was based on any concerns AECL may have had with the Babcock and Wilcox design. If the Leader of the Opposition has information to the contrary, I should be happy to receive it.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition further inquired as to the financial status of Babcock and Wilcox to rectify the defects found in the Pickering B boilers. Ontario Hydro's objective is to get the boilers installed in order to limit delays for the in-service dates for the Pickering B units and to ensure the provisions of the contract are met. I can only repeat this is undeniably a complex and difficult legal question which will require considerable discussion before it is ultimately resolved.

The fact that Hydro did tender for the Darlington boilers answers the question asked of me by the member for York South. The scheduled delivery dates for these boilers ranges from March 31, 1982 to May 15, 1985. However, Hydro has directed Babcock and Wilcox to hold off on any significant work on the contract.

I would like to assure the honourable leader of the New Democratic Party that the risk certainly does not rest solely with Ontario Hydro. The contracts with Babcock and Wilcox require the boilers meet performance specifications. The manufacturer will be required to rectify any deficiencies in performance resulting from deficiencies in design or manufacture.

Attached to the statement, Mr. Speaker, is the chronology of large Candu nuclear boiler awards, starting with Pickering A in 1965 and going through to the last one, Darlington, in 1978.

[Later (2:28):]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this isn't my day.

Mr. Cassidy: You've had most of it so far.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The copy of the statement which I read had some pages typed on one side and some on two, and I missed a couple of pages. If I may, I'd like to read them now for the benefit of Hansard.

Mrs. Campbell: It didn't make any difference.

Mr. Cassidy: Nobody noticed the difference.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Between one thing and another it's been a busy day.

Mr. Foulds: Two portfolios are getting too much for you.

Ms. Gigantes: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I thought it seemed longer when I read it this morning. I would like to add pages four and six. Page four follows after "economy, efficiency and operating standardization."

Mr. Foulds: This is called an addendum.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It reads as follows: The Leader of the Opposition also asked about tendering by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for boilers between 1970 and 1974. Attached to my statement for the information of honourable members is a chronology of large Candu nuclear boiler awards, indicating who placed the orders, which of the contracts were tendered and which companies were awarded the contracts. As the chronology shows, AECL tendered for boilers for three reactors in 1973 and 1974, namely, Gently, Argentina and Lepreau, and in each case AECL awarded the contract to Babcock and Wilcox.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked if I was unaware that Babcock and Wilcox did not receive the AECL contract for a Candu station in Korea, partly because of AECL's concern that the Babcock and Wilcox design would produce the tube crimping that did in fact occur. He further suggested that Babcock and Wilcox had been awarded the contract for Darlington, despite the fact that Hydro had been warned that that design would lead to these very problems.

Then page five follows and now I am reading from page six.

Mr. Foulds: These pages aren't concurrent.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I reported last week, these discussions—the discussions about the repair of the boilers—are currently under way between senior officials of Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

The leader of the New Democratic Party asked whether in the case of previous contracts or of the Darlington contract there is any guarantee from Babcock and Wilcox that the very complex and sophisticated boilers will in fact work.

Ms. Gigantes: You don't need the boilers at Darlington at all. Delete Darlington.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I should point out that the order for the Darlington boilers was placed with Babcock and Wilcox in 1978 in competitive tender and theirs was the lowest evaluated tender. Ontario Hydro decided to go to tenders due to design and scale differences from the previous orders.

The Darlington boiler contract was awarded before the discovery of defects in the Pickering B boilers. Ontario Hydro advises me that there was no intimation, prior to the placing of the Darlington order, which suggested that any difficulty would be encountered in the manufacturing of boilers at Babcock and Wilcox.

Ms. Gigantes: You don't need the Darlington boilers. Forget them.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I apologize to the House for the mixup that I have caused.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is much clearer now.

MUNICIPAL LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I will be introducing a bill which contains a number of amendments to the regional acts. Many of these proposed amendments are common to all 10 acts. Each region will be able to contract for insurance to protect the members of its council or any local board, to invest in credit unions, to accept historical documents, and to control parking on regional property. Similar amendments were made to the Municipal Act last fall.

The bill will also increase the maximum rate of interest a regional council may charge an area municipality for failure to pay its levy, from one per cent to 1.25 per cent per month.

Other amendments would apply only to certain regions. In regions where all water and sewer services are a regional responsibility, the region will be authorized to enter into agreements to maintain and repair pipes in condominiums.

In regions where the planning powers of the council are described as being the powers of a planning board, it will be made clear that the quorum for the council on official plan matters is the same as for all other regional responsibilities. In Ottawa-Carleton and York, two changes are being made that were inadvertently left out of the Metric Conversion Statute Law Amendment Act.

In regions where the region provides sewage treatment facilities and the area municipalities provide local sewers, the region will be authorized to control the discharge from local sewers into regional sewers and treatment plants.

A number of amendments proposed in this bill are unique to one region and are included as a result of local requests. In Ottawa-Carleton these amendments will abolish the library boards in Nepean and Vanier and will increase the size of the Ottawa-Carleton Transit Commission. In Niagara, the bill will remove the right of appeal of the method used in calculating sewer rates. In York, it will transfer the responsibility for solid waste disposal to the region.

In Waterloo a minor boundary change is being made at the request of the region and the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo. In addition, because of the method by which the city of Waterloo selects its regional councillors, a small change is included to provide a procedure in the event of acclamations or tied votes. A further amendment will allow the regional municipality of Waterloo to establish uniform sewer rates.

TRITIUM IN DRINKING WATER

Mr. S. Smith: If it's not the Minister of Energy's day, perhaps I should try asking him a few questions. I will ask him, first of all, about the subject of the tritium in the drinking water of the town of Pickering, appreciating the minister's statement that the amount is extremely small and well below anything that would even remotely constitute a hazard.

Would the minister, nonetheless, assist the House by providing us with some additional information? In particular, can he tell us when this tritium was first discovered in the drinking water, whether this is a regular monitoring process and what the level was?

Can he also tell us whether tritium is related to the leakage at the Pickering nuclear station, and if so, where the leakage is taking place, what is the size of the leakage and whether there is a particular leak that is responsible for the recent findings?

I guess basically what I would like from the minister is a more complete report on the level of tritium that is leaking. What is the allowable level? Has there been any change recently? What is the nature of the monitoring process? And so on. Can we have a more complete report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I believe that monitoring has been going on since before the plant actually came into operation—I think from about the time a decision was made to site the plant at its present location.

I believe the background level would be something in the neighbourhood of the existing level. There might be a slight increase because of the fact that the plant itself does have some general emission, as everybody knows; a very minuscule one.

I would remind the honourable members that there was a shutdown because of a leak of heavy water in one of the heat transfer—I've forgotten the term. Not in the boiler but in the heat exchanger. As I recall, it was such a minuscule leak that it was quite a while before the unit was shut down because it took some time to locate the leak.

I think there was one other incident in one of the units at Pickering where there was another leak of heavy water—again, I think, in a similar kind of operation. I'll get all the details of that.

Mr. McClellan: You are really up to date on everything, aren't you?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Since the amounts are so small, and there's so much dispersion from the cooling water effluent, I'm not sure whether it is possible to say whether the current level that is found in the drinking water has been increased because—

Mr. Wildman: I think you'd better share the work with the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wiseman).

Hon. Mr. Auld: —of this heavy water leakage or whether the tritium level is about the same as it was this time last year. I'll get the records, which are available, and the best guess I can get as to the source.

Mr. S. Smith: I thank the minister for his undertaking to obtain the information, although I may parenthetically express some surprise that he doesn't already have the information as to where the leak is, if there is a leak, and, if there's been an increase, what the amounts are.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I understand there is no current leak but there was one which I think all members were aware of not too long ago.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary—
Some hon. members: Oh! oh, no.

Mr. Speaker: That really wasn't a question.

Mr. S. Smith: I sat down in respect of the fact that the minister stood.

May I ask, by way of supplementary, whether the minister can comment on the reported statements by Mr. Steeves, of Hydro, that tritium is a health hazard of a very innocuous nature, considering the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, as quoted in the Porter commission, has said there has not been any major research on the biological effects of tritium? In view of the fact that it was pointed out that this really is, in a sense, a Canadian responsibility, can the minister say if there has been any such research that he knows of and can he report it to the House?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I can inquire. I imagine there has been, but I am no aware of the details. I read that in the paper about 10 o'clock this morning and it took a little while to track down the necessary people to get the information.

Ms. Gigantes: If, as the Porter commission suggested, the minister finds there is no major research on the biological effects of tritium, will he undertake to have such research done, so we can know that these minuscule amounts are not having serious biological effects?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that into consideration when I'm looking into the answers to the Leader of the Opposition's questions.

Mr. McCaffrey: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I think this is a legitimate point of privilege, and if it's to be otherwise described as clarification, I will take your guidance on that. Because this has happened a number of times in the last session I think it might be an appropriate time for me to raise this matter.

Increasingly, under ministerial statements—and I think it's particularly so since the widespread concern about nuclear matters—there have been quite detailed as well as lengthy statements. Properly, the opposition leaders and opposition critics have access to those statements as the minister is reading them. It seems to me, now that we are in a position where there are a number of supplementary questions on this very important matter, it's right and proper that private members of the Legislature also have the statement at the same time.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: That seems to have almost universal accord. I'll discuss that with the House leaders and report back.

Mr. S. Smith: That's a good point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, so the record will show the straight facts, lest the impression be left that the ministers are not providing them for all of the members of the House, I think it should be pointed out this is in accordance with a decision made by the House leaders—in consultation, I believe, with the Speaker.

Mrs. Campbell: We're aware of that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's why I wanted it to show on the record. All of my colleagues and I would be pleased to make those available, if it's the desire of the House.

Mr. McClellan: It's a good suggestion.

Mr. J. Reed: I have a supplementary of the minister. Can the minister tell us, as this statement is made with regard to the element tritium and if tritium is used as the monitoring agent for radiation leakage, are other elements in the system searched for at the same time? In other words, is tritium simply a baseline search that is undertaken or does the ministry look for things like cesium, strontium, iodine and so on?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I understand the figures I was given are for the total radiation from all similar sources.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Energy on his statement regarding the Babcock and Wilcox boiler matter.

First of all, he says on page five of his statement that AECL had provided no information for Hydro concerning the reasons it switched from the Babcock and Wilcox boiler to the Foster Wheeler boiler for the Korea reactor.

May I ask the minister why he keeps repeating this without finding out from Hydro why it didn't ask AECL what the reasons were for this sudden switch? The minister can see from the chronology that Babcock and Wilcox got all the awards from 1965 to 1975. There is a sudden change with regard to the Korea reactor. The minister has said it was a competitive situation, but we have reason to believe the Foster Wheeler one was more expensive than the Babcock and Wilcox one. Therefore, I ask the minister why he is satisfied without finding out from Hydro why it didn't ask AECL the reason for this sudden change.

Ms. Gigantes: We don't know that they didn't ask.

Hon. Mr. Auld: My understanding is that it was a competitive tender and that Babcock and Wilcox's was not the lowest evaluated tender.

Mr. S. Smith: Neither was Foster Wheeler's.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Then who was?

Mr. S. Smith: Maybe they didn't even evaluate the Babcock and Wilcox tender.

An hon. member: The government won't be able to get away with it much longer.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will be delighted to ask Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for any information the honourable members want. It is a federal agency and I would assume the information is available to the Leader of the Opposition if he would get his research office to call them. But I will keep on asking questions of Hydro. I am sure they would have been informed by AECL had there been anything AECL thought was wrong with any of the suppliers with whom they were dealing.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: I want to relate this to another matter in the minister's statement on page five.

The minister says Hydro's objective is to get the boilers installed in order to limit delays. That's in response to the question of the financial status of the company to rectify the matter. Since I offered the minister an opportunity to deny that Ontario Hydro had in fact decided not to go after Babcock and Wilcox Canada Limited for fear of rendering the company bankrupt, and since his statement does not speak of the public interest in terms of recovering that $35 million but only of limiting delays, may I ask him again if he endorses the notion that Babcock and Wilcox should be let go without being chased for this money, and if he endorses any decision Hydro might have made to let Babcock and Wilcox alone for fear of rendering them bankrupt?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I believe I said, in answer to a similar question some time ago, that my understanding was Hydro wanted the work done according to the contract and according to the specifications. I assume that means all the repairs that are the responsibility of Babcock and Wilcox would be done at Babcock and Wilcox's expense.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: There has been absolutely no question in the minds of the authorities responsible at the Point Lepreau nuclear power station in New Brunswick, where similar deficiencies in boilers have been uncovered, that full responsibility lies with Babcock and Wilcox. Can the minister be clear, or can we read the end of his ministerial statement today to mean that Babcock and Wilcox has got to come up with boilers which meet all of the original specifications, even if it means rebuilding them from scratch?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think that is what I said before. I have no idea of the terms of the contract with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for Lepreau. It may be the same or similar to the Hydro contract; it may not. Ontario Hydro tells me it wants the work done according to the specifications and the units to perform according to the specifications, and that is the supplier's responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could inform the House, or the members of the resources development committee representing his party, of the urgency and complexity of this matter, because his members and the members of the New Democratic Party have voted to postpone any consideration of this matter by the committee.

Mr. Wildman: That's not true.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister not agree the matter should be considered by the committee to which it is referred without further delay?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The committee makes its own decisions and I do not purport to interfere with them. I am anxious to see Hydro get on with the job, to tell members the truth.

Mr. Wildman: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Campbell: You get so uptight.

Mr. Wildman: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk knows full well that right now there are negotiations going on in the steering committee of the resources development committee in order to try to bring that matter before one of the committees of this House.

Mrs. Campbell: Which one?

Mr. Wildman: Nobody right now is trying to postpone it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, surely you would be aware of the vote taken in the committee on Tuesday evening.

Mr. Wildman: There was no vote.

Mr. Warner: There was no vote.

Mr. Nixon: There was a vote taken, appealing the ruling of the chairman who indicated the committee did not have the right to change the order of its business which, with respect to the committee, was really preposterous.

Mr. Warner: There was no vote.

Mr. Nixon: There was a vote taken; you and the Tories voted together.

Mr. T. P. Reid: As usual.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are getting into the same difficulty we got into on Tuesday afternoon. There is a difference of opinion, a difference of interpretation about something that went on elsewhere; I am not going to countenance any further debate on it.

Mr. Martel: It's a false statement. They are not telling the truth.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, come on.

Mr. Nixon: Make him withdraw that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member for Sudbury East has accused another member of lying. He knows that is not acceptable in this chamber.

Mr. Martel: That's two days in a row they have come in with that nonsense and I'll not withdraw it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: Total distortion.

Mr. Speaker: Would the honourable member care to reconsider?

Mr. Martel: No, I would not care to reconsider because I'm tired of this guy's lies.

Mr. Martel withdrew from the chamber.
Applause.

Interjections.

[2:45]

Mr. di Santo: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was the one who spoke in the committee on this very subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I said I would not hear any more argument or debate on something that happened outside of this House. I don't think it is appropriate to be trying to accomplish in this House something you weren't able to accomplish in the committee. It is the responsibility of the committee to report to the House and to the Chair if there is something it can't resolve there.

Mr. di Santo: Can I ask that the record be corrected?

Mr. Speaker: What record? I am not in a position to know what went on in the committee so I am not in a position to know whether the record is correct or not.

Mr. Riddell: It's a broken record back here.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to ask the minister as a supplementary whether or not the implication of his last reply is that the specifications by Hydro were inadequate?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Let the member reread my reply.

Mr. Foulds: That is not an answer.

Mr. Speaker: In connection with the last incident, lest the matter go any further, I think I would be remiss if I did not remind all honourable members that it is taken for granted in this chamber that all honourable members are indeed honourable members and would not do anything to misconstrue something that took place here or elsewhere.

I am in no position to determine from the facts available to me what are the facts or what is the proper interpretation. I would just like to caution all honourable members that anything they say in this House is fact in their own honest opinion. I would like them to keep that in mind when they are making allegations back and forth. I have to assume that all honourable members are indeed honourable members.

Mr. Cassidy: I have another question for the Minister of Energy relating to the safety of the Rolphton nuclear power plant in eastern Ontario.

On May 10 and again last Thursday, the minister made statements to this House indicating that the nuclear power station at Rolphton was shut down only for normal housekeeping maintenance. Was the minister informed by Hydro that radioactive heavy water has been leaking from tubes in the heat exchange system at that plant since September 1978?

Is the minister aware that these leaks constitute a danger to safety because of the danger of release of radioactive tritium into the atmosphere? When did the minister become aware that Hydro has decided to postpone the reopening of the Rolphton power plant at least until June 16 because it has been unable until now to complete repairing these problems?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as the first part of the question is concerned the information I have from Ontario Hydro is that it was doing routine maintenance. I do know from previous reports that routine maintenance may include a number of things which may have happened some time before but were not severe enough or serious enough to cause a shutdown until the normal maintenance period came along.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, I was informed yesterday that it was apparent the maintenance was taking longer than originally anticipated and they were now thinking the plant would reopen about, give or take a few days, June 16.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the plant is now going to be closed until June 16 and since it is clear there are safety problems, despite the minister's statement that the plant was shut down only for normal housekeeping maintenance, can the minister explain why, as recently as a couple of hours ago at the House leaders' meeting, both the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party refused to have a debate on the select committee's report, which recommended the Rolphton plant stay shut until this matter of safety could be considered by the select committee.

Will the government now reconsider that position so this House can consider that report and so that the safety questions at the Rolphton nuclear power plant can be explored by a committee of this Legislature before that plant is reopened?

Mr. S. Smith: Why doesn't the leader of the NDP let it go before the committee? That is where it should be discussed, not in the House. We don't need a debate here on it.

Mr. Foulds: The committee has reported, you dummy.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I haven't changed my position, which I thought I made pretty clear in the statement I gave the House about 10 days ago. As far as my information is concerned, the Atomic Energy Control Board, which is the licensing agency, is quite satisfied with the safety aspects of the plant.

In fact, I understand the 10 things that it had been suggested be done over a period of time have all either been completed or found to be unnecessary after further study. Two of the modifications, I guess I'd call them, which have been installed are not yet in use because they are being tested. When they have been tested satisfactorily I assume that the control board's approval will be altered to include the use or the application of those modifications.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister realizes the full implications of what he is telling us? Does he understand that these leaks in the heat exchange system, in combination with an emergency core cooling system which has not even been modified in the patch-up kind of way that the AECB recommended, when these two things are going on at the same time at that plant there are grave questions about the safety of the plant, and doesn't he think it's time for the government to recommend to Hydro that there should be a complete investigation of safety at the plant, given these two circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I just answered that.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, would the minister encourage his members—and one only hopes that the NDP will do the same—on the steering committee of the Hydro committee, now that Rolphton will not be open for another few weeks, to now take up the matter of Rolphton in front of the select committee on Hydro affairs—where witnesses can be questioned, where people can have documents presented to them line by line and be asked for explanation—which is obviously the place for the Rolphton matter to be discussed, rather than have a debate in the House, where no witnesses can be questioned and no expert evidence obtained?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'll think about that.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism about Ontario's buy-Canadian policy and the specific promise of government to give a 10 per cent preference in the Ontario government's purchasing of Canadian goods. Can the minister now say how much is spent annually on the purchase of goods and services by this province, what percentage of this spending is on imported goods and services, and when the government intends to begin releasing the progress reports on the replacement of imports of goods and services by ministry, which the minister promised to provide at the government purchasing conference last November?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are attempting to compile that information. There are some difficulties in doing so, which are partly on account of the fact that for a lengthy period of time there wasn't a statistical analysis kept in this or, I might add, any other government in Canada, which would give a definitive answer to that question. We are trying to set up systems to do that now and I'll have a report for the honourable member shortly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In recent speeches the minister has been saying that the government will consider preferences that are greater than 10 per cent for Canadian goods which are critical, high capital and high technology purchases. Is the minister aware that the Ministry of Government Services purchasers are not aware of that guideline and say that it is not applied in the purchases that are carried out through their ministry? Can the minister say where that policy of special purchasing preference is put down on paper, and can he give us some specific examples of whether or not that policy has been applied in certain cases in order to encourage the development of high technology goods here in Ontario or in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't recall the exact details, but I would think the Hawker Siddeley streetcars were an example of a place in which that policy was implemented. A 10 per cent preference has been in place since 1976 I think, or 1974—

Mr. S. Smith: That wasn't buy Canadian, that was buy Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No it wasn't. With regard to the second part of the question as to where we would give more than 10 per cent, that is on a case-by-case basis. That often comes down to a decision made and a recommendation from the ministry involved to cabinet to ascertain whether in the view of the government as a whole this is one of those cases that merits that special consideration. That policy is well in place.

Mr. di Santo: Since every other industrial country, and the minister may have learned something in Japan, is entrenched by domestic policy either by non-tariff barrier protection or outright incentives to domestic firms, and since these habits will firmly remain even after the GATT negotiations are completed, doesn't the minister think he should start devising a policy for the province of Ontario, since right now we don't have one? Doesn't he think he should study the policies of the other countries and make comparisons and report to this House so we know where he stands, since he is saying one thing and the government through another minister is saying another thing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There has been no question about the fact of our 10 per cent procurement policy. It has been in place since 1974.

Mr. di Santo: That's not what the minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) said Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no; there is no evidence I have heard here today of a situation in which that 10 per cent preference was not given. I can only tell the member that although he may feel we should pay more than 10 per cent and I respect that view, nonetheless, as your leader indicated a moment ago, our policy is 10 per cent, plus more under special circumstances. That, to my knowledge, has been, in each and every case, the system honoured and obeyed. If you have evidence to the contrary I would like to receive it.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANT

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. It relates to his statement of May 24 in which he indicated that $420,000 will be provided through the Employment Development Fund to assist TRW Canada Limited in a $5 million expansion in St. Catharines and an $8 million project in Tillsonburg. Would the minister state to this House, unequivocally, that the expenditure by TRW would not have taken place without the $420,000 from the Employment Development Fund?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Bradley: In view of the fact I attended a sod-breaking ceremony in St. Catharines on April 6, four days before the announcement of the Employment Development Fund in the provincial budget on April 10, and in view of the fact it was known in business circles months before the budget was brought down that TRW was to establish a plant outside of St. Catharines, would the minister not agree the expansion is taking place as a result of favourable markets being taken advantage of by a capable management and a competent work force? Would the minister not agree that since we all assume TRW would not have prior knowledge of the contents of the provincial budget, the $420,000 really represents a windfall to TRW?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I wouldn't. TRW proceeded on the basis of a telegram sent by me on behalf of the government of Ontario on January 4. The reason for this is that we thought it would be quite inappropriate to lose opportunities that might otherwise stay in this province simply because the budget had not yet come down.

An hon. member: I thought the budget was supposed to be secret.

Mr. S. Smith: Did you prerelease the budget to all firms in Ontario?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Table the telegram.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be happy to read the telegram. The company was facing certain dates upon which it had to indicate to its parent board its intentions and its ability to locate in Ontario. Rather than say: "I am sorry. We won't have our budget in place before your meeting at which you are going to make some decisions," we decided at a cabinet meeting, after consultation, to give that undertaking. I will be pleased to read that telegram to the House. This is to TRW Canada Limited:

"Reference to your conversation with Duncan Allan, I am pleased that TRW is pursuing a major new investment in Ontario and wish you success in your proposal to the parent board. As discussed with Mr. Allan, the Ontario government is prepared to assist in the financing of your proposed expansion plan to the extent of fully subsidizing the interest costs at the Canadian prime rate on $1 million over a five-year term. This represents a present value in the order of $420,000, assuming a discount rate of 11 per cent, thereby substantially offsetting the incentive effect in alternative locations which you outlined to us. Again, let me repeat that we welcome industrial expansion in our province and will assist TRW Canada Limited in creating new jobs for our work force."

[3:00]

You will follow the way we set that out, which was at that point in time the traditional way we were assisting firms by way of the Ontario Business Incentives Program. That program, OBIP, for those cases over $250,000 is essentially replaced by an up-front grant which I would remind the member is exactly the same in terms of its net impact on the company as the former OBIP grants were. I would point out to the member, for example, that OBIPs have been traditionally used by the government for very many years and with a lot of success. This case is a perfect example of where the OBIP assistance we offered, under our programs then in place, is exactly the same cash equivalent as the grant from the EDF.

Mr. Cassidy: What is the nature of the job guarantee which has been given to the Ontario government by TRW in return for the Ontario government's grant? Will the Ontario taxpayers get their money back if that job guarantee is not in fact met?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Absolutely. The terms of the contract signed in each and every EDF case is that in the event the job commitments are not reached in their entirety all of the money comes back to the government.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question to the minister: Would the minister not agree that this is a prime example of how the government is taking money from the haves-nots, through taxation, and giving money to the haves?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I really must say that is just part of a larger debate as to whether we should allow companies to go to other jurisdictions or not. I must point out to the member's party that I have in front of me a list—and just to take one example in the riding of Quinte: In the last six years there has been the equivalent of cash grants by way of OBIPs to the tune of about $2.5 million. They were exactly that type.

Many of those firms, the member could equally argue, were well enough off not to merit this type of support, but I tell members I have not heard a word from that side of the House saying that all of these OBIP loans, which are the same as a cash grant, were wrong things to do. I totally and categorically disagree with what the member is saying. We are going to continue to pay money where we know we can create jobs. I think it is much better to pay the private sector to create jobs which otherwise wouldn't be created than to pay money for unemployment insurance.

BONAR AND BEMIS DISPUTE

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Attorney General: Is the minister aware that Bonar and Bemis, of Burlington, who have been involved in a strike situation with Local 8401 of the United Steelworkers of America since May 1, are using Professional Transport Services of Streetsville to act as strikebreakers; and that employees of this firm were responsible, yesterday, for deliberately ramming an automobile driven by striking members of the plant, forcing it into the ditch and threatening to roll it over, causing possibly serious damage and even death to the people inside the car? Has he been made aware of the incident and is he prepared to investigate this hit-run tactic of the company?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I am not aware of the incident. I am quite prepared to look into the matter, in view of the seriousness of the allegation from the honourable member. I assume the honourable member, if necessary, will supply me with any additional information that may be required.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Will the minister also initiate action to look into the use of strikebreakers, hopefully leading to the banning of their use in a legal strike situation in the province of Ontario; both to bring about more justice in the negotiating situation and to prevent such incidents, which can lead to serious injuries or death?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It has appeared to me that there are many different interpretations of the term "strikebreaker." I would be happy to discuss again the matters raised by the honourable member with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie).

LIQUOR AND WINE PRICES

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is the minister satisfied with the action of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario in making continuous price increases for its various products without particular notice to the public?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, that is not true, and the member knows it. That is absolutely not true, and I welcome the opportunity to put this into perspective.

The Liquor Control Board of Ontario a week ago, and with my full knowledge, put through token increases which deal with only freight, demurrage and some fluctuations in Canadian currency. Those amount to nickels, dimes, quarters and so forth, one way or the other. Incidentally, at the same time, they also decreased prices of 16 brands for exactly the same reason.

We made a commitment in April, when the prices went up, that one could buy the old inventory for the prices paid for it plus the markup, which had not changed, for as long as it stayed in the stores. The reports yesterday do not indicate that, of the brands that went up, 14 were scotches. We simply ran out of Ballantine's, Dewar's, The Famous Grouse—whatever that is.

Mr. Foulds: The minister doesn't know?

Hon. Mr. Drea: When one runs out of one's old inventory, the new product comes into the store at the new price. Surely the honourable member is not suggesting that I tell the liquor control board to increase all the prices, right up to the new ones, regardless of when they were purchased. Otherwise, there is no other way.

When Valpolicella goes up a nickel because of some minor fluctuations in freight prices between Italian ports and the St. Lawrence Seaway, I do not think the liquor control board should announce it, because it will probably go down a dime next month on the basis of the Seaway being opened.

Finally, to put it into perspective: If at any time the markups are changed, the public will be told. There will be no change in markups this year; the honourable member has heard that from the Treasurer. If at any time the wholesale prices in Europe or the United States go up, the public will be told immediately. But even during the so-called freeze last year, when there were no increases, month after month there were decreases because of adjustments in freight and so on for very small amounts of money. The very same media that now want the board to announce things never used that information when the board supplied it to them all last fall and winter. I trust that puts the matter in perspective.

Mr. Breithaupt: Would the minister not realize that part of this approach by the board leads to frequent changes in wine-list pricing and, as a result, certain costly reprintings of menus and other wine lists by restaurateurs, all of which are an additional, burdensome cost that has to be shared eventually by the patrons of these locations, whether tourists or our own citizens?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is why I said if the wholesale price went up it would result in a price increase in a restaurant. These increases involving nickels and dimes and quarters—because purchases are made in bulk for the restaurant trade—will not result in them having to change the prices on their menus. If there is an increase in the wholesale or laid-down price from Europe or elsewhere, the public or retail price in the store is not the only consideration; there is also that very consideration for the restaurateur.

That is why, particularly in the case of scotch, we got commitments from the Scotch Whisky Association that there would be no more increases. There are pretty general commitments from the Ontario wine industry and from the British Columbia wine industry that there will be no increases. It is difficult to put a product into restaurants and to promote it when they go to the cost of having it on the menu and then either it is in short supply or they have to change their menus.

Mr. Swart: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Might I ask the minister if he agrees with the policy of the liquor control board in withholding information about price increases or not giving out information? In particular, does he agree with the statement of Olga Cyhanenko, the information officer, when she says the media cannot be trusted to explain the reasons for the increases? If he doesn't agree with it, what action is he going to take in this regard to see there is more openness in the increases?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am always delighted when the member for Welland-Thorold is looking for secret information. First of all, anybody can have this once a month if he wants it. I am sure the member will find it delightful reading. Beneagles Scotch is now $10.75.

Mr. Swart: Don't evade the question. Does the minister agree with her?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Could I humbly suggest to the honourable member for Welland-Thorold that he shut up until I have done?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a certain level of decorum that we have a right to expect around here. Those kinds of expressions surely we can do without. Would you please withdraw that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Coming back to the point the member raises, there is no secrecy by the board. There are price adjustments made in every accounting period. In the old days they didn't have to be done.

Mr. Swart: Do you agree with what she said?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In the old days they didn't have to be done because the Canadian dollar was stable. Very volatile wine prices, both domestic and foreign, didn't exist. Also, the consumer was getting ripped off by the board because the price was set once a year and if there was any decrease the board took it as profit and did not pass it on to the customer.

I don't know what remarks that person made to the media, but as usual the honourable member doesn't have his facts straight. She is not an employee of the board; she is an employee of the ministry. I will look into that matter and will deal with it.

I have never found that the media couldn't handle the matter.

Mr. Swart: Will the minister report back to the House?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is a difficult matter, as I am quite sure the media will attest to, because there are a great number of products; but I don't plan to take any action. I would say to the member for Welland-Thorold that if he wants to go to the board at any time to check the master price list, if he would like to go into the bottling room—

Mr. Swart: They are arbitrary.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: With all due respect to the honourable member for Welland-Thorold, the remarks about the board being arbitrary are about as indicative of the truth as his general line of questioning has been in this regard.

TORONTO OHC HOUSING

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, I will address this question to the Minister of Housing. Will the minister tell the House whether he agreed with the letter sent by the general manager of the Ontario Housing Corporation on March 31, 1979 which stated there was no need for assisted housing in the area of Carlton and Yonge Streets in the city of Toronto?

Even if the minister agrees with the general manager's assessment of housing needs in downtown Toronto, will he also explain his response on the March 5, 1979 motion of the city of Toronto council that said the city of Toronto does not accept the accuracy of the statement? In addition, will he explain whether he agrees the city of Toronto has said the assisted rental program and the assisted home ownership program do not help low and moderate-income people?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: On the first part of the question relating to subsidized housing units in the downtown area of Toronto: This statement resulted from the opportunity of the Metro housing authority and the Ontario housing authority having available to it a large number of units in a highrise apartment building in the area of Maple Leaf Gardens.

This came about as the result of a condition and change of zoning some months or years ago. Of the 500 units, it was ruled that 25 per cent should be made available to the housing authorities, either municipal or provincial. At no time was there any crossreferencing of that request, either to the municipal housing authority or to the provincial housing authority. It was strictly a position taken by city council.

At the time of completion of the apartment building, it was obvious the developer could not rent the units until he signed an agreement with the province and the OHC to rent 125 units on a rent-supplement program. Once we made that agreement with them—if we should or if it was necessary—he could then commence to rent the remaining 375 units.

The province was made aware of this condition. In looking into the matter we discovered, not only from our own records but those of the Metropolitan housing authorities, backed up by letters of the chairman and of the executive people of the housing authorities, that there was not a need for 125 units in that particular area on a rent-supplement program basis. There was no indication in the applications that we needed anywhere close to 125. People were looking for locations in the Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto area other than that specific area.

We indicated clearly to city council, through the developer and through the Metropolitan housing authorities and through the Ontario Housing Corporation, that we could not, on behalf of the people of Ontario, enter into the supplementing of the rent of 125 units because we did not require them. That statement was made by the general manager of the Ontario Housing Corporation, Mr. Beesley, and supported by a minister's letter backing up the situation.

I must say to the member that we have an amendment, I believe, with the city council on the zoning, which clearly indicates that if in the future there should be some requirement for those units by any one of the public housing authorities governing the policies in this area of the province, then we can make a request upon the landlord of the day to have those units made available to us as they are vacated by other tenants.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary: Am I correct in my understanding of the minister that he wants the city of Toronto to present a list of people who need housing in that area and then he will actually be willing to grant permission to build there?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am not quite sure I understand the member's supplementary. I have nothing to add other than to say that in the process of reviewing applications that were on file, both with the Ontario Housing Corporation and the metropolitan housing corporation, it was indicated clearly that the need for that number of units was not there.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary: I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to table in the House other examples of areas in Metropolitan Toronto where that same policy has been applied?

Mr. di Santo: A full list.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As related to change in zoning to allow for a higher density factor or use by a developer, I am not aware of other conditions or other areas where the term or clause has been applied. I understand this came about as a result of this particular structure having gone into receivership. Because of some difficulties in financing and one thing and another, there were some changes and modifications in zoning to allow for the completion of the building; and also to allow for a higher capacity that would give a return on that investment. Otherwise, as I understand it, the building would have sat for some time.

The provision in the zoning is strictly a municipal matter. It is not one that comes to the Minister of Housing or to my ministry for any approval. It went through without having been referred to any of the authorities that were being obligated to rent a number of units under an amendment to a local zoning order.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary: Since the cabinet recently approved the core plan for the city of Toronto and since the inclusion of assisted housing in the downtown core is an essential element of the plan, how does the minister expect the city to provide assisted housing when he refuses to fund it? It is their responsibility but the ministry provides the money.

Is the minister not aware that his government's policies are so ineffective that they only serve the needs of developers seeking density bonuses and never lead to the provision of assisted housing in the city of Toronto? Does he realize also that his failure to provide comprehensive housing policies has led to the destruction of neighbourhoods in south Parkdale and other inner city areas—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am well aware of the fact that we and the Ministry of Government Services have been working on those plans relating to the core area and its development for housing purposes. May I indicate clearly to the House, and particularly to the member, that the amendment was by municipal direction in relationship to that developer and not by the Ministry of Housing nor the province of Ontario; let's not confuse or complicate the facts.

It was a municipal responsibility to the developer and did not come through our ministry. If the city of Toronto felt there was some importance in dealing with the developer to get on with the project so that it could be rented and could return some revenue to the municipality, so be it. But let the responsibility not be transferred to my ministry or to this minister himself, because very clearly it was not our responsibility.

I would say to the member for Waterloo North if there should be other examples of this type of amendment to a zoning bylaw, as originally indicated by the member for Parkdale, I should be pleased, if I can find them, to table them in this House.

DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Mr. Kennedy: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Would he comment on a report in yesterday's Globe and Mail to the effect that a safe PCB disposal method has been invented which renders the substance not only harmless but useful—

Mr. Laughren: Edible.

Mr. Kennedy: —that there has been research done at the Ontario Research Foundation, with the federal grant, to achieve this end. Is the minister aware of this and could he comment as to the validity of it and just where we are?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of it, and I am pleased the member should ask that question. I'm well aware of his interest—because of the involvement of the community he represents. We are looking at several methods whereby it may be possible to either destroy or convert material containing PCBs. At this moment we're not 100 per cent sure the method has yet been found. No one would be happier than us if that could be developed.

Mr. Kennedy: Me.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think he is right, Mr. Speaker. I suspect the member might be even happier than we are, and I can appreciate the reason for that.

If a portable unit could be found, regardless of the process, that would render the material harmless we would welcome it. We are looking at it; we'll keep constant surveillance on it.

Indeed, in this particular instance we have met with the company involved as recently as yesterday to discuss the technical application of it. As soon as it's proved—if it's proved—it will be put into full use.

Mr. Kennedy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister indicate just when we might have this further report? This seems to be a very positive statement. Is it possible to determine within a brief period of time if it's factual or not factual? As the minister knows, hearings with respect to PCB burning by St. Lawrence Cement are presently suspended. Perhaps this would influence those hearings.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't have a positive date in mind on when these appraisals will be completed. Certainly I'll try to ascertain that and report back to the member.

There are some other methods right now. I think the plasma arc is one that is sometimes touted as being able to destroy PCBs. I guess perhaps it can, but the amount destroyed at any given time is extremely small. It's an extremely intensive energy-consuming method, and it hasn't a great deal of practical application at this time. That's another method.

I will get back to the member and advise him in the next day or two when we can expect some appraisal from the research foundation on the method quoted in yesterday's Globe and Mail.

Mr. Hall: Could the minister advise whether the United States still permits entry of liquid PCB waste at this time?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm sure of solids. As a matter of fact, I think the member knows we were having a bit of a discussion on this. I don't want to trust my memory on that. I thought it was permitted but I'd better be sure of that.

I'm positive on solids, no question about that, there is a proposed date when they may be banned. I will confirm the status on liquid portions of PCBs for the member.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, could I ask if the minister has received any application from D and D Disposal to assist in the evaluation of this new process and the development of it? Is he making funds available to any of the other projects he mentions that are being considered for PCB disposal?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We had requests and we are giving D and D technical assistance. We are not putting funds at their disposal. We believe the company that does develop an appropriate method to handle not only PCB material but other liquid wastes will find a very lucrative market. We hope the private sector will develop it on their own. We think the potential of success is reasonably large and they should be willing to take this gamble.

I think we are prepared to give them all kinds of technical assistance and support at the research foundation.

CALEDONIA DAM

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Is the minister aware there is an emergency situation at Caledonia, involving the old dam which has been slated for renewal for some time because a huge section of the dam has settled several feet? There is now also a gaping hole in the middle of it and the water level has already receded two feet below normal. This could have a serious effect on recreational use of the upper Grand River, and farm water wells could be drastically affected. Is the minister prepared to deal with this situation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I'm aware of the problem at one section. I believe it's a three-section dam and the one section collapsed recently and is now acting as a weir but is not keeping the water up as high as it did. I understand that the Grand River Conservation Authority has done some preliminary engineering and has come up with an estimate of about $2 million, I believe, for repair.

Mr. G. I. Miller: About $1.8 million?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In that neighbourhood.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Yes, in round figures.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not yet in a position to say whether or not that money will be available out of our budget for this year. In fact, the amount for dams is pretty tight for those projects that are presently underway. But I am aware of the problem and we're anxious to see it resolved.

FALCONBRIDGE HIRING

Mr. Laughren: I rise, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), to ask a question on behalf of my colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), who was earlier ejected for telling the truth.

In view of the announcement by Falconbridge Nickel Mines that they're going to call back 300 employees, will the Treasurer of the province of Ontario tell us whether he is willing to request of Falconbridge Nickel Mines that the employees from National Steel Corporation of Canada Limited be given first priority when Falconbridge Nickel Mines starts hiring that extra 300 employees, once the laid-off Falconbridge miners, of course, have been called back under the union contract? Further, will he have the Minister of Labour use his people to bring the groups together so that an orderly hiring process can take place?

Mr. Swart: Reasonable request.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a reasonable request. I think any time one operation is closing in an area the maximum degree of co-operation should exist in helping people get relocated.

I'm sure my colleague, the Minister of Labour, would be glad to use his offices to facilitate such assistance if possible. One can't demand that they be hired but one can do a lot to facilitate hiring.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I don't want to inflame either you, Mr. Speaker, or other members of the House, but I would like you to pay attention and bring to your attention, with the greatest of respect, rule 19(d)(9), a rule which says: "A member shall be called to order by the Speaker if he imputes false or unavowed motives to another member."

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that some of the incidents that have occurred, both in previous days and today, arose because one member made or alleged unavowed motives to other members of this House. I suggest to you, and I have the Oxford English dictionary in front of me, that unavowed means "not admitted." I draw that to your attention and would ask you, with great respect, to strictly enforce that rule and we might avoid some of the incidents that resulted in the unfortunate leaving of my friend and colleague, the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Breithaupt: In speaking to the particular point raised by the member, I'm wondering to whom the member is directing this comment with respect to the possibility of motives? Further, what are the motives that are presumably being referred to? Perhaps if Mr. Speaker could inquire somewhat more of the member for Port Arthur we'd all know what he is talking about.

Mr. Foulds: I am not making any allegations of false or unavowed motives. I was, strictly in the abstract, bringing the rule to your attention for its enforcement, Mr. Speaker.

[3:30]

Mr. Sweeney: Unfortunately we're not in the abstract.

Mr. Foulds: You certainly are.

Mr. Speaker: I am well aware of the rule the honourable member has just quoted and I try to enforce it religiously. I really don't know the connection, but I will take a look at the record and see what was said.

Mr. Peterson: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I'm on my feet. Would you please! I will look into the allegation made by the member for Port Arthur and if I see there is any foundation in it I will report back to the House.

Mr. Peterson: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have dealt with it.

REPORTS

STANDING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Hall from the standing public accounts committee presented the following interim report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that the Royal Ontario Museum furnish the committee with the most current monthly financial statements and budget of the Royal Ontario Museum for analysis by the provincial auditor, such statement analysis to be returned to the committee within three weeks, preferably two weeks.

Your committee further recommends that the Minister of Culture and Recreation, the Deputy Minister of Culture and Recreation, together with the chairman of the board of the Royal Ontario Museum and the director of the Royal Ontario Museum, attend at the committee deliberations of the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the report be received and adopted? Carried? Report adopted.

Does the honourable member have a comment?

Mr. Hall: I will follow the Speaker's wishes. I was given to understand that I would have to move adjournment, but I would hope that the parties referred to in the motion would see fit to provide the information and be available to the committee, which considers this topic to be urgent. In the best interests of all concerned, we feel as a committee that the matter should be dealt with before this House adjourns for the summer.

Mr. Speaker: If that is the will of the committee, perhaps the honourable member would be wise to move the adjournment of the debate rather than have the motion carried.

Some hon. members: It's been carried.

Mr. Speaker: Just a minute. The member for Lincoln brought in a report from a committee and moved its adoption.

Mr. Grande: And it was carried.

Mr. Speaker: I put the question. I said: "Shall the motion carry?"

Mrs. Campbell: And it was carried.

Mr. Speaker: I heard no objection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, with respect, you may not have heard me over the conversation of my colleagues, but I did say no.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would point out, in any event, the rules require that the person presenting the motion "shall" move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "Shall."

Mr. Speaker: No; not so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe it says "shall."

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Nixon: Good try, Larry.

An hon. member: You'll be Speaker next time.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Clerk read the motion?

Clerk Assistant: The motion?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. That is the motion before the House, whether or not the report shall be adopted.

Mrs. Campbell: It was carried. The will of the House is mightier than the minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It says "shall"; section 30(c) of the standing orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable minister take his seat?

"Mr. Hall from the standing public accounts committee presented an interim report, which was read as follows, and moved its adoption." That is the issue before the House. I put it before the House and it was carried.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The motion was carried. Do you want to challenge my ruling?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Do you want to challenge my ruling? Do you want to challenge the ruling?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do want to challenge the ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if I might—

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the Speaker's ruling please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Ruling upheld.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a report.

Mr. Speaker: I asked, "Presenting reports."

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rose before and you turned your back to me.

Mr. Speaker: The member for St. George.

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mrs. Campbell from the standing members' services committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee has the honour to present its first report and recommends as follows:

That standardized procedures be established to ensure that the legislative library receive automatically and as soon as possible all research and backup documentation from commissions of inquiry related to the government of Ontario.

Report adopted.

COMMITTEE REPORT RULE

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder, in the rather quick sequence of events, if you might, on a point of order, give us some guidance?

Mrs. Campbell: The minister is too late.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We on this side of the House, after an unfortunate series of events last year, were in a position where most members stayed on Thursday afternoons in order to make sure that events just occurred on that morning or the previous day did not cause quick and hurried adoption of reports out of committees.

It was my clear understanding, and I don't want to be over-argumentative on this—

Mrs. Campbell: Just arrogant.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not fair.

With respect, this side of the House was under the clear understanding that section 30(c) prevented occurrences such as I believe, have just occurred. It was intended to prevent these occurrences by making absolutely sure that, without discussion and without the possibility even of votes being carried or motions being carried, there was no option left open to the chairman of a committee presenting a report. We understood that after a chairman of a committee presented a report, he or she would move the adoption and could make a brief statement and then, "shall adjourn the debate."

We read that as saying you ought not, under the rules, to call for adoption of that report; ought not to permit the House to vote on that motion; rather the member reporting is obliged to move adjournment.

In fairness to this side of the House, or any member who wishes to vote one way or another on that matter, it would seem to me they are entitled to rely upon at least our interpretation, and that which has been conveyed to us by all three House leaders I think, with regard to the import of section 30(c).

For that reason, on Thursday afternoons particularly, members who might have certain things to say about it or wish to vote one way or another do not stay in the House. They go off to some of their committee duties.

In fairness to those members who may have wanted to participate in any vote, vocal or otherwise, this might be an appropriate point at which you, Mr. Speaker, might reflect upon section 30(c) for our guidance. If we are wrong in saying there is no option, then you might indicate that to us. Otherwise, in fairness to all those members who might otherwise have wanted to be here and participate, you ought to give us the opportunity to so do.

I would ask the other House leaders to assist in my interpretation of section 30(c). They were present when the interpretation was negotiated and agreed upon; I would ask them if they believe my interpretation is correct. I think it couldn't be clearer.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I can't argue with your interpretation of the rules. All I can say is that the sequence of events described by the acting House leader for the government side is correct. There was some difficulty that, on the basis of this rule, was put aside.

But I want to bring to your attention, sir, since I hope you will give it further consideration, that a report such as the one that was put before you by the vice-chairman of the public accounts committee, is of a nature that becomes useless if it is simply put on the shelf and left there. So for the good of the public business, I would hope your review of that rule differentiates between the kind of report which is a major recommendation to this House that does require plenty of notice so the House can take part in a formal debate; and the other type, which although it has substantive matter pertaining to it, is the sort of decision the House should be able to enter into without undue delay.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't pretend to have your wisdom in interpreting the rules, but I would think your handling of the first matter was probably correct under the first sentence of the rule brought to our attention by the acting government House leader when it says, "may move the adoption of the report if it contains a substantive motion."

I would suggest the motion contained in the report of the vice-chairman of the public accounts committee was simply to confirm existing powers of that committee to call persons, papers and things. That was my understanding of the report. It was simply seeking that confirmation from the House. Therefore, the argument put by the Liberal House leader, I think, is a just one in the case of that report.

There's no use waiting for two or three weeks to schedule an evening debate on that kind of a report put to the House. However, other reports that have major applications in terms of policy or major implications in terms of legislation, I think justly follow, and should justly follow, the rule as interpreted by the government House leader. We would certainly support him in that.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, from my own point of view, when a report from a committee comes into the Legislature presumably only those members on that committee are familiar with the content. The chairman moves its adoption and we have no idea what it contains. I wasn't aware we would have a division, but I was under the impression that unless there was unanimous consent it wouldn't be adopted, it would be tabled in effect.

Mrs. Campbell: Forever.

Mr. Kennedy: It wouldn't necessarily be forever at all. It just seems logical to me that a committee shouldn't come in here with a report and move adoption when the majority of the members from all sides aren't familiar with the content. I interpret section 30(c) as does the acting House leader.

Mr. Sterling: I would just like to add that as a member of the procedural affairs committee, which was charged with the responsibility of looking at the standing orders, the interpretation as the acting government House leader has placed on this particular rule is certainly what I interpreted as the intent of that particular committee. The problem in determining whether or not a report is of a substantive nature or not, leaves the chairman who moves that particular motion in a pretty precarious position if in fact there is a substantive part in that report. It was my thought when we were discussing this particular rule amendment that it would be natural for the chairman to move adjournment, and the latter part of the rule is intended to make certain the report doesn't sit there forever.

Mr. Hall: I just want to explain to the House that I understand the reason for having to present an interim report is only to provide the proper authority for the provincial auditor to analyse current monthly financial statements and the current budget of the Royal Ontario Museum. Up until the present time, the report we are dealing with was written in 1977-78. To advance it to give him legal authority to look at current material, we felt what we considered to be minor clearance by the House was necessary.

I reiterate that we are acting out of our concern for the public interest in the Royal Ontario Museum. In view of the press attention that has been placed on this matter, all parties represented in the committee this morning felt very much that the matter just could not be delayed. All we sought was proper clearance for the provincial auditor to act on the current year's financial statement to provide us with analysis and advice.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if I might respond: What has developed in the last few minutes is that the member has had an opportunity now to explain to a half-empty House the substance of his motion. It was precisely because of the concern—

Mr. Foulds: There are more members here than we usually have for debates on reports.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that motions passed by committee three or four hours ago were not even known to the vast majority of the assembly that the decision was taken by the House leaders that a motion should not be introduced and voted upon immediately without the opportunity for all the members of the House to have some knowledge of it. That was part of the motivation. It could be that this side of the House would support it.

I am not arguing the merits of the motion. What I am arguing quite sincerely is that the whole purpose of this was that at this stage in the proceedings the chairman of the committee would not have to rise and try to explain to the House that this was or was not a substantive motion. The purpose of this procedure was to allow the motions to go on the order paper, as can be seen particularly by reading subsections (a) and (b). As with everything else, it was to give members time for due consideration of the merits of a motion and then to enable it to be brought forward by the government House leader at a later date.

Having heard this, I understand the urgency. Presumably the system was set up so that the House leaders could respond to that urgency and urge the government House leader to bring it on at a short date. On the question under subsection (c) as to whether this is a substantive motion, I might point out that that must be read in the context of (a) and (b). I don't want to get overly legalistic here, but I think this is an important point to clear up. Subsections (a) and (b) are written in to deal with the non-substantive motion procedure, which is that they are not voted on. Then subsection (c) is the subsection that's put in the rules to deal with those matters where there is a substantive motion involved.

That is the procedure and, I say with respect, the only procedure that can be followed in the matter of a substantive motion. It is presumed in (a) and (b)—and I think it is quite clear—that if it's a report not bearing substantive matters then it is not moved for adoption, it is presented to the House. The only other type we have deal with a substantive motion, and thereafter the procedure is only as outlined in subsection (c).

I say to the opposition House leaders, that I would hope that however we may decide to treat the report emanating out of public accounts this morning, surely they must agree that under no circumstances under this rule, which was negotiated just recently, in section 30 or anywhere under the rules, shall substantive or non-substantive reports from committees be voted upon immediately after presentation to the House.

I say to the opposition House leaders, and I say to you very clearly Mr. Speaker, that it's my clear understanding that under no portion of the rules was the motion put by the chairman of the committee for adoption to be voted on under the rules. It couldn't be voted on under the rules. He had only one option at that stage, that is to move the adjournment of the debate. I say to the opposition House leaders that I would hope they would agree with the spirit of what I'm saying. Even if they don't agree with the spirit, I would ask them if they can find in the rules anything which gives another option to the chairman of a committee rising in those circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the contribution made by all honourable members in assisting me in reaching a decision as to whether or not the right course of action was taken on the motions by the honourable member for Lincoln and the honourable member for St. George. In view of the comments made by the acting House leader of the governing party, the House leader of the Liberal Party and—I suppose he is—the deputy House leader of the New Democratic Party, find that their comments are very persuasive and perhaps I was hasty in accepting the motion from the member for Lincoln.

I would agree with the comments made by the member for Port Arthur in that, in the case of the report presented by the member for Lincoln, I would not construe the contents of that report as being substantive, because they would not have needed any action by this House to do what they attempted to accomplish by bringing the report in.

Be that as it may, the comments made by everybody who has spoken, including the member for Carleton-Grenville, who was a member of the procedural affairs committee, were that indeed the intent of this amended standing order was to give the House an opportunity to review.

With the unanimous consent of the House I would revert back to the point where the member for Lincoln introduced his report and asked that the debate be adjourned, if that is the wish of the House.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate your suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest further, with respect, that under the circumstances it might be better if we were to consider these reports on another day. Rather than ask the honourable member to revert to that situation now, when the House has taken an action and when actually there was a voice vote taken, I would suggest to you, sir, that if perhaps a day intervened during which the matter might be considered perhaps even further, that might be a course of action that would be more convenient for the members directly concerned to follow.

Mr. Speaker: Since it seems to be the consensus of all who have spoken that perhaps the chair acted unwisely, now is the time to correct it, rather than to let any period of time intervene by way of correcting it. I would have thought that everybody who is here now would be well aware of the circumstances surrounding the presentation of the report. As I recall, the member for Lincoln was a bit apprehensive as to whether he should move the adjournment of the debate or just allow the chair to put the motion. Unless somebody has a very good reason why we should postpone correcting it, I think we should take action right now.

STANDING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Hall: Mr. Speaker, it was not a matter of apprehension with regard to the adjournment of the debate; it was a matter of our understanding of the rules. However, there was no objection made and the matter was adopted by the House.

I would ask that the assistant House leader, in referring to the spirit and the intent of what was put in the rule that is in debate, also try to understand the spirit and intent of the committee's desire this morning merely to permit the provincial auditor to step beyond his current terms of reference, being 1977-78, and operating under the old Audit Act, which did not permit him to be the auditor for the Royal Ontario Museum, to enter into this and to give us guidance before this House adjourns. I can assure you it is considered to be a serious matter, and we are simply trying to act in the best spirit and interest of everybody who is involved in this matter.

I will now move the adjournment of the debate but, as I said before, I would appreciate the co-operation of the people involved in permitting this committee to do its work before the House adjourns for the summer.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I understand the difference of opinion on this rule, and I am not completely sure that you are wrong or indeed the government House leader is wrong. But it seems to me we still do have the option of changing a rule by unanimous consent, and in fact that is what we probably have in these circumstances.

When the House voted, with no objection, to adopt that particular report, it seems to me that de facto if not de jure, we waived this particular rule at this particular time.

An hon. member: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Peterson: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, on one other ground: That because time is so very much of the essence in this particular matter, and I think that has been eloquently expressed by my colleague from Lincoln, it may be a case, particularly since all of the government members on that committee voted with this. Where we could solve the substantive problem, if not the procedural problem, by getting unanimous consent reaffirmed, subsequent to our other voice vote in favour of passing, to dispense with the rule if in fact your judgement prevails and it is the rule, so that we can proceed immediately and forthwith on this issue.

I am not suggesting it is necessarily a case for a compromise, but it might be. It might be the case where communally, in the interests of everyone concerned, we can solve our collective problem without violating any of the rules of the House. I would like to appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the acting government House leader on those grounds.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for London Centre is asking me to prevail upon the House for unanimous consent to allow the honourable member for Lincoln to move the adoption without adjourning the debate. Do we have such unanimous consent?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, may I deal with the substance of what this report of the public accounts committee is all about? I would take it that the whole object of the exercise is to put the public accounts committee in a position to deal with certain matters next Thursday. Is that what it is all about?

May I suggest to the House that surely we can look after that problem before next Thursday by way of motions or some other mechanisms. There is obviously no resistance here to the substance of the motion. I think in fairness to most of the members of the assembly who have not heard what happened this morning, let alone read it, we should follow a normal procedure.

A motion can easily be introduced any time next week. Indeed, the government House leader could call for debate on that matter next Monday, Tuesday or Thursday—no, I guess not Thursday; but tomorrow morning, Monday or Tuesday. There is plenty of time before next Thursday and I don't foresee any problem. I think that would be a more regular way to follow this rather than debating it further through private members' hour this afternoon.

Mr. Peterson: May I respond to that point, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: We could go on indefinitely with all of the nuances and everything else. The honourable member for Lincoln has graciously reconsidered, and he has moved the adjournment of the debate, so that is the question before the House. If you want to speak as to whether or not the debate should be adjourned—Do you want to speak to that particular point?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, I do.

Mr. Speaker: As to whether or not the debate should be adjourned?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been stressed quite eloquently here by members who were present at the public accounts committee that this is a matter of urgency. The time element is of some concern to the committee because it would involve examining books; it would involve getting the staff and so on to go to the books and bring the matter back to the committee before the House adjourns.

However, I want to point out that the option is open to the government House leader, if he is prepared, in agreement with the members of his party to accept the desire that the provincial auditor proceed with the examination of the books, to introduce a routine motion exactly as was presented by the vice-chairman of the public accounts committee. I am sure the House would accept it and it would resolve the whole problem. If the House leader is prepared to do that I think it can be carried through right now.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion to adjourn the debate carry?

Motion agreed to.

~~Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet.~~

Mr. Speaker: The vote was carried.

Mr. Foulds: I was on my feet to be recognized.

[4:00]

Mr. Speaker: How long do you want to go on with this, really?

Mr. Makarchuk: Until we resolve it.

Mr. Foulds: The rules of the House, as you well know—

Mr. Speaker: It's your time, go ahead.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you. I think that if the House leader of the government party would give a commitment to this House to introduce either later today or tomorrow the motion that he himself suggested he would have no difficulty whatsoever with the members on this side of the House. I would like that clear commitment from him; not Monday or Tuesday, but today or tomorrow, because I think the members of the committee have, as my colleague from Brantford indicated, spoken eloquently about the need for urgency.

Mr. Peterson: There are two points I want to respond to. One, the deputy House leader brings up the point, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain members who may want to speak on this particular matter but weren't apprised of it. It seems to me that's one of the risks of being a member of this Legislature. Frequently things happen that everyone isn't apprised to and one is seized nevertheless of the results of that particular transaction on the floor of this House.

Two, I'm very attracted to the suggestion of my colleagues from the New Democratic Party. I am sure that substantively the deputy House leader would have no objection from his party on this particular motion. If he could, in his wisdom, give us a commitment that it is to be brought up tomorrow so that we could proceed post haste I am sure that we can all retire on this principle and keep our virginity intact with respect to the principles of this House. If we could have that assurance from the deputy House leader I would be delighted and we will proceed perfunctorily.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to say that without consulting with my colleagues, as each of you has had an opportunity to do, then I wouldn't give that commitment. I do want to make it clear, though, that I am aware that the members of my party voted in favour of the motion this morning. I don't think it is fair to anyone in this assembly to try to blow this procedural matter into something it isn't.

There are the alternatives which I can assure members will be taken up. I will discuss the matter with my colleagues and with the House leaders tomorrow morning and we will have plenty of opportunity between now and next Thursday.

I might add that obviously the public accounts committee can choose to sit at as much length as possible to deal with this matter next Thursday, Friday or at other times in the event there is any difficulty between now and next Thursday.

I can't see the point of arguing this matter at this time when there is no problem. There is no problem, I want to say that. I have to, in fairness to my colleague the minister involved, who is not here and not even aware of what occurred this morning, give him the opportunity to at least—

Mr. Foulds: If he isn't, he should be.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member may say he should be, but he is not here and not even aware of the situation. I think he ought to have the benefit of at least consulting with the government House leader before we comment on it at all. That's all that we're asking.

I might say to the member for London Centre, with regard to his remarks, it is not any longer one of the risks of this House that matters may come up and blind-side one and be dealt with in the manner that we're talking about. The whole point of all the exercise that we've been through in the last little while in the procedural affairs committee and as the House leaders is to stop surprises. The Minister of Culture and Recreation doesn't even know what's happening this afternoon. The whole point of the exercise was to avoid surprises and I think that's the way we ought to handle it.

Mr. Speaker: The motion before the House, moved by the member for Lincoln, is for the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Makarchuk: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: This is on the motion, I hope.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, I'm speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the point of order that I wish to stress here and bring to the attention of the deputy House leader is that it is not a matter for the public accounts committee to deal with the matter next Thursday; it is a matter of giving the auditor of this province, and nobody else, the authority to examine the books of the Royal Ontario Museum and report back in time before the House adjourns. That's all. It's so he can start working tomorrow morning. It does not require any opinion from the minister or anyone else. It's having the effect of blocking the effectiveness of this House.

Interjections.

On motion by Mr. Hall, the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The next question to be decided is a report presented on behalf of the members' services committee by the member for St. George.

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, in view of the decision in the earlier matter I believe I am perfectly prepared at some stage to move the adjournment of the debate, but it is my understanding that at least I have the opportunity to speak briefly to the report.

Mr. Speaker, it came to our attention in the committee that it has been the custom of the library—I wonder if I could have some attention. It has been the practice of the library to seek from a commission, a commissioner or a chairman of a commission, not only the report of the commission but the backup material upon which the report is based, including transcripts. Some commissioners comply with the request, some do not. Thus the motion before the Speaker was simply to establish some procedure to regularize this matter, not for my benefit but for the benefit of the library and those whom the library will serve.

I really wouldn't have regarded that as a particularly substantive motion, but I would just like to make this observation. It seems to me that the work of this House is becoming more and more irrelevant, and it's partly because we seem to get into wrangles and it seems to be very difficult for committees to get their reports debated in this House.

I would hope that what has gone on here today would serve the government notice that the committees labour over their reports in many cases—I'm not suggesting this one—and their reports are treated with contempt by the government in the ordering of business in this House. Perhaps when they're discussing rules they might discuss the purport of the business of this House.

On motion by Mrs. Campbell, the debate was adjourned.

MOTION

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved that the following substitutions be made: on the standing resources development committee, Mr. G. I. Miller for Mr. Bolan; on the standing members' services committee, Mr. Worton for Mr. Conway; on the select committee on Hydro affairs, Mr. Conway for Mr. Kerrio.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 114, An Act to amend Certain Acts Respecting Regional Municipalities.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this bill is another act to amend the Municipal Act. It's been introduced separately from the bill I introduced the other day, and will proceed through the House separately, because it covers one particular topic which is of paramount importance at the present time to particularly one municipality, the city of Hamilton. For that reason I hope that this amending bill may be passed into law as quickly as possible.

The act is designed to provide sufficient flexibility to all municipalities that may have implemented a section 86 reassessment. It will permit them to phase in over a period of up to five years the effects of the reassessment according to various classes of property.

DISTRICT MUNICIPALITY OF MUSKOKA AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 16, An Act to amend the District Municipality of Muskoka Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This bill proposes to extend to the district municipality of Muskoka certain powers given to local municipalities and counties in the Municipal Amendment Act, 1978 (No. 3). In addition, the bill will increase the maximum rate of interest the district may charge the area municipalities for failure to pay its levy from one per cent to one and a quarter per cent per month.

The bill also removes the requirement that the district obtain Ontario Municipal Board approval of bylaws prohibiting or regulating access to controlled-access district roads. This will make the Muskoka act consistent with all other regional acts in this regard.

COUNTY OF OXFORD AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 117, An Act to amend the County of Oxford Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As the other regional acts have done, this bill also extends to the restructured county of Oxford certain powers given to local municipalities and counties in the Municipal Amendment Act, 1978 (No. 3). It also increases the maximum rate of interest the county may charge an area municipality for failure to pay its levy from one per cent to one and one-quarter per cent per month.

In addition, the bill will make it clear that the quorum for the council on official plan matters is the same as for all other county responsibilities.

Finally, at the request of the county, provision has been included in the bill to allow area municipalities in Oxford to acquire industrial lands, subject to the approval of the county council.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Grande moved first reading of Bill 118, An Act to amend the Royal Ontario Museum Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Grande: The purpose of the bill is to reform the structure of the board of trustees for the Royal Ontario Museum. The board will continue to consist of 21 trustees, but the bill provides that eight of the trustees will be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, eight will be elected by members of the museum, and two will be elected by members of the museum's professional staff.

The bill also increases the number of trustees required to constitute a quorum and provides the meeting of the board shall be open to the public. I hope that the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. All that is permitted on first reading is a very brief explanation of the purpose and the intent of the bill.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 113, 186, 291; and an interim answer to question 192 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2407.)

[4:15]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Kerr moved resolution 18:

That in the opinion of this House the government of Ontario should consider taking immediate steps to reduce the amount of waste being disposed of in sanitary landfill dump sites; and furthermore, the government of Ontario should increase its assistance to municipalities and local government authorities in order to encourage the development and institution of alternative methods of waste disposal, maximizing the opportunities for reclamation, recycling and development of energy from waste.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that I use 15 minutes now and five minutes later, but in view of the late hour of the day I will continue and if I just take 15 minutes it means somebody else has more time.

This resolution deals with something that is of continuing concern to me, as it was when I was Minister of the Environment. There has been a great deal of research and study on this matter, and as a result private industry and government have been moving into the field of resource recovery with varying degrees of success. Certainly the government of Ontario has been in the forefront, not only with its own experimental plant in North York but also by helping research and pilot projects in the private sector and with programs to assist local governments to establish facilities that will reduce reliance on landfill sites.

However, the program has to be speeded up. It has to have a greater allocation of public funds and there has to be greater incentive in the whole area of resource recovery.

I would also like to mention at this time that in presenting this resolution I am not necessarily taking a stand as far as any existing application before the Ontario Municipal Board or the Environmental Assessment Board is concerned. The resolution refers to the immediate future and long-term policy as to waste disposal, and by inference could include both industrial liquid waste and solid waste.

The first part of the resolution says: ". . . the government of Ontario should consider taking immediate steps to reduce the amount of waste being disposed of in sanitary landfill dump sites . . ." Most of the reasons for this are obvious. I am told that in searching for suitable sites engineers and consultants usually recommend prime agricultural land because of the topography and because such land minimizes leaching and possible contamination of water supplies. Prime agricultural land is not only valuable but it also attracts some development and rural clusters on its fringes, as well as a certain type of environment which can be disrupted by increased traffic noise. A certain amount of nuisance is bound to result from the establishment of the sanitary landfill site, regardless of how well the site is operated.

Recently we have seen the proliferation of various citizens' groups composed of people who live at or near a proposed site going to great lengths to oppose it, resulting in lengthy and costly hearings which could involve the OMB, the Environmental Assessment Board, local official plans and even the Ontario Land Compensation Board. In other words, the time and cost involved in establishing landfill sites, certainly in the future, will become comparable to other means of disposal, and therefore the great argument that resource recovery or some other method is just too expensive will lose its effect.

Another reason, in my opinion, is that the whole idea of burying garbage, or wasting waste, in light of its potential beneficial use goes against the grain. As members know, domestic waste can be used to generate steam, gas and solid fuel. Much of the waste can be recycled and reused, either in its original form or as a resource. It can create employment and establish a whole new industry.

What can be done to reduce the generation of waste, particularly domestic waste?

First of all, there have to be changes in our attitudes and habits. We live in a basically wasteful society in North America. Domestic waste, for the most part, is created at home. There should be separation in the kitchen. We should be separating newspapers, glass containers and cans. We should be composting and we should be taking many waste products to recycling plants or feeding pick-ups at the curb. However, we have been talking about this for a long time and we have not been very successful. We have had studies and pilot projects, but there is no real incentive for people to pick out cans, take off labels, remove ends and crush them; or to clean empty bottles; all for reuse. It's a matter of attitude and conscience, but most people just don't seem to be interested. Take it from me, Mr. Speaker, as a loser in the great garbage gamble that I had with one Tony Barrett of Pollution Probe, I know. It cost me—and it cost me plenty—mainly because my colleagues did not believe in composting to the degree that I hoped they would. But I have forgiven them.

Mr. Gaunt: They are still not big on composting.

Mr. Kerr: I do not like to say it, but the leaders of the oppositions at that time also each cost me about $40.

One incentive might be for those municipalities that have two garbage pickups a week, for example, to have just one pickup a week. Possibly there should be a limit to the amount of garbage per household and more returnable containers with a deposit. We might even consider a tax on cans. In any event, there has to be an incentive or a penalty to make it work.

The market value of waste products fluctuates and demand changes. The market is really unsure and not too dependable. I think it fair to say that most people are unconcerned as to what happens after pickup at the curb, except for those affected by landfill sites close to them. Therefore, garbage is not a great issue or a high priority with municipal politicians or local officials and new methods of disposal are difficult to establish.

Mr. Lawlor: Did that scheme in your riding work?

Mr. Kerr: No, it was a failure—and I tried.

Mr. Lawlor: Go for biomass.

Mr. Kerr: We require various steps and procedures for approval of landfill sites. Our policies and our legislation and our regulations regarding the creation of new sites have made it difficult for municipalities to make long-term plans for disposal by way of sanitary landfill sites—and rightly so. Therefore, it is up to us at the provincial level to help create and promote alternative methods of disposal.

I disagree with the Robarts report, which implies that the province should assume full responsibility for solid waste disposal. We should, however, be involved in research, experimental plants, financial assistance and general programming and direction.

Since about 1965 the Ministry of the Environment has had a program whereby the government will assist municipalities in the building of transfer stations and front-end processing plants. Basically, the province pays 100 per cent of the capital cost of the plant and charges the municipality 50 per cent of the cost amortized over a 40-year period.

At the time this was introduced I felt, and I think most people in the ministry felt, that this was a reasonable arrangement and one that would be attractive to local governments. However, up until now it has not been. Maybe we will have to sweeten the pot and stop reallocating funds for other things.

In any event, the main responsibility for waste disposal should remain at the regional level, where a region or restructured municipality exists, as well as metropolitan areas, larger cities and possibly at the county level where no substantial urban centre exists. The province may have to become more involved in unorganized districts, but the problems there are not as great as in builtup areas.

We all know that the collection and disposal of domestic waste has always been a local responsibility and by its very nature should, for the most part, remain at that level, subject to what I have said. It is important, therefore, that any efforts to reduce waste must involve municipal governments and all of the people living within their boundaries.

In spite of the fact that garbage may not be a high-priority issue, municipalities have a responsibility to institute ways and means of reducing waste. They must be prepared to accept the fact that disposal will cost more in the future, regardless of the method used; therefore, why not use a method where there is some recovery and side benefits as well as provincial involvement?

There are a number of ways of disposing of waste other than by landfill. There is direct burning, direct burning with size reduction, pyrolysis and fuel preparation.

Direct burning usually involves small-scale package incinerators, which are commonly referred to as controlled-air incinerators.

These usually handle less than 100 tons per day.

Swaru in Hamilton is a good example of direct burning with size reduction.

Pyrolysis systems are largely in the development stage, although the Andco-Torrax system has been accepted commercially in four installations in Europe and Union Carbide are involved in this type of system.

Various designs have been developed to derive gaseous and liquid fuels from municipal refuse. The fuel preparation method includes two types, loosely termed dry and wet. The dry process uses shredding, with size reduction of raw refuse usually followed by magnetic removal of ferrous metals and some form of air classification to separate the particles into light and heavy fractions. The light fraction has come to be known as refuse derived fuel or RDF, and the fuel can be used in existing coal-fired boilers as a supplemental fuel in the cement kiln or as a complete or partial supply for new boilers designed for burning multiple fuels.

The "watts from waste" project, if that ever gets off the ground, is a demonstration project using RDF as a supplemental fuel in an existing boiler.

The recent announcement by the Ministry of Energy of the Toronto central heating plant using waste as fuel is an excellent idea, a good example of energy from waste. The energy recovered in that plant, for example, would be equivalent to 750,000 barrels of oil in one year, rather an important point these days.

There is no question that many of the alternate methods will cost more than landfill, but time is running out on the difference. The present state of technology makes it practical that we should be building more of these plants, and again we need municipal co-operation as well as to take a look at the extent of provincial financial involvement.

It has been suggested that the program should not only be speeded up but should be in three stages. The first stage will be the gradual replacement of disposal sites by transfer stations so that disposal operations in a particular area are concentrated in the few large sophisticated facilities. At those plants the proportion of readily separable and marketable materials, such as corrugated paper, bundled newsprint and ferrous metals will be removed for sale and the remainder shredded.

At the second stage, the provision of transfer stations and transportation networks should be completed throughout the province, which will enable the remainder of the front-end plants needed to be constructed. During this stage, also, sufficient progress should be made in process technology and market development to enable work to begin on the installation of proven back-end recovery processes.

With the third stage, it will be possible to complete the program by installation of complete resource recovery processes serving 90 per cent of the population of the province and greatly reducing the need for a landfill of municipal waste.

I hesitate to set a date, but surely 1990 is not too early. The provision of front-end plants alone does not pretend to be a complete solution to municipal waste management problems; however, it is a necessary first step and a very substantial step towards the complete solution which is the goal of a comprehensive provincial program.

A proportion of the waste will be reclaimed for reuse immediately, and this, along with the processing of the remainder, will reduce landfill requirements, the cost of transportation and landfill, and very substantially reduce disposal problems even during the comparatively short time until further processing equipment for greater resource recovery can be introduced.

The technology is advanced enough to start building more plants. All we need now is desire and commitment.

Mr. Gaunt: I'm very pleased to participate in this particular debate. I certainly support this resolution; it's something that I and my party, indeed the opposition, have been talking about for a number of years. No one could argue with any item in the resolution and I was very interested to listen to the comments of my friend the member for Burlington-South. I sense that he has a greater commitment to recycling and reclamation now, in his reincarnation as a private member, than he had when he was a minister.

Mr. Kerr: I always did have.

Mr. Gaunt: All right, I accept that and I can therefore only assume that my friend had difficulty in getting his ideas accepted by his cabinet colleagues when he was Minister of the Environment a couple of years ago.

Mr. Lawlor: A good assumption.

Mr. Gaunt: In any event, I welcome the resolution. I think it's a good focus for a debate of this type. We have had it during consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of the Environment year after year and I think it's well to bring it into this forum too.

There's certainly a need to reduce the amount of waste being disposed of in sanitary landfill dump sites. There's certainly a need to increase the assistance to municipalities, and there's a need to encourage development and to maximize opportunities for reclamation and recycling.

There's no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the existing provincial financing program for resource recovery projects is inadequate. Although the program provides the capital cost of construction—50 per cent is a grant and 50 per cent is a loan recoverable over 40 years—it has been really unsuccessful in drawing municipalities into this particular field. Municipalities are reluctant to proceed because the initial capital expenditure for these kinds of facilities is tremendously high.

The other ingredient is the fact that potential revenues will not justify the expenditures; and potential revenues are difficult to guarantee, given equipment and market uncertainties and so on for the recovered products. I want to touch on that a little later because I did make some suggestions back on November 28, 1977 during the consideration of the estimates as to how we might try and at least partially overcome that problem.

The Metropolitan Toronto area waste management study of 1976 concluded that the current financial incentive programs are too inflexible as they apply to municipal and private waste management facilities, and recommended that provincial funding programs for solid waste facilities become more flexible to permit a broader participation.

During the 1977 Ministry of the Environment estimates, the then minister, Mr. Kerr, said: "We will have to sweeten the pot"—and my friend repeated that quote today—"in some areas where there is a genuine problem in terms of financing the more modern type of disposal that should be used rather than landfill." I agree; and I agreed at that time. I reaffirm that agreement today. The fact of the matter is the pot has not been sweetened. I suggest that be done immediately, otherwise I don't think we are going to draw municipalities into these kinds of programs.

Last September a proposal to build a recycling plant to handle all of Peterborough's garbage was rejected because it was felt until markets for a recoverable product prove more stable, and unless further support is forthcoming from other levels of government, the proposal is uneconomical. Marketing problems for recovered materials must be solved as a top priority.

Back in 1977, during the estimates, I touched upon the benefits which could accrue from a provincial recycling marketing board system to co-ordinate the supply of reclaimed material and to seek customers. I suggested at the time that it could also promote and accelerate the program of building reclamation and recycling plants. I still feel that to be the case, and it's something worth investigating and implementing.

In the United States more than 20 cities in metropolitan areas have resource recovery plants now in operation, with another 10 plants in various stages of construction and 35 more in the planning stage. I had intended to review some of these, but obviously, I am not going to have time to do so. The new hydro pulper plant in Hempstead, New York, is a good example of how securing markets for the sale of power and salvaged materials has ensured the plant's future viability. The plant, which is North America's largest waste conversion plant, turns 2,000 tons of garbage a day into 250 million kilowatts of electricity a year, as well as yielding about 40,000 tons of ferrous scrap, 5,000 tons of aluminum scrap, and 23,000 tons of glass scrap a year, which the community can sell.

Contracts to sell half the plant's aluminum to Reynolds Metal and Aluminum Company of America, all of the glass to Glass Container Corporation and a 17½-year contract with the Long Island Lighting Company to buy the plant's steam output, to be fed into their electricity generators, mean that the Hempstead community will get $4 a ton as its share of proceeds from the sale of these products.

Hempstead Sanitation Commissioner William Landman estimates that their net disposal costs, which had been running as high as $18 to $19 a ton, will drop to about $11 a ton, a saving of more than $5 million a year.

An interesting point in the construction of the Hempstead facility is that the need for a waste conversion plant became urgent when the town had run out of landfill areas. The passage of the US Resource Conservation and Recovery Act in 1976, requiring an end to "environmentally unsound" disposal of solid waste, led to the construction of the facility at a cost of $73 million—these plants do not come cheaply, as the member pointed out—which will be operated by Black Clawson Company, a subsidiary of Parsons and Whittemore, a New York engineering firm which is planning the construction of another mammoth facility in Dade county, near Miami, to go into service in 1980, converting 18,000 tons of garbage a day into 500 million kilowatts of electricity a year, twice the size of the Hempstead plant.

I hesitate to encourage the ministry here to get into a mammoth program. It would be much better to go with a smaller pilot project type of operation, work out the bugs, and then move on to the next stage, rather than to get into tremendous cost and try to work out the bugs as we go along.

Let's talk for a moment about "watts from waste," which my friend from Burlington South mentioned. After years of a lot of publicity, and even more delay, it seems that this particular project is to be dropped—or at least re-examined, as it is put in a March 1979 Ministry of Energy press release. All of this, I understand, is due to the cost escalations and the technological problems that have been experienced.

The cost of the plant has escalated considerably over the past number of years while the wrinkles and the bugs have been worked out and while the negotiations went on between Metro and the Ministry of the Environment and Ontario Hydro. It started off at something like $11 million, and now I believe the total is up around $46 million, of which Metro would have to pay about $30 million. The chairman of the works committee has made it clear that, under the severe financial restraints on Metro's capital funds, the municipality cannot absorb the increase of almost $10 million which would be necessary to have the project proceed under the present cost-sharing formula. So that particular project is very much up in the air. It is to be hoped that it does go forward, but it seems at this point in time to be in some doubt.

There are a variety of processes available which are operating in many countries of the world. In October 1977—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the member knows of a number of these plants around the world; I was going to mention them and how they operate, but I am sure my friend is aware of them.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, when I read the honourable member's resolution, I wondered whether perhaps he had been struck on the road to Damascus with a sudden revelation, because we will recall that he had the honour of being our first Minister of the Environment in 1971 and served in that portfolio again for a period from October 1975 to January 1978. He could have put these policies which he advocates into effect during those two terms of office.

In fact, if he had put them into effect, we might not be faced with the hearings now going on regarding the proposed landfill site at Glanbrook, intended to serve the Hamilton region. These hearings are being very hotly contested. The site involves the use of agricultural land which is needed for agricultural purposes. There is considerable controversy surrounding this and considerable concern by the farmers located nearby as to whether or not leachates from the landfill might interfere with their farming operations. If the minister had been able to put in the kind of resource recovery and waste reduction programs he talked about, we might not have that application being heard at the present time.

Presumably the minister did not implement his policies when he had the portfolio because he could not persuade his colleagues in the cabinet to take such action. I would like to ask, what makes him think the cabinet is any more ready to take action now? If the government members do vote for this motherhood resolution, will we get any more action than we have in the past, because there is nothing to prevent them from acting right now. I suggest that if the member really wants action in this field, he should have the courage to cross the floor of the House and join the NDP which has been advocating these policies for many years.

Mr. Gaunt: He would feel more at home with the Liberals.

Ms. Bryden: It would require courage to cross the floor.

Mr. Sterling: Where were you when the pop can tax came up?

Ms. Bryden: The honourable member has demonstrated that he did not lack courage when he swam in polluted Hamilton Bay.

Mr. Kerr: It isn't polluted.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, if one wants to be technical, one could argue that this resolution is out of order because it advocates the spending of money. That, of course, presumes the words "assistance to local government authorities" mean something more than good advice. Perhaps this ambiguity is what the government will use to explain any inaction if government members do support the resolution.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The honourable member cannot use all her time without being constructive.

Mr. Kerr: The honourable member better be constructive in the last three minutes.

Ms. Bryden: The resolution has two parts: first, that the government take steps to reduce the amount of waste going into landfill; second, that the government increase its assistance to local governments to find alternative methods of waste disposal.

Mr. Kerr: Does the honourable member separate the waste in her kitchen?

Ms. Bryden: Yes, I do. I separate my waste in the kitchen and take it to the recycling plants in Toronto. But I do not think there is any increase in the amount of money being given to that Toronto program to set up depots to receive that waste, which is something the government should be doing.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: What about the polluter pays principle?

Ms. Bryden: I notice that in his motion the member is still passing the buck to the municipalities to take action. Yet this government keeps cutting back the resources of municipalities by refusing to give them a formula for a fair sharing of revenues. It seems to me that to pass the buck to the municipalities means further inaction, even if the pot is sweetened, as the member is proposing.

The government must assume responsibility for this growing problem.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: What about the polluter pays principle?

Ms. Bryden: I am coming to that.

The problem is becoming very acute, both for solid waste and for liquid industrial waste, as was pointed out by the resources development committee last fall. We are at a crisis stage, with landfill sites rapidly being filled up and no place for liquid industrial wastes to go, particularly hazardous wastes.

I find little encouragement in the government's actions on the question of reducing the amount of waste going into landfill. For example, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, who is in charge of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, has backed away from the recommendation of the government's own Waste Management Advisory Board, that liquor bottles be collected for recycling. Nor is there any place to collect soft-drink cans for recycling, even though the minister's policy on soft-drink containers is to allow up to 25 per cent to be sold in nonreturnable containers. Either nonreturnables should be banned completely or, if any are permitted in certain applications, they must be got back into the recycling stream and not allowed to litter our highways and our beaches. This applies to all kinds of cans and bottles, not just soft-drink containers.

Reduction of waste also involves more public education. But what do we find in the Ministry of the Environment's estimates for this year? The amount for public education is down by $79,000. What is the minister doing to encourage more householders to use compost heaps for their kitchen garbage? I myself operate a compost heap and find that it produces very valuable soil for the garden. But what sort of grants is the minister giving to organizations promoting this sort of activity, such as the Is Five Foundation, a pioneering recycling group, or the Recycling Foundation of Ontario, which asked for a grant last year but has not, I believe, received one. How many new recycling depots have been established across the province in the past year? Those are the sorts of things we are looking at to see whether the government really is interested in reducing solid waste.

An even bigger step could be taken in reducing waste if the government would take on the packaging industry. Some states in the United States impose a tax on the creators of waste in proportion to their sales and to the amount of solid waste they generate and the cost of disposing of that waste. That could create a powerful incentive for manufacturers and distributors to cut down wasteful packaging, but the member does not appear to have considered that—at least it is not in his resolution—and the government has not responded to suggestions I have made in the past for such a tax.

We all recognize that recycling plants are the principal answer for the residual solid wastes which cannot be eliminated by redesign of processes, by elimination of unnecessary packaging and by reuse of materials. But after eight years with a Ministry of the Environment we are only at the pilot plant stage for a solid-waste recycling plant. We are still considering only the feasibility of a "watts from waste" program for a hydro generating station. And the previous formula—which was awkward—to encourage municipalities to get into the field of resource recovery has not worked; the member admits that, and it is high time we had a new formula. If the members on the other side of the House vote for this resolution, I will expect an immediate announcement of a new formula which may stimulate more "watts from waste" and resource recovery plants.

I also hope we will see much more action on the disposal of liquid industrial wastes, which is a problem that has still not been answered. The committee last fall produced 27 recommendations. Not more than a dozen have been partially and tentatively implemented. There are still many more, indicating that until we take some action here we are going to have liquid industrial wastes going into landfill sites.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Ms. Bryden: Thank you; I will just conclude with one sentence.

The government has set a date of December 31, 1979, for keeping liquid industrial wastes out of landfill sites, but it has no alternatives.

Hon. Mr. Drea: On a point of privilege: I don't want to cut into the private members' time, but I think it is incumbent upon me to set the record straight.

The last speaker made allegations that I have backed away from the recovery of bottles in the operations of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. She knows better than that. That's factually incorrect. It's a matter of record that the Minister of the Environment, the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and I are extremely close to a solution for the recovery, recycling, or whatever you want to call it, of bottles and other glass containers sold in liquor stores. That's a matter of record.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate this afternoon. This topic is of extreme importance to our future in this province and I congratulate the former Minister of the Environment for bringing it forward.

I remember one of the first topics brought up in a caucus meeting in which I participated was related to the pop can tax. I thought it was a very fine idea, but unfortunately neither the government side nor the opposition saw fit to support that particular tax. That was one of the first discouragements I received as an MPP in this Legislature. I thought it was time to bite the bullet and recognize that we can't continue as a consumer society; we must face the escalating amounts of waste each of us is producing.

As a government, we must recognize that all levels of government, as well as the private sector, have an important role to play in this very important matter.

Second, we must understand how resource recovery programs interrelate with other essential aspects of government activity, such as pollution control.

Third, as a provincial government we must continue to ensure careful co-ordination between ministries. Not only must we put our own resources to work most efficiently, we must also ensure that all potential avenues of resource recovery are explored through a clear delineation of the ministers' separate responsibilities.

While the main thrust of my remarks will relate to the activities of our Minister of Energy, I would like to touch briefly on some of the responsibilities of the Ministry of the Environment because together, these ministries are making considerable progress towards the eventual recovery and use of untapped energy and material resources in Ontario.

These may take the form of municipal solid waste, farm and forest waste or heat byproducts from Ontario Hydro generating stations and industrial plant processes.

Generally, the Ministry of the Environment has special responsibility for the management of municipal waste and improved methods of treatment and disposal which include the recovery of both materials and energy. The Ministry of the Environment is also concerned with reducing the quality of waste produced and in developing techniques for the recovery of materials separated at source.

I could list a catalogue of projects at various stages of completion or study at this point, but I would rather talk about one example of the kind of effective work now going on.

One of the things happening at the experimental resource recovery plant in Downsview is that paper and plastic film are being separated from other waste materials because of their high capability for producing British thermal units, or energy. The Ministry of the Environment is taking that material, bundling it up and transporting it to Woodstock where Canada Cement Lafarge Limited has one of its operations.

At present this company is filling approximately 10 per cent of its fuel or energy needs using these particular types of waste material. It is hoped this will increase to approximately 40 or 50 per cent of the firm's energy needs and that is hoped to happen sometime in the future.

One of the things we have tried to exemplify in the past—and I think there is room for us to improve—is that our government is determined to proceed with resource recovery as a high priority. But we are also determined that we're not going to create new problems when we solve the old problems.

I would like now to move to the role of the Ministry of Energy on this topic. This ministry is basically concerned with the energy from waste projects which relate to farm and forest lease and byproduct heat from the Ontario Hydro generating stations and industrial heat processes. Projects with a potential for commercial viability will also be the Ministry of Energy's responsibility. This should enable us to continue to expand the activity and prove the commercial viability of various projects across the province.

As an aside, I mentioned earlier that this whole resource recovery field involves three levels of government. In this regard, during the last election campaign the then Minister of Energy had alluded to a $58 million Canada-Ontario bilateral agreement that was to be signed for conservation and renewable energy technology development and demonstration. It is hoped this will come forward and aid in the thrust of this resolution.

Returning to the Ministry of Energy, I should mention that a set of criteria has been carefully created on which to base decisions as to whether or not the Ministry of Energy should provide assistance to a project. Appropriately enough, the first criterion is security of supply. Is there enough waste to make a certain project viable?

Second, there must exist a potential for using technology that has already proven itself. There must also be a secure market for the energy produced. In other words, if we produce energy, we must have a place to use it. Other criteria examine the viability of the operation, or the energy operation as a whole.

As with the case of the environment projects, I could list another series the Ministry of Energy is involved in but I thought I would review a project which might exemplify the process the Ministry of Energy goes through.

North Bay's municipal refuse is a problem from several perspectives. First, it occupies space. Secondly, contaminated water was found to be seeping from the site, and third, it was attracting sea-gulls that posed a safety hazard to an adjacent airport.

Fourth, the refuse was going to waste. When the city turned to our government for help we understood, on the basis of an early examination of options, that an energy recovery plant might be viable. We also know now that a local company, called Nordfibre, was interested in participating actively in a resource recovery project. What we have here are two levels of government teaming up with the private sector to turn garbage, sewage sludge and wood waste from local industry into energy. That energy would produce the majority of steam in the company's plant while lowering the company's consumption of natural gas into the bargain.

In all honesty, it is doubtful that such a scheme would ever have fallen together without the intervention of an interested government. When I say "interested" I mean a government that is prepared to spend some money to obtain results. In this case, the Ministry of Energy contributed 50 per cent of the cost of the necessary engineering study; the municipality will pay 30 per cent and Nordfibre, the company that would eventually reap some of the benefits from this project, 20 per cent. The Ministry of the Environment in North Bay will also be involved in an active way in dealing with this report.

As the example I have related clearly indicates, neither our government nor any government can go it alone. Resource recovery demands that we act as a team and that we put aside non-productive inquiries into why this delay occurred 10 years ago or why that company wasn't doing more. Our government is now achieving solid results today because of a positive spirit of co-operation and a sober recognition of certain realities. I don't think any of us could kid ourselves about the real problem with municipal solid waste. It is not going to disappear even with more recycling plants and more money being put into these programs. We are still going to need landfill sites.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Mr. Sterling: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I support this resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Grey for up to two minutes.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry but I wanted 10 minutes on this topic because it is one that is very close to me as Owen Sound tries to establish a landfill site in my riding. The member mentioned that municipal co-operation was needed here. I would like to say that the present procedure for a municipality to follow to dispose of its garbage makes this very difficult. In fact, I think we need more co-operation from the government.

In one hand I have here the environmental approval from the environmental approvals branch of the ministry for the site in Sydenham township. In the other hand I have a letter from the minister saying that we can have up to 50 per cent funding for incineration if the energy is recovered and used to heat a building, a hospital, factory or whatever. On the one hand, I have an approval for a landfill site, which Sydenham will not accept and which will now go to the Ontario Municipal Board. On the other hand I have a letter from the minister approving 50 per cent of the cost of incineration if the heat generated is used. We have a landfill site approval for the city wanting landfill and we have 50 per cent funding to help Sydenham township which opposes the site for good reason.

We need from the Ministry of Energy something that will tip the scales in favour of incineration and reclamation. Maybe the Ontario waste disposal and reclamation committee suggested by the member for Windsor-Walkerville over these last several years in private members' bills would make a good start.

Mr. B. Newman: Since 1972.

Mr. McKessock: We need a commitment that landfill for solid waste would be phased out over, say, seven years and help to municipalities to find—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The honourable member's time has now expired.

Mr. McKessock: I want to congratulate the member for bringing this bill forward. I hope he continues to push the government into action in this regard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That completes the allotted time for that order of business.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just before the next order, I would like to place this ruling on record. Last Thursday the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) asked me to consider the provisions of standing order 64(e)(ii) concerning a recording of the names of members objecting to the placing of questions in the event that fewer than 20 members should rise.

I have reviewed the standing order and the member's comments. Two distinct actions must take place. First, the clerks will determine if 20 members are standing and, if 20 members are standing, their names will then be recorded. My interpretation of the standing order is that if 20 members are not standing, the names of any members who object shall not be recorded and the Chair will proceed to place the question, as it is authorized to do by standing order 64.

I hope this will be of assistance to the honourable member.

ONTARIO WINE TAX

Mr. Hall moved resolution 17:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should follow a policy of minimum tax and markup on Ontario wines made from Ontario-grown grapes to encourage a stable economy for the grape-growing industry in order to preserve unique agricultural lands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Lincoln for up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak on behalf of an important industry in the Niagara Peninsula—agriculture. A great lyric poet named Alcaeus once said, and I quote: "Wine, dear boy, and truth." Today I want to outline some truths concerning wine and the grape-growing industry in Niagara.

The Niagara Peninsula, our internationally renowned tender fruit land, has been frozen for agricultural purposes, as it is recognized that these lands are unique in Canada and can provide continuing benefits to Canada in the years ahead. Although these lands were frozen, no corresponding policy has been adopted to ensure the operation of these lands for agricultural purposes will prove a paying proposition for the farmers or fruit growers concerned.

The tender fruit industry, consisting of producers of peaches, cherries, pears and plums, has been fighting to survive for years. Imported fruits from countries where the sun shines longer, where wage rates and employee benefits are low or non-existent, are bought by the Canadian consumer, either fresh or processed, because they are attractively priced and available at different seasons.

Canadian growers have scant protection through tariff or non-tariff barriers. With a perishable crop, the grower must take what he is offered at the fresh market or truck it to a cannery. Only certain varieties of various fruits are suitable for canning and, at any rate, the number of canning plants is dwindling rapidly because such plants are unprofitable or unable to meet modern environmental standards.

Cold weather this past winter killed one third of certain varieties of peach trees. That means five years are needed to replace a tree and start to get a yield from it.

A shortage of Canadians willing to work or trained to work in fruit orchards has made it increasingly necessary to depend on offshore labour from the Caribbean.

Faced with these and many more difficulties, Ontario's prime tender fruit growing lands are placing increasing reliance on vineyards for their economic survival. The majority of fruit farmers not only grow different types and varieties of fruits but also grow grapes and it has been a steady expansion of the vineyards, brought about through the resourcefulness and far-sightedness of the grape growers and wineries, that has provided the stability to maintain and sustain our tender fruit lands.

Grapes lend themselves to mechanization and a grower can look after many acres. Modern weed sprayers and grape harvesters, approximately 85 per cent of the crop being machine harvested, have solved the cultivation and harvesting problems. Pruning is done during the winter months, tying in April and thinning in June. Much of this work can be done by housewives and students with no offshore labour being needed, so we can compete because of mechanization.

In terms of acreage and crop value, grapes are the largest single crop in the peninsula. Approximately 80 per cent of Canada's grape supply comes from this area, from 25,000 acres, with only the Okanagan Valley in BC providing any other significant commercial production to this time.

Mr. Watson: Have you heard about southwestern Ontario?

Mr. Hall: They have about 250 tons a year.

Wine is the primary end use for the grapes grown in the peninsula, with winery purchases accounting for roughly two thirds of the annual crop. Thus, ensuring a healthy and growing market for Ontario wine is essential to the land-use policy to which the present government says it is firmly committed.

The Wine Council of Ontario states that Ontario wineries and grape growers have invested $185 million in an industry employing 18,395 Ontario residents. Its brief says Ontario wineries and growers purchased over $38 million annually in goods and services, including $14 million in glass and cartons. Annual salaries and wages for full-time and part-time employees are more than $26 million. Property taxes from wineries and vineyards are $4 million annually. Income for grape growers is $13 million, with more than half attributed to wine production from grapes.

These items add up to $81 million annually. Purchases, wages, et cetera for grape juices and jellies would add importantly to this total. In Ontario a grower gets about $265 from a ton of grapes, on average. After adding taxes paid to governments, excluding corporate income taxes and property taxes, that ton of grapes is calculated to deliver $1,439 in taxes, on average.

The competition for the Ontario market is tough. Under current policies of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, foreign produced wines enjoy almost double the listing exposure of Ontario-produced wines. In 1960, the LCBO listed 162 Canadian wines and 161 foreign wines. In 1978, Ontario wine listings totalled 400 and foreign wine listings in excess of 700.

During the past years, the growth of foreign wines has exceeded the growth of Ontario wines by a ratio of nine to one. In 1960, Ontario wines sales were 2.8 million gallons. In 1978, those sales had grown to 6.6 million gallons of Ontario wine. On the other hand, in 1960, foreign wine purchases were merely 474,000 gallons. In 1978, foreign wine purchases had reached 6.3 million gallons—and foreign wine consumption is growing at a rate of 13 per cent annually.

I do not suggest a higher mark-up on imported wines, as I have no wish to discourage our citizens and visitors from selecting the wines of their choice. But it should be clearly understood that foreign wines have access to a world-wide market and a well-protected home market. The following quotation is from a 1978 issue of Foreign Agriculture. The article, written by Mr. Richard Schroeter and Omero Sabatini, concerns the European Economic Community common agricultural policy, known as CAP. I want to quote directly from this article:

That is how they protect agriculture in the European Economic Community. This supports the long-held opinion that many of the foreign wines purchased by the liquor control board are subsidized in one form or another by the foreign countries. As a matter of fact, the substantial tariffs on imports into the European Economic Community have been a major factor in Andres Wines establishing English production facilities.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations knows the practice in foreign countries and was recently quoted in Quest magazine as saying: “All countries protect their own wine, and our Ontario wineries are very highly protected. The reason for this is that they consume Ontario grapes, the key to continued agricultural use of the Niagara Peninsula, and this is not going to change. The peninsula will not be asphalted.”

As it stands, our grape-growing industry of 1,000 growers has proven a great supporter of government revenues. The 1978 crop is likely to supply more than $100 million for provincial and federal purposes, according to the Ontario Grape Growers' Marketing Board. A reduction in mark-up would not necessarily mean a reduction in government incomes, because volumes would increase. If one does not think price is important, consider the fact that, in 1975, 130,000 tons of California grapes were imported into Canada for home wine making—more than Ontario's whole crop of 80,000 tons in a good year and on this the LCBO got nothing.

I am quite certain that the uneven quality produced at low cost, including the basement vintage made by some of the illustrious members of this Legislature, does not measure up to the new wines and champagnes being produced by our wineries, which have made outstanding strides in the past 15 years. Some of them are available in the members' dining room and are well received.

Mr. Speaker, it's about time to recognize the status and benefits the people of Ontario, in particular, receive from our wine growing industry. A long-term commitment along the lines of this resolution or a further reduction in the mark-ups would result in immediate planning for increased plantings of vineyards, commitments for processing, ageing and bottling equipment and the development of broader marketing policies for a product completely grown in Ontario.

Ontario growers and wineries have been going through a period of transition for several years as an affluent society increased table wine consumption. Vinifera and hybrid plantings, new to Canada, have been developed over many years, but it takes approximately five years to get yield off new planting and the matter is complicated by the problem of guessing what the consumer will want to purchase.

Research and development investment by wineries has been substantial. Some 45 varieties of grapes are being grown, including native Labrusca strains, American and French hybrids, and European vinifera grapes. In 1978, hybrid and vinifera production reached 22,000 tons and more will be coming to maturity from now on. These produced the lighter, drier table wines.

The grower could benefit from more generous tile drain loans than the province is making available. It is also suggested that the Foodland Ontario designation could be applied to Ontario wines from Ontario grapes because of the important contribution they make to agriculture, now and in the future.

If unique land preservation is a goal, we will greatly help the tender fruit industry by supporting the grape and wine industry and if future world food shortages develop, we would still have our fruit and grape lands for basic foodstuffs such as vegetables, corn and winter wheat.

More than 100 years ago, a man named Ernest Dowson said: "They are not long, the days of wine and roses. Out of the misty dream our path emerges for a while, then closes within a dream." Mr. Speaker, this well-intentioned path, the dream of protecting our unique lands, still has a chance, but the future is misty and unless we resolve now to protect our farmers and the grape and wine industry, the dream will fade, will be lost to us and so will the land.

Mr. Swart: The member for Lincoln stated, the purpose of the motion before us is to protect the Ontario grape-growing industry, which is largely in Niagara. It is a major industry and therefore I am going to speak in support of the principle of the resolution before us. There is some $16 million in revenue at the farm gate from the grape-growing industry. In fact, I guess it's closer to $20 million when we consider the grapes sold locally and the grapes sold for grape juice.

I support this resolution in principle, too, because it speaks to a very important philosophy of this party and a very real concern we have at the present time that we must move towards import replacements in all fields of our economy. This is one area where we can accomplish exactly that. The amount paid out for foreign wines is something in the neighbourhood of $150 million a year in this nation. If even half of that were switched to Ontario wine, to domestic production in this province and in this country, it would make a substantial impact on our deficit in foreign trade.

I want to make it clear that while I am speaking in support of the grape industry, I am not really promoting greater consumption of wine generally and certainly not of alcoholic beverages. I think our province and our nation would be in much better shape if far less alcoholic beverages were consumed. It is injurious certainly to individuals. The degree of consumption of alcoholic beverages is costly and injurious to our society. I think it is at least as harmful in society as cigarette smoking and that is generally accepted at the present time.

Fortunately, all of our grape production is not going into wine. As a matter of fact, there is a growing percentage of it going into grape juice. Some of the people in this House, apart from myself and the member for Lincoln, may have had the opportunity to visit the Wiley farm near St. Catharines in the Niagara Peninsula where they have started a grape juice business on a 370-acre farm and are making a very real success out of it.

I am really supporting this because while people drink and while they are going to continue to drink the policy should be to maximize Ontario consumption vis-à-vis imports. Although I support the resolution, I want to point out that it is somewhat vague and incomplete. I would like to have seen perhaps a general policy at least—and this couldn't be in the resolution, I grant—in spite of what the minister may say of more openness and less arbitrariness in the operations of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. I suggest to him that he can't read that article in this morning's Globe and Mail and many articles previously without drawing the conclusion that it is an arbitrary body.

In this resolution the mover makes the comment made that he wants to do this in order to preserve the unique agricultural land. I have to say I was quite amazed to hear the member for Lincoln say that the agricultural land there is frozen. Of course that is not the case at all; in fact, I would like him to tell us under what legislation it is frozen. Is it under the regional plan of Niagara? Is it under local municipal plans? Is it action taken by the provincial government? Of course, there is no freeze there at all.

Mr. Hall: There are 78 appeals to the municipal board to the urban area boundaries and the regional official plan.

Mr. Swart: The facts are that there is not a single major development, whether it has been industrial, commercial or residential, that has even been deterred since they passed the legislation in the region back in 1973, in which they said they were going to preserve the fruit and grape land for agricultural use. The member for Lincoln knows very well that even now there is a request from Niagara-on-the-Lake to expand an industrial area on the east of St. Catharines which has existed there for a decade or more. Only a small amount of it has been used. There are 500 acres of it there now and they are going to increase that to 1,080 acres. According to the growth of industry in the Niagara Peninsula over the last 20 years, that will be enough to last at least to the end of this century just in that one little place. That will go through regional council. It may not get through the Ontario Municipal Board with a bit of luck, but it will certainly get through the regional council.

This resolution assuring that there is going to be viability to the grape growers will have a beneficial effect on preserving the prime agricultural land, but it won't preserve it all unless the government takes the parallel measure of having adequate land-use legislation. I am sure the member for Lincoln knows enough about grape growing and about land around St. Catharines that was selling for $25,000 an acre two years ago for development purposes to know that in no way can one buy land at $25,000 an acre and grow grapes, even if we got through these good policies that would preserve that land.

But there must be a viability to the farmers. We must, in one way or another, assure them there is going to be a market for their produce.

I agree entirely with the member for Lincoln when he says Ontario wines are good. Certainly we could quote many tests that have been made in France and elsewhere. Anyone who knows anything about the Inniskillin wines knows they are tops, not only in this nation but throughout the world. Ontario wine now is just as good as any wine produced anywhere in the world.

I want to say the liquor control board has not, through its mark-up policy, really encouraged the use of Ontario wine.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Nonsense.

Mr. Swart: That is true. This year the mark-up on sparkling wine dropped, it is true, from 75 per cent to 70 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is wrong.

Mr. Swart: Dessert wine was marked up from 70 per cent to 75 per cent. All others went up from 47 per cent to 58 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member's figures are wrong.

Mr. Swart: That meant, on average, there was a greater mark-up on Ontario wines, but there was no change made on the mark-up on the foreign wines.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Swart: The Grape Growers' Marketing Board, the wine institute, estimated if that increase in mark-up had been from 47 per cent to 50 per cent, instead of 58 per cent, it would have generated enough revenue—this is in their publication, this is what they tell us—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I meet with them. The member better be prepared because that isn't right and he knows it.

Mr. Swart: I am prepared. I have consulted with them too. They said if the increase in mark-up had been from 47 to 50 per cent it would have been enough to offset the reduction in the sparkling wine.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They don't even talk to you. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Swart: I would be in agreement with the minister that there was merit in reducing the mark-up on sparkling wine so there would be more consumption of it, with its lower alcohol content, and less consumption of wine with higher alcohol content. But he didn't follow through to do the same sort of thing on the wines we import. In fact, by the measures taken this last spring the Ontario producers were put at a greater disadvantage compared to the foreign producers of wine.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member is going to regret ever uttering those words. That could be the end of his seat.

Mr. Swart: The pattern of increase for the last two years—and that includes the most recent increases—shows that the foreign wines have gone up something like 30 per cent in retail cost.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Swart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just conclude with one sentence. In Ontario they have gone up 25 to 30 per cent, in spite of the differential in the value of the dollar. There is something wrong there and I would hope the minister would comment on it when he rises to speak.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Lincoln had six minutes left. Does he wish to use a part thereof?

Mr. Hall: No.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to devote too much time to that slipped-deck rendition of what is going on in the wine industry. I want to be on a much more positive note.

I would draw my friend's attention to the fact that I am going to send this Hansard out to the grape growers. He may long regret some of those words.

The fact of the matter: In every area where the mark-up changed, the grape growers—not the wineries, the member does not know which side he is on—the grape growers, while they might have preferred something else, agree that it was in the best long-term interest of their industry.

There are certain reasons why some of those mark-ups were changed. It will become abundantly clear in the next few months as to why that was done and its significance in terms of cash, increased vineyards, more production that will accrue.

One of the reasons for the change in mark-up was a social policy; sparkling wine or pop wine, or seven per cent wine should have never been at that point. The reason it was at that level was that at the time the grape growers wanted it there because it only uses half as much grapes as does table wine. I'm sure the farm expert from Welland-Thorold is aware of the history of that particular mark-up.

They now want it changed because of two reasons; first, the social responsibility. You really can't have seven per cent wine priced at the same price as 18 per cent. Second, the tremendous increase in the popularity of pop wines, both here and abroad and in the province of Quebec, which uses Ontario concentrates, has produced a significant market for grapes.

The real reason for raising the mark-up was to ensure that the wineries would be in a position to sell outside of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario because, you see, when they sell outside of the LCBO they keep the entire mark-up. The wineries profit from that increased mark-up, not just in their own stores but in the more than 100 kiosks and supermarkets that have been licensed by this minister since last October. They keep all of that.

That is leading to new capitalization in table wine. It is also leading to new vineyard production—and I'm not talking about varietal, I'm talking about even Labrusca—that is going on there now. It is also providing for new equipment, new sales and new merchandise.

Mr. Hall: You're also putting a 10 per cent tax on sales, aren't you?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes: Oh, yes.

I want to speak just for a very few moments about the Ontario wine industry. I must say after some of the dialectic which was devoted to it, I really think that I would like to particularly thank the mover of this motion for the statements he made. I think it is very important that it be brought to the attention of the public that the policies of this government are really set in terms of the grape grower by the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

I receive, as does the honourable the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch), a very great deal of credit for certain implementations—and I make no apologies for those—but the winery is really only incidental. The very common view is we're protecting the winery; we're not doing anything with the wine. The whole thrust is to the grape grower and I think that that is something that should be remembered and I commend the mover of the motion for that, because this sometimes escapes public attention. When it is drawn to the attention of the public, immediately there is a new look at the Ontario wine industry from the primary source, which is the grape grower, right on through, and I think that quite often that has been missed in the past.

It may be of some significance, after the member for Welland-Thorold's diatribe about the mark-up, to note that I cut the price of Ontario brandy even more than the grape growers wanted. The reason for that is it provides the grape grower with a market for the culls in good years—he has to pick them anyway. The new market for Ontario brandy will allow him to pick them and at least get his costs back on it and in a surplus year will provide an additional market. I would have thought that the member would have commended me, the Deputy Premier, and Mr. Bosworth, the chairman of the board. Obviously that has escaped somewhere in here.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, it's a very significant part and, once again, they'll love that remark, they will love it.

Just for a moment I want to talk about mark-ups in terms of GATT. This government cannot trim the size of the mark-up from now on. That is an agreement under GATT. We can lower it but we cannot expand it between domestic product and foreign. We can take into account some normal commercial considerations, which are handling, freight, warehousing.

Mr. Nixon: You can lower it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: We can narrow it, which would mean directly opposite to what has been suggested here. We can lower the gap between both, but we cannot widen it. Were we to drop the mark-up on Ontario wine, we would have to drop the mark-up on imported wines correspondingly. We could raise the mark-up—which is intolerable and will not be done, but that is a condition of the GATT agreement. It was a trade-off and it was done to protect the export of Canadian whisky, which is also a primary Canadian agricultural product. It was one of the demands of the United States.

For the moment, let's not talk about mark-up, let us talk about merchandising. With the introduction of the kiosk into the big supermarket and with some of the things the Deputy Premier, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) and I intend to do in the next few months, Ontario wines have already regained their lost share of the market. They have over 50 per cent of the total. They were down well below that some time ago. They're back there now. In the future, they are going to dominate this market.

It's not going to be based entirely upon price or entirely upon a captive market. It's going to be based upon a fact with which I think everyone in this House agrees—that the new varietals and many of the table wines are among the finest in the world. They are a good quality product. So far, the difficulty with getting them in commercial amounts in hotels and so forth is the inadequacy of the supply. As each year goes by, the supply becomes more stable as that cycle on the varietal grapes does come in.

Second, there is a thrust by the Ontario wine industry away from the fortified wine and into the table wine. That is where the capitalization is going. That is where the research is going. That, quite frankly, is where the merchandising expertise is going.

I think there is an entirely optimistic viewpoint shared by both the wineries as represented in the wine council and the one that is outside of it, and the grape growers. They have met with me. They have met with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). They met with the Minister of Agriculture and Food prior to the budget. They consulted with me afterwards. They have made it abundantly plain that the policies of this government, particularly in regard to mark-up, availability of supply, the expansion of the freehold store into the kiosk, have given them a new light and a new optimism for the future.

I would like to emphasize that I do not believe the future of Ontario wine is in trying to dictate to the consumer that he must do this or he must do that; rather, it should be based upon a normal commercial consideration, which is the mark-up.

The mark-up on Ontario wine is not an awful lot different to the mark-up on foreign wine, when you take into account that the LCBO pays for warehousing, et cetera, for the foreign wine, whereas the Ontario wine pays its own. That mark-up becomes remarkably equal, notwithstanding some of the media that feel unless it's French it is not significant, and if it's French, I should subsidize the Rothschilds and sell it at a remarkably low price.

I think the industry should be commended, particularly the Ontario grape growers. Just a little aside: The women's action group, because they felt the grape growers perhaps were confining themselves too much to agriculture and not enough into advertising and promotion, took a giant step forward and have been very instrumental, not just in the promotion of Ontario wines but, indeed, of grape juice, grape jellies and so forth. That has become an exceedingly significant market.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The grape growers have been remarkably consistent. They have been fair; they have been honourable; they have stated their case well. It will indeed be an honour to give them a very special permit when they open their new headquarters in the Niagara Peninsula because they will be the only non-manufacturers of alcoholic products allowed to give you a sample on the premises so you may find out just how good is the quality of brandy and Ontario wines.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to participate in this debate and support the resolution of my colleague from Lincoln. I believe it would be effective if the minister could be persuaded to follow it, if not totally, at least in part.

I'll begin with perhaps what I should be ending with, by quoting to the minister from the Ontario Wine Advisory Committee Report, 1974. The minister was not in the cabinet at that time but he may recognize some of the names appended to the report. The chairman was A. Gordon Cardy. One of the signatures, as I make it out, is John P. Robarts; another one is J. Dean Muncaster; another, J. Charles Grieco; all of them, surely, good friends of the minister and people to whom he should pay a great deal of attention.

The recommendation from that report is particularly significant in the light of what the minister has said. He has thrown up his hands like Pontius Pilate and said, "There is nothing I can do about the mark-up. My hands are tied or washed by the provisions of the GATT agreement." Then he went on to say that if we reduce the mark-up on Ontario wines, we would have to do the same for imported wines.

That is not such an incredibly impossible thing to consider. After all, the mark-up on imported wines is 123 per cent plus 10 per cent tax on top. And there are those people, even though they are wholly committed to drinking only wine produced within sight of the attic window of the member for Lincoln—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not you.

Mr. Nixon: —such as me.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not you. Oh, I've watched you.

Mr. Nixon: There is one exception to that, and I want to bring it to the minister's attention in a minute. There are those who believe that 123 per cent plus an overall 10 per cent is too damned much profit for the LCBO. After all, this minister administers one of the most powerful monopolies, next to Ontario Hydro which isn't really a monopoly at all, in Canada—in North America. We have a law that only the minister can sell the wine. He has his own stores in all the communities and in my riding, he has the finest buildings in the whole constituency except for Liberal headquarters. He buys the material cheap, marks it up and in some instances waters it down, sells it dear and slaps 10 per cent on top and he expects to stand in the House and have us support the initiatives he has taken.

I believe his initiatives have been commendable but inadequate and I would suggest two courses of action, both of them directly along the lines of the resolution put forward by my friend. I believe the mark-up is too high and it could be reduced along the lines of the GATT agreement, including a reduction in the mark-up of imported wines.

The minister is pointing to one of the many empty seats in the front row, the one that should be occupied by the Treasurer, because this debate concerns him more than anybody else. Or is he pointing to the Premier's seat?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Do you really want to cut the price of foreign wines?

Mr. Nixon: I do.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Let that be put on the record.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, sir. I believe, along the lines of the honourable member's resolution, that the mark-up reduction on both levels of wine would continue the kind of protection that even the Minister of Agriculture and Food is prepared to support—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Look at your member. Your member doesn't agree.

Mr. Nixon: —and also expand the market in a way which would lead to the profit of the growers.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You haven't helped your member.

Mr. Nixon: I want to get back to the report signed by John P. Robarts. It says, and this is the more important aspect because it covers tax, the area directly under the responsibility of this government—I quote from the report, page 76:

“The Ontario retail sales tax was originally put into effect to raise provincial revenue on products and transactions from which it derived no other benefit. In the case of wine sales, this premise has been ignored. The consumer is made to pay the sales taxes on a product controlled and priced by an agency of the provincial government from which substantial revenue is derived”—a gross of $430 million last year.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No.

Mr. Nixon: “The committee believes this unique tax on tax situation should be reconsidered by the appropriate ministries.”

The minister who is paying attention to this debate is one of them. The Treasurer, who is absent, is another, The Minister of Agriculture and Food is here and certainly in the words of the member for Lincoln, it applies to the agricultural policy ahead of everyone else.

I was just saying—and I must be sure that this is a part of my remarks since everyone is going to send this out to all of their wine growers; I don't have any in my constituency.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, yes.

Mr. Nixon: All right. The only exception to the use of Niagara wines are those basement vintages that I am not so quick to discredit as my colleague from Lincoln has done. I admire his judgement in all respects, but if he has never tasted the Chateau Nixon rhubarb or elderberry 1978, then he knows not of what he speaks. I will attempt to remedy that as soon as it has aged another few days—

Hon. Mr. Drea: With dandelions thrown in.

Mr. Nixon: —and in that respect, his views might be changed.

[5:45]

I believe the resolution is a significant one. It lies within government policy to support the growers by reducing the end cost. In my view, this would mean that a good and healthy Canadian product, full of vitamins and food values—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Ontario product.

Mr. Nixon: All right, Ontario product—would be expanded. I wish I had time to talk about the government's kiosk policy because to put this in the big supermarkets is one thing, but it simply puts the small merchandiser, the small grocer, at a disadvantage. I will await with interest what the minister does in the future in the limited number of months that are at his and their disposal to remedy this matter.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Wentworth for up to five minutes.

Mr. Isaacs: I rise to offer qualified support for this resolution. It's a step in the right direction, but it's a step that is not at all big enough. Because of the limited amount of time available to me, I want to address, first of all, a couple of comments that were made previously by the minister.

I think the ministry has attempted to take some steps in the right direction—

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have done a lot.

Mr. Isaacs: —but I don't think those steps have been big enough.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not true.

Mr. Nixon: The minister sounds like Jack Horner.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Ask the grape growers. They want to make me chairman.

Mr. Isaacs: I want to offer in support of that statement some figures published by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, the agency that ought to know what is happening in our wine industry in this province. That agency reported in its 1978 annual report that the tonnage of grapes used in the manufacture of wine in the province of Ontario has dropped from 45,000 tons in 1974 to 34,000 tons in 1978.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, no.

Mr. Isaacs: How the minister can call that a good record, I really don't understand.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not true, and you know it.

Mr. Samis: How can it not be true if the figures are there?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The figures are two years old.

Mr. Isaacs: If the figures are not true, then something is wrong with the liquor control board's annual report for 1978, which is last year.

I also want to say something about the program that board is so very proud of. I will quote just two sentences from the introduction to the liquor control board's 1978 report. It says: "The Ontario wine assistance program, which includes the accelerated distribution of wines to our retail outlets at reduced mark-ups, continues to be a success. The sales of Ontario-produced wines have again increased during the 1977-78 year."

The reduced mark-ups, according to the liquor control board, are already in place.

The board claims there are increases in the sale of Ontario wines as a result of the Ontario wine assistance program. It is a true statement that there have been increases, but it is nevertheless also true from the board's own statistics that the sales of imported wines have continued to increase at a rate faster than the sales of Canadian wines, both in liquor board outlets and in Ontario winery outlets.

Mr. Swart: The minister should be listening to this.

Mr. Isaacs: To give the figures for the two years for which the wine assistance program has been in effect, over the period 1976-77 through to 1977-78 sales of Canadian wines in Ontario increased by 20 per cent and sales of imported wines in Ontario increased by almost 35 per cent. I really don't understand how the minister can be proud of that record.

My time is running out. I really feel that reduced mark-ups for Ontario-produced wine might be a very tiny step in the right direction. What we need are some positive steps in terms of encouraging farmers to produce not only grapes, but other Ontario produce, and to put in place policies that ensure land is not being removed from agricultural production, farms are not sold to speculators and that the economics of farming begin to make sense again in the Niagara Peninsula, in the Hamilton-Wentworth region and throughout Ontario.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pursuant to standing order 13, I wish to indicate to the House the order of business for the remainder of this week and next week.

Bill 105 will not be considered this evening but will be considered next Tuesday. Tonight, Bill 71, The Ontario Heritage Act; Bill 93, An Act to provide for the holding of Land by Religious Organizations; and Bill 94, An Act respecting the Anglican Church of Canada, will be dealt with tonight in second reading and in committee stage as required as well. We will go to budget debate then if there is time.

On Friday, in committee of supply we will consider estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

On Monday, June 4, in the afternoon, in committee of supply we will continue with the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. On Monday evening, I would remind the House, the government now having had time to assess the matter that arose this afternoon, in accordance with the undertaking I gave at that time that if all was in order and as straightforward as it appeared, there would be no problem. Pursuant to that undertaking we will be calling the report from the public accounts committee re the Royal Ontario Museum and the provincial auditor. Later Monday night, if there is time, we will have the debate on the motion for adoption of the report of the standing social development committee dated May 25, 1979, re Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

On Tuesday, June 5 in the afternoon we will consider Bill 96, The Planning Amendment Act, second reading only, and Bill 105, An Act to amend the Condominium Act, second reading and committee if required. The following bills will go for second reading at that time and committee as required: Bills 90, 92, 99, 88, 89. Tuesday evening, Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act, second reading in committee.

On Wednesday, June 6, resources development, general government and justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, June 7 in the afternoon, private members' public business, ballot items 17 and 18. In the evening, Bill 17, the Line Fences Act in committee and then second reading and committee stage if required on the following bills: Bill 46, The Local Improvement Amendment Act; Bill 80, The Veterinarians Amendment Act; Bill 81, The Hunter Damage Compensation Amendment Act; and Bill 82, The Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Amendment Act, a matter of great concern to my constituents.

On Friday, June 8, the committee of supply will continue with the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable Acting House Leader may wish to revise the numbers of those balloted items.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is in accordance with the changes made the other day. We will deal instead with the items as scheduled for next Thursday, June 7, which I presume are items 19 and 20, but we changed some of them the other day.

Mr. McCaffrey: A question of clarification, Mr Speaker. My understanding, and I might get some advice from any of the other members of the general government committee who are here, is that we had undertaken to ask of the House leaders the permission of the House to enable us to sit, in addition to Tuesday and Tuesday evening and all day Wednesday next week, on Wednesday night, Thursday, Thursday night and Friday as well.

I know the Acting House Leader mentioned something about the general government committee. Frankly, I didn't catch it all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I referred to the general government committee meeting next Wednesday, June 6, but if that information is conveyed to us on behalf of the committee with concurrence we'll introduce the motion tomorrow morning.

The House recessed at 5:55 p.m.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

186. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry indicate how many new special education teachers it will require in order to implement the special education program it announced on December 15, 1978, and for which it did not provide special funding in the 1979 general legislative grants? Will the ministry indicate what efforts it has made and will be making in order to increase the number of special education teachers available and finance the expansion of special education in Ontario? Will the ministry also indicate its estimate of the number of children requiring special education, but not receiving it? [Tabled May 17, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: On December 15, 1978, the Minister of Education announced a number of legislative and policy changes concerning provisions for the education of exceptional children. It was indicated, at that time, that appropriate amendments to the Education Act would be introduced to support these changes.

The precise information requested by Mr. Bounsall is in preparation in connection with the special education initiatives and proposed amendments to The Education Act.

WEIGHTING FACTORS

187. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry calculate the cash value for each school board in Ontario of the language of instruction (ESL) weighting factor in 1975, 1978 and 1979 estimated? Will the ministry also calculate the per language of instruction pupil value of this weighting factor for each school board? [Tabled May 17, 1979.]

STUDENT DROPOUTS

191. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry expand on its reply to written question 116, subsection 4(d)? Specifically, what percentage of grade nine students reach and complete grade 13 in each Ontario school board? What percentage of grade one students reach and complete grade 13 in this province? In each case please provide a male/female breakdown. [Tabled May 17, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The following tabulation (table 1) shows for each school board, by sex, the number of students enrolled in grade nine in 1974 and the number of grade 13 students enrolled in these same boards in September 1978.

In calculating the survival ratio or the grade retention rates for each board, a number of assumptions have been made:

(a) The grade nine students who were enrolled in Roman Catholic separate schools in 1974 are not included in the individual board totals, but a number of these students would be enrolled in grade 13. Thus, the survival ratios in the right-hand column may be somewhat misleading for those boards of education which have the same boundaries as a large enrolment separate school board.

(b) In 1974, there were 2,497 students enrolled in grade nine in the private schools in Ontario. Two years later, there were 11,591 students enrolled in grade 11 of these schools, and in 1978, there were 7,288 students enrolled in grade 13. Some of these students were grade nine students in the publicly supported schools in September 1974.

(c) No allowance is made for gross migration between grades. For example, students may enter or leave the school board at any grade level, so there is no assurance that the students who are enrolled in grade 13 are identically the same students who first enrolled in grade nine.

(d) No allowance is made for grade repeaters.

Table 2 shows the grade 13 student enrolments (by sex) in September 1978 as a percentage of corresponding grade one enrolments in 1966. The assumptions made in (b), (c) and (d) above still apply.

DECLINING ENROLMENT

192. Mr. Bounsall: Will the ministry indicate what efforts beyond the funding of the commission on declining enrolment it has undertaken to assist local school boards to deal with declining enrolment? Will the ministry indicate the cash value to local school boards of these efforts? Secondly, in view of the recent reports that the Premier has stated that the province has not lessened its commitment to education even though the proportion of the provincial budget allocated to education has declined from fiscal 1975-76 to fiscal 1979-80, would it be accurate to calculate the province's savings from declining enrolment by calculating what the province would have contributed had it maintained funding at the level existing in fiscal 1975-76 and subtracting the present level? If this is not the case, will the ministry indicate how much money the ministry has saved as a result of declining enrolment and what benefits accrue to local school boards as a result of declining enrolment? [Tabled May 17, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We require additional time to prepare our response to the above question. The answer will be ready for tabling on or about Friday, June 8, 1979.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ONTARIO HERITAGE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McCaffrey, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Baetz, moved second reading of Bill 71, An Act to amend the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable parliamentary assistant have an opening statement?

Mr. McCaffrey: I do, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The primary purpose of this amendment is to clarify the wording of section 37 of the act, specifically to enable municipalities to enter into heritage easement agreements with owners of real property for the conservation of buildings of historic or architectural value or interest.

When the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974 was first enacted, it was clearly intended that municipalities would be authorized to embark on easement programs to protect heritage buildings. Since then, several municipalities have approved in principle the taking of heritage easements, but unfortunately they have been unable to proceed with such a program because legal questions have been raised as to the express authority of municipalities to do so under the existing legislation.

In proposing this amendment, the ministry is responding to the requests of several municipalities which wish to further their ability to protect heritage buildings at the local level. By encouraging municipalities to engage in heritage easement programs, new impetus will be given to heritage preservation in the province. These local programs will complement the ongoing heritage easement program which is operated at the provincial level by the Ontario Heritage Foundation.

The participation of municipalities as partners of the Ontario Heritage Foundation in broadly based heritage preservation programs, is in fact a keynote of the Ontario Heritage Act. Under this proposed amendment to section 37, local inhabitants will be able to work with their municipal governments to preserve buildings which are of special significance to their communities.

Mr. Ruston: Point of order. I wonder if you would check to see if there is a quorum in the House; I don't believe there is.

Mr. Haggerty: There is not an NDP member in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is a quorum. Would the honourable parliamentary assistant continue.

Mr. McCaffrey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I think it might be appropriate if I just backtrack a wee bit for the benefit of my New Democratic Party colleagues so they catch the spirit of the amendment.

Mr. Bounsall: Take it as all read.

Mr. Foulds: You can backtrack any time you want; your party is a master at that.

Mr. McCaffrey: By encouraging municipalities to engage in heritage easement programs, which is really the purpose of tonight's amendment, new impetus will be given to heritage preservation in the province. These local programs will complement the ongoing heritage easement program which is operated at the provincial level by the Ontario Heritage Foundation.

The participation of municipalities as partners of the Ontario Heritage Foundation in broadly based heritage preservation programs, is in fact a keynote of the Ontario Heritage Act. Under this proposed amendment to section 37, local inhabitants will be able to work with their municipal governments to preserve buildings which are of special significance to their communities.

Bill 71 proposes a further amendment to the existing section 37(1) by eliminating the necessity for municipalities to designate buildings before taking heritage easements. It is anticipated that this amendment will simplify heritage easement programs and make it less expensive for municipalities to acquire heritage easements.

Finally, Bill 71 proposes that sections 22 and 37 be amended by adding a provision whereby, should a property be both designated and subject to a heritage easement, the terms of the heritage easement shall prevail. This amendment will effectively avoid a possible conflict between the provisions of sections 33 and 34 of the Ontario

Heritage Act, 1974 and the terms of an easement agreement.

The ministry places a high priority on the passage of Bill 71. Several municipalities are now waiting to sign heritage easement agreements with owners of historic buildings. Without these amendments, municipal heritage easement programs cannot proceed. These amendments themselves are essentially of a housekeeping nature and are intended to encourage local heritage initiatives at the municipal government level. I have nothing further to say at this time, other than to request the support of all members of this House for this bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am pleased to rise in support of Bill 71. My colleague the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil), who is the critic for this ministry, had a commitment in his constituency this evening and he asked me to carry the bill on our behalf.

May I, first of all, commend the Ministry of Culture and Recreation, because this is the first opportunity I have had to see a compendium of this nature with respect to a bill. It has proved to be a most helpful compilation, not only of the present sections of the bill but also the proposed ones, together with some examples of the kinds of agreements that are being entered into in order to attempt to safeguard some of the particular and peculiar buildings that are in the province, ones that are worthy of preservation and yet the preservation of which should be done in accordance with their ongoing use and activity within the community.

I understand that the Association of Municipalities of Ontario has viewed this bill, and at least unofficially the response has been favourable to the ministry in bringing forward this legislation. It is true, I suppose, that to a degree some form of municipal autonomy is in principle slightly interfered with by legislation of this sort. However, the intent of the bill is really to protect the interest of municipalities, as I see it, in saving historic sites.

Presumably if there has been any real complaint about the operations of the Ontario Heritage Foundation, it was really that it hasn't been able to become involved enough in helping municipalities protect and encourage the development of their historic buildings. Bill 71 also has appeal to the Association of Municipalities of Ontario in that it places more emphasis on the province for preserving heritage properties. I think this is considered appropriate since it is particularly a provincial responsibility.

I was interested in reviewing an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail on May 9 concerning certain buildings on Old Mill Road in Etobicoke. It appeared to me from the photographs that these buildings, two very nice homes at 71 and 73 Old Mill Road, might not necessarily be included as historic buildings, but they certainly appear from the photographs that accompany this article to be very handsome structures and well worthy of consideration by a municipality as to the stock of particular buildings and projects which any one municipality may have within its boundaries.

That's an example of two buildings which could, and indeed may prove to be lost. Whether they are particularly worthy of preservation is not a decision we would have to face here. However, in the eyes of their own citizens within that community, and limited to the opportunities that council or a local heritage or historical society might have, these are the kinds of projects, depending upon the age or the style of the community, that are worthy of consideration as we look to the implementation of this legislation.

The purpose of this bill is to allow municipalities to make the kinds of easement agreements with owners for the purpose of protecting buildings with a local historic interest. The Ontario Heritage Foundation is still going to act to protect structures of regional or provincial interest and it will continue to be empowered to make the easement agreements or covenants where it might be necessary to do so.

As a person who has been involved in the Waterloo Historical Society over a number of years, it is a pleasure for me to see the developing interest that people have, not necessarily because of their particular background in architecture or history within a community, but as citizens who see a link with the past, an attractive building, a particular site being torn down or threatened with destruction and being replaced with something that obviously has very little architectural merit.

This bill is meant to improve the present situation where municipalities really haven't any authority to protect the property after the 270-day official designation period. That period, of course, has proven to be useful as a stall tactic against immediate or indiscriminate alteration or destruction by an owner, and as well that delay provides some time for a community to mobilize the people who are interested in helping to save a particular site where it is of proven value.

I am sure that most members of the House would agree that simply because a building is of a certain age, this does not necessarily guarantee it has architectural merit or that there are not other buildings within a community that might be more worthy of preservation. But the designation of a building, which we have seen on occasion by municipalities in the province, is really not an effective method of heritage conservation. The minister I think acknowledges that fact, and he has introduced this bill to bring forward the kind of amendments that are going to be useful to preserve and assist in the preservation of a variety of structures within the province.

As the parliamentary assistant has mentioned, there are certain municipalities at present waiting for the passage of this legislation so they can proceed with particular projects. I understand that Toronto, Ottawa, Kingston, and as well the municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk, are among those municipalities interested in attempting to proceed with certain projects which they believe to be in the best interests of their own community when they look at the history and the particular items worthy of preservation within their own municipalities.

I am not certain how the members of the third party may face this legislation. I understood that perhaps they viewed the handing of this power to municipalities for the designation of heritage buildings somewhat uncertainly in that the operation by the provincial government would be a better way of dealing with the subject. I think the responsibility for heritage protection may well, in most cases, be a responsibility that should rest with the province. However, I also think we have an opportunity here to have something in addition to the provincial responsibility, something which can be dealt with at the municipal level and an intelligent balance struck as to how we can best preserve these various projects.

In this bill there are really three particular principles. The first one, of course, as is set out in the second section, is for the municipalities to convince the property owners to enter into an easement agreement; and for this to happen, in some cases certainly monetary incentives are going to have to be offered. It may not be enough simply to designate a structure of a building or a façade, but rather there are going to have to be some costs involved in ensuring that the maintenance or the protection of those particular areas may be something which the owner of the building is prepared to accept.

The Ontario Heritage Foundation in the past has provided grants of 10 to 15 per cent of the value of buildings to assist in this preservation and that, indeed, may also become a requirement or an expectation if a municipality chooses to become involved. However, that is a matter of the contract between the parties, and I am certain that can be worked out by persons on both sides, persons involved at the municipal government level or through heritage or historical groups that believe the provision of those public funds is worthy; and as well the owners and occupiers of buildings who would prefer to have the structures maintained if that financial differential could be of assistance and could be reasonable in the circumstances.

The amendments we see in the bill will leave that financial burden with the municipalities. I would suggest that the parliamentary assistant should give some consideration to the plight that some of the smaller municipalities or perhaps some of those in northern Ontario that have a less strong tax base would have in being prepared to commit those funds to particular local projects, when there are so many other things to which they must address their attention and for which they have limited resources.

It may be, for example, in northern Ontario that a particular building in a community is very much an important part of the heritage of that community. Yet the funds necessary to upgrade it or to ensure that it continues may be a bit of a strain on the tax base or on the opportunities which that community has as it looks at the other portions of its budget. There may be some requirement for the funds of the Ontario Heritage Foundation to be somewhat available to a degree in particular circumstances for the municipality that has something worthy to maintain and for which the ownership is not a requirement by the foundation. That kind of middle ground may be a development which would be for the benefit of both the foundation and the municipalities, as well as the owners and occupants of the building, and more importantly, for the people of the municipalities and for the province.

The second particular item deals with that area of local autonomy to which I had referred. There could be a certain tension which may only be partially resolved by the actions set out in Bill 71. It's my understanding that the Association of Municipalities of Ontario has no particular bill and that suggestions have been made over the years from time to time that amendments of this nature should be available to municipipalities to bridge the gap between ownership and strong involvement by the Heritage Foundation and the alternative of destruction or desecration of a particular historic site.

The responsibility for heritage conservation, it can well be argued, should be the particular domain of the provincial government. But we do have this opportunity to have some middle ground, as I had suggested. I think that second issue of autonomy versus provincial responsibility can be met with the goodwill that's necessary in ensuring that this kind of provision of support for these structures and for these various locations is encouraged.

The third point that does arise as a matter of principle out of this act is to inquire into the steps which the ministry itself has taken to protect government buildings. Honourable members will no doubt recall that I have introduced a private member's bill with respect to the preservation of this building. The whole idea of having a curator of Queen's Park with perhaps a distinguished architect, someone like Eric Arthur or someone with interest in the historic sites within the province, would be the kind of a sounding board which would be very useful in ensuring that structural changes in a building such as this are not made without full consideration of what is being done and how things may be developed in the future.

Mr. Lawlor: Particularly the Amethyst Room.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was going to speak to the Amethyst Room, as the member for Lakeshore has suggested. The wallpaper isn't exactly what I would have chosen, but, on the other hand, to see the old post office room, those who have been here for a few years remember it, turned into a very attractive and useful committee room is the kind of thing which I find very encouraging.

Mr. Lawlor: If you bring your constituents there, you'll never get elected again.

Mr. Breithaupt: I don't know whether that's the case or not.

Mr. Lawlor: It's a palatial unnecessary.

Mr. Breithaupt: Let's just say that not only can the committee rooms, hopefully, be developed and made more useful and attractive but their historic structure can be preserved.

As part of this bill, when we look at that other legislation to which I have referred briefly, the ministry has a responsibility not only to assist in the encouragement of the preservation of a variety of building sites across the province but to look particularly at its own inventory of structures. I don't know whether there is an inventory of historic properties which are either owned or controlled by the province of Ontario. It may be, for example, that the odd liquor-store site in downtown Toronto happens to be in a very handsome building and that the building should not be interfered with, even though the use of a certain floor space or area might change from time to time.

I think it's worthwhile to look into that kind of thing because, as we can tell from the students and young people in the galleries here this evening, there are many people who are becoming more and more interested in the preservation of our heritage in an intelligent way. Obviously, every building may not be successfully taken care of and may be a duplication, but there are so many gems of architecture and style across the province in a variety of building forms that are worthy of being developed and maintained that we run a serious risk unless we deal with these projects soon.

I do suggest, therefore, that there are these particular points to which the parliamentary assistant may wish to address himself as we complete the debate on second reading. I believe that the bill is worthy of support. I congratulate the ministry in bringing it in so that we will have it before this session is complete in the next several weeks, and that the summer months will not be lost, otherwise, to the provision of a location here or there across the province which would be irretrievably lost without this legislation perhaps being available to assist them.

Mr. Grande: I'm happy to rise and speak for a short time on Bill 71, An Act to amend the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974. I do agree with the speaker from the government side and the Liberal member who stood up to speak on this particular bill that this bill strengthens the designation of a particular heritage building. The designation is very limited. It will only go on for 270 days and after that particular time the heritage building can be demolished or altered.

If the municipality or the Ontario Heritage Foundation is able to get involved in a voluntary agreement with the owner of a particular heritage building, then the easement or the covenant that is produced is much more lasting and will be there forever. In that particular sense, this bill is a good thing. As a matter of fact, I have recommended to my colleagues that we would be supporting this bill on second reading.

However, there are two particular principles which the previous speaker mentioned in this bill. One principle is that if the Ontario Heritage Foundation has entered into an easement or covenant with an owner, then the designation provisions of sections 33 and 34 of the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974, no longer apply so that a particular municipality does not have the need to designate that particular building because that building is already protected.

However, as I understand it, the municipality still has the opportunity to designate buildings on which the Ontario Heritage Foundation does not hold an easement or a covenant with an owner. Therefore, in a sense, we're talking about 20 to 23 buildings on which the Ontario Heritage Foundation holds an easement at this particular time and, I understand, in about 10 of them right now that is being transacted with owners. We're really talking about a very minuscule number of heritage buildings in this province when we talk about easements that the Ontario Heritage Foundation has at this particular time.

The first principle is, if there is an easement between the Ontario Heritage Foundation and an owner, then the designation is no longer valid. The municipality no longer needs to designate, and that's that. If there is no easement, the municipality still has the power under section 34 of the Heritage Act, 1974, to so designate.

However, it is a limited power, as I stated earlier, because if an owner is intent upon destroying that particular historical building, then what happens is after the 270 days the municipality has the option of either expropriating the land or else the bulldozer comes in.

There is still nothing in this present act or in the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974, to protect a particular building which the local community or the province, through the Ontario Heritage Foundation, considers to be important to the heritage of this province. There is nothing that can be done about it. There is no clause in the legislation to protect that building.

The second principle is that finally, five years after 1974, we have the amendment. I understand at that particular time the province was under the impression the municipality had the power to enter into easements or covenants with owners of heritage buildings. It took the Minister of Culture and Recreation five years to bring these amendments, when in 1975 and 1976 municipalities were already telling the minister and the ministry they legally did not have that power. Five years later, we have the amendment. Thank you very much. It could have been five years from now, so let's thank our lucky stars.

What this particular section does is give the municipality the power to enter into an easement, but at the same time, it unloads on to the municipality the financial burden of paying the cost of that particular easement.

The previous speaker made mention of the fact that an owner, if he has a heritage property, wants some kind of incentive. Why should an owner, after all, maintain a particular property, whether it is heritage or not, if the land upon which the building is situated can cost a tremendous amount of money and an apartment building can be erected on that site? Why should an owner maintain it as a heritage property?

Therefore, what the heritage foundation has done in the past is it has provided incentives. Ten to 15 per cent of the value of the property has been mentioned. I understand there is another incentive which could be provided but it hasn't been used up to this particular time, and that is to give the owner an income tax incentive, that is from the time the easement is signed with the Ontario Heritage Foundation, for all intents and purposes, that particular property and land is frozen.

So in essence, what can be done is to say if the building and the land costs this much today, we will give you as an income tax deduction the difference between the value, the cost of the land to the building now and the time of entering into an easement with the property.

Those two particular tools can be used. As I said, the former has been used more readily by the Ontario Heritage Foundation and the latter has not yet been used, but perhaps will.

I want him to think of a municipality that does not have a property tax base. I am in agreement with this bill and we will support it. But as a result of this change of legislation, the responsibility now is going to be on that municipality to preserve that local heritage building.

In other words, the local autonomy issue is a double-edged knife. On one hand it would be good for the municipality to have the power to decide what to do with that particular land. On the other hand that power costs money, at least in terms of the 10 or 15 per cent it would have to give to an owner to entice him to enter into an agreement. What if the municipality does not have the flexibility the provincial government has? What happens to that heritage property?

I suspect the municipality, if they cannot enter into an easement agreement with the owner, can designate the property. But as we suggested earlier, after 270 days, the game is over. What I want is some assurance here tonight that the Ontario Heritage Foundation and the provincial government, where a municipality cannot afford to provide incentives to an owner to enter into an easement agreement, will go some way to provide financial assistance to that municipality.

As far as I am concerned, that is the only drawback in this legislation. On paper it looks good, but when a municipality attempts to apply it, it is not so good. It might find the funds are not there to provide the incentives to the property owners. Then unless the government or the Ontario Heritage Foundation steps in with some money—some formula should be devised as far as I'm concerned—that property even though it has tremendous significance to the local municipality, will fall to the bulldozer. The bulldozer will wipe it off of the map.

I know some of the people on the board of governors of the Ontario Heritage Foundation and those people definitely would never allow anything like that to take place. They really have at heart the preservation of the heritage of this province. However, I would not want the government to get out of the picture by saying to the municipality: "you have the legislation, you have the local autonomy, you deal with your problem. And if we're going to come some way to help you with the problem, it is a favour we are doing your municipality."

I would not want the government to take that attitude at all, because I don't think the government does anybody a favour in protecting the heritage of this province. As far as I am concerned, the responsibility lies with the provincial government to protect that heritage.

Even though I appreciate the local autonomy issue, nonetheless, there are many things in the field of culture and recreation that are a responsibility of the government of Ontario for the protection and preservation of the heritage of this province and, frankly, for the encouragement of the arts in this province. The government would not give that power to the local municipalities to encourage the arts, would it? We will not get the Ontario Arts Council in each municipality in this province. As I have said, I agree with the legislation. But I have some doubts. I hope the member for Armourdale will put some of those doubts to rest. Even if he does not, I believe this legislation is important enough that it should go through. But I am sure the member and the Minister of Culture and Recreation both know that they will hear from me in a year or a year and a half from now; they can rest assured of that.

I think I have mentioned everything in terms of this legislation except one thing; that is, the property owner which has been the most consistent destroyer of the heritage of this province is the government of Ontario itself, through the Ministry of Government Services. The Ministry of Government Services has some responsibility for all the buildings owned by the government of this province, and the record of that ministry in protecting the heritage of this province has been, to say the least, dismal—at least, in the last two episodes in which I have had some involvement it has been dismal. I am glad the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is here, because he was the one who said the building has got to go.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The Don Jail, yes. You're a resident of the Don Jail? I can see why you would be unhappy. And it will come down, my friend—right into rubble.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the heritage of this province; I am not talking about the emotionalism of the moment that could be garnered in one's favour.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You'd preserve an old jail?

Mr. Grande: However, let us leave the minister to rest where he is. He is capable of creating other problems and doing other things that will not sit well with this province.

Let me say that two years ago the Minister of Culture and Recreation at that time, the member for—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Brock.

Mr. Grande: Brock.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Grande: Yes, indeed. Two years ago, the minister made a commitment during consideration of those estimates that an inventory of all the buildings owned by the province of Ontario was going to be made. This particular list was going to be made public so that a municipality would not have to go the route of designation and feasibility studies, and the Ontario Heritage Foundation would not have to order a feasibility study and spend thousands of dollars before the minister of the day decided that a building should not be protected, even though the recommendation from both of these bodies was that it should be protected.

I would urge the Minister of Culture and Recreation to come through with that inventory, to come through with that list, so that we know which buildings the Minister of Government Services, the Minister of Culture and Recreation and, indeed, the government considers to be important to the heritage of the province.

The other point, of course, is that the province, through the Minister of Culture and Recreation, should also be talking to the federal government, because some of the federal buildings should be kept since they are part of the heritage of this province. As of now, I understand that no such agreement has been reached. As a matter of fact, I do not know to what extent any talks are going on.

Let me sum up by saying that this legislation is obviously better than what was in the Ontario Heritage Act, 1974. It has been in the making for five years; it is finally here. This party is glad to support it, but I would like some comment from the government in terms of the assurances to the municipalities that, if they do not have the finances with which to enter into an easement agreement, the province or the Ontario Heritage Foundation will go a long way to satisfy that need.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to Bill 71, the Ontario Heritage Amendment Act. The purpose of the bill is to allow municipalities to make easement agreements with property owners for the purpose of protecting buildings of local historical interest. The Ontario Heritage Foundation will still act to protect structures of regional or provincial interest and will be empowered to make easement agreements when necessary.

As previous members mentioned, this perhaps narrows it down a little too much, such that the interest of the province will be in such things as regional matters and provincial interests—one can think of historic regional buildings such as the old county courthouses, and perhaps regional jails and buildings of that nature—but nothing that actually relates to the jurisdiction that will fall upon municipalities under the amendments to this particular act.

Also, the bill is meant to improve the present situation, where municipalities do not have any authority to protect a historic property after the 270-day official designation period. The 270-day period is useful as a stalling tactic against intermediate or indiscriminate alteration or demolition by owners. As well, the delay provides time in which the community can participate in the final decision.

I am not quite clear about what the explanatory notes mean when they say: "Section 1. Subsection 4 of section 22 is enacted to ensure that the provision of any easement agreement or covenant that is held by the Ontario Heritage Foundation with respect to a heritage building will prevail over the alteration and demolition provisions of part IV or the act where the building has also been designated by the council of a municipality pursuant to the provisions of part IV of the act."

As a member of the procedural affairs committee, I think we run into some areas of concern in this particular area. I would like to read into the record portions of the Comay reports because there still seem to be conflicting jurisdictions in this particular area as it relates to the Ontario Heritage Act.

"Municipal councils can withhold demolition permits for designated buildings of architectural or historic significance for a period of 270 days under the provisions of the Ontario Heritage Act. Municipalities also have a right under the Planning Act to withhold demolition permits for any residential buildings until the owner has secured a new building permit for the property. The question has been raised whether the demolition control provisions of the Planning Act should apply to designated historic buildings as well."

It goes on to say:

"The two different kinds of controls are now being provided for two essentially different kinds of situations. The procedures for historic buildings are designed, at least in part, to give the municipality an opportunity to carry out negotiations with the owners so as to find a way of maintaining the building in an appropriate use while preserving its distinctive character. We have recommended specific changes that should assist municipalities for this purpose: improvements in the use of incentive zoning and holding bylaws (in chapter 11) and provision for the acquisition of development rights (in chapter 15)."

I suppose, under the section that deals with easements, what this actually does is give municipalities the right to control through easements. That is what it does. But that has always been under the act, where the Ontario Heritage Foundation had that power and authority to deal with it too. This does away with the mind boggle of the old common-law easement; I think that is the intent of the section.

To continue with the Comay report: "Demolition control for residential structures is designed mainly to forestall the premature destruction of residential housing stock. Provisions of the act do not allow municipalities to prevent demolition indefinitely, but only as long as the owner cannot make another legal use of the property.

"As soon as he is able to secure a building permit, a demolition permit must be granted."

The final paragraph reads: "The problem with historic or architecturally significant buildings is that in many cases the owner can in fact make another legal use of the property if the Planning Act provisions were applied." That is still going to be applied, if the owner wants to do it, if you don't obtain an easement.

"Municipalities would in many cases lose the valuable protection afforded by the 270-day provisions of the Ontario Heritage Act, since demolition would be legally possible. We believe that on balance it is more important that municipalities have the assured benefit of the 270-day waiting period, plus the availability of special zoning provisions and development rights acquisition that we have proposed, than simply the security of being able to withhold a demolition permit until a building permit has been secured."

The report goes on to say, "We are, therefore, unable to recommend that the demolition control provisions of the Planning Act be applied to designated historic or architecturally significant buildings under the Ontario Heritage Act."

That still leaves a question in my mind as to whether this bill will provide safety measures—that council will have the authority to preserve historic buildings. This easement isn't going to provide that. If you don't get the easements, the agreement is not going to be there. It has to be agreed upon. I would like to get clarification on that; it just does not provide the controls a municipality must have if it is going to have some control over historic buildings.

I believe that under the act the Ontario Heritage Foundation does have control, but once this passes on to local governments, and we talk about local autonomy, I think this may cause some problems with additional legal costs. Perhaps the minister should be taking a close look at this.

The other matter I am concerned about is the phrase in section 2 of the bill, "local advisory committee, where one is established." I suppose it shouldn't be a matter of "where one is established," but "shall be established." I don't think municipal councils have enough time today to deal with the preservation of historic buildings in their communities; I think their work load now is rather heavy. To add more to it might cause some oversight and an important historic building might be demolished. I suggest that is an area that should be looked at.

I don't think we should lose sight also of the fact that there are about four different agencies involved in this bill and that should be mentioned. There is the federal government's Heritage Canada; there is the Parks Canada assistance; at the provincial level there is the Ontario Heritage Foundation; then there is the municipal level; and, finally, we have the private sector. All are involved in this area. In view of this, I should think it almost compulsory that a local advisory committee be established.

These are some of the points I am concerned about in this bill. As my colleague has said, we support this bill in principle, but I am afraid it doesn't go quite far enough to provide protection for some of these historic buildings or sites.

This year the Niagara Peninsula, and particularly the city of Port Colborne, are celebrating the 105th anniversary of the building of the Welland Canal. There are some historic sites located in Port Colborne which relate to the second and third canals. Parts of the old locks are still there, as well as the control weir. These should, perhaps, be preserved for generations to come, as examples of what was quite an engineering feat for the time. There's the old feeder canal that was part of the original Welland Canal that is located in Moulton-Sherbrooke township—the town of Dunnville now—and Wainfleet township. It's of a rather historic nature and it's a beautiful little waterway that should be preserved for generations to come. For some unknown reason, we've let this slip. I hope this year, with the celebrating of this great event, consideration by the Ontario Heritage Foundation and other government agencies and even the private sector which is involved at the present time, they will get all the help they need to preserve this waterway.

I am still not quite clear as to the intent of the bill. As I understand it, there is legislation there now and all this does is just remove it from the authority and jurisdiction of the Ontario Heritage Foundation and give it to local municipalities. I'm afraid there may be additional costs involved there and perhaps some of the grant money can be passed on to the municipalities that want to be involved in this program.

I think it's a good program and I do support it.

Mr. Lawlor: Just two points, Mr. Speaker. First, in general terms, the Ontario Heritage Foundation can be—and I warned the government with respect to this point; I have never done it before in the Legislature—subject to very great abuse. The tax concessions with respect to the turning over of so-called antiques, artefactums of various kinds, at an inflated value is a trick of the rich to escape the responsibility. Those who do the assessing aren't particularly meticulous about what figures they use. In order to acquire the property in the name of the province, whatever it might be, they are rather indulgent towards the price placed by the owner, the entrepreneur, whoever he might be. It's the rich who do this in any event, and in order to escape the tax consequences, they value the thing very high. Some day an investigation is going to have to be made of that whole business because I've had some reference to this kind of manipulation going on.

The other thing is a pure legal point. Of course, on all legal points in this House I address the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams). How can there be an easement without either a dominant or a servient tenement? These things all go together and it's part of English law. Maybe he could correct me on it, maybe I'm wrong. At the very best he's talking about a covenant but all the way through and on the documentation he has given out on this, it is constantly referred to as an easement.

In other words, the front wall, the façade, of the building has some historic interest, et cetera, and you acquire some kind of rights over it. That right, I put it to you, is not an easement by any designation known to English common law or otherwise. Why do they designate it as such? The government owns no other property in the vicinity and in order to acquire an easement, you have to own the property immediately adjacent thereto.

I rather suspect that on that basis someone could attack, at a subsequent date, many of the agreements they are drawing up as being maldesignated, as not having the force and effect, and certainly not the terminological designation they have made of it, and possibly invalidate the whole principle.

I don't want to speak at any great length on the matter. I just bring those two points to their attention and leave them alone.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member wishing to speak to this bill? If not, the parliamentary assistant in reply.

Mr. McCaffrey: First I would like to ask you for some advice. Is this called the committee of the whole House or where are we?

Mr. Acting Speaker: No, not yet.

Mr. McCaffrey: At what point is it and who decides?

Mr. Acting Speaker: I am sorry, at what point do we do what?

Mr. McCaffrey: When do we go into the committee of the whole House?

[9:00]

Mr. Acting Speaker: After your reply we will see whether it passes second reading or not. I'm asking you to make some reply.

Mr. McCaffrey: Terrific. I'm just wrestling with the member for Lakeshore's 17th century definition of an easement. In the meantime I wanted to find out just exactly where we were.

Let me work backwards and try to answer a couple of the questions—

Mr. Lawlor: It sounds very good. You're probably more at home working backwards.

Mr. McCaffrey:—raised by the member for Oakwood and the soak-the-rich member for Lakeshore.

The member for Erie specifically asked about the intent of the bill and it's worth touching on. It also alludes to some of the comments raised by the member for Oakwood. "Easements," in the definition used by those in the Ontario Heritage Foundation since 1974, at least, have in 24 instances been used to have some rights over certain buildings in the province to preserve them for historical, architectural purposes, et cetera.

Mr. Lawlor: Your taste is very bad.

Mr. McCaffrey: The intent of the bill was to give municipalities the same opportunity to write easements to enter into those kinds of agreements. I think it's fundamental to point out that these are voluntary contracts entered into by the owner or owners of a particular building and, in this instance, the Ontario Heritage Foundation, and subsequent to the passage of this amendment, the municipality. That clearly is the intent of the bill—to give what has been since 1974 a useful and important tool used by the foundation to the municipalities as well.

The member for Oakwood—and I can understand this—wants some assurance from other than the good people who make up the board of directors of the Ontario Heritage Foundation that this is not really some kind of a device to thrust additional costs on the municipalities—if that's a fair interpretation. I asked that question myself.

Let me just backtrack and try to answer two things at the same time. My understanding is that in the half a dozen or so matters which prompted this amendment, where municipalities want to enter into their own easement agreements with owners, in every instance the money involved has already been promised by the Ontario Heritage Foundation. One specific one is the property, 187 King Street East, in Toronto. The foundation has already offered a $25,000 grant.

The municipality, in particular the legal department of the city of Toronto, did request, I think in 1978, that the act be amended in order that they could enter into this agreement.

I don't see in that instance, and in the half a dozen I have in front of me, that it's a question of the local municipality having to put up any additional money or any money at all. It's still money coming from the Ontario Heritage Foundation. But they will be able to enter into the agreement.

Mr. Grande: Are you sure about that?

Mr. McCaffrey: I'm sure that's so for the ones I have in front of me.

Let's just jump ahead. Following the passage of this amendment might there be an instance where the municipality, which can now write its own agreement, has to come up with what seems to be a useful yardstick—the 10 per cent or 15 per cent of the market value of that particular building? Will the Ontario Heritage Foundation—I ask myself this—turn a deaf ear to that municipality's request for financial help? I doubt it.

Mr. Grande: This government has always turned a deaf ear to the municipalities.

Mr. McCaffrey: I doubt it, because of the 24 properties held already by the foundation, those easement agreements already held, who was the initiator of it? It was a combination of people and various historical boards in the municipalities and representatives on the foundation board of directors who together wanted to preserve some of these specific properties.

Mr. Grande: Do you know how this government treats school boards and municipalities?

Mr. McCaffrey: There is 36 years of faith standing here in front of you. You want more assurances than the past 36 years? Trust me.

Mr. Lawlor: Thirty-six years of disillusionment.

Mr. McCaffrey: The member for Oakwood also raised an important question regarding the clarification of what appeared to be two parallel contracts; the local designation which the municipalities enter into when they designate a building and the municipalities' passage of this new ability to write their own easement.

You probably have the existing act there, Mr. Speaker. May I read one part of it? On page nine, section 29(4)(b) subsection 4 says: "Notice of intention to designate under section 1 shall contain . . ." and subsection (b) says "a statement of the reason for the proposed designation . . ." As I perceive the municipal easement agreement, it will look not unlike that example we've got. The reasons for the easement agreement will be as specific as, likely more specific than, any reasons for the designation they would have to itemize.

That was not the member's point?

Mr. Grande: No, it's exactly the same thing except that the easement continues for a long time.

Mr. McCaffrey: The fact that the designation has a termination time of 270 days is perceived by me at least as being a potential weakness. The easement agreement is stronger. The second part of the amendment we're adding is that when the two are in place, one has to prevail and that the municipal easement agreement should prevail over any existing designation. That's no problem.

Mr. Grande: I think you're a bit confused but that's okay.

Mr. McCaffrey: Does the member want to ask the question again?

Mr. Grande: Maybe.

Mr. Acting Speaker: It might be more proper if that discussion went on when you're looking at the particular section in committee.

Mr. McCaffrey: I don't think there is anything terribly specific to which I wanted to respond. The original speaker, the member for Kitchener, asked the question about inventory. Is there now such an inventory of government buildings, including this? The member for Oakwood asked about federal government buildings and what is being done now. My understanding is that such an inventory is now being prepared, I assume by the Ontario Heritage Foundation. I don't know what state it's in, quite frankly, but my understanding is that such an inventory of buildings of that type is now being prepared.

Mr. Grande: It will take five years to hatch this.

Mr. McCaffrey: I don't think it's a question of five years. A very specific request came to the minister in 1978 from the legal people in the city of Toronto. Up until that time, there had been an understanding within the Ministry of Culture and Recreation that municipalities could enter into those kinds of agreements. Those municipalities and Toronto was the first illustration, felt the present act did not permit it. The amendment was drafted in a more recent time period and we're all supportive of that. I don't have anything further to say at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawlor: You sure put a bland face on the matter.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS' LANDS ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurtry, moved second reading of Bill 93, An Act to provide for the holding of Land by Religious Organizations.

Mr. Lawlor: Shades of Henry VIII.

Mr. McCaffrey: Now the sinister part.

Mr. Sterling: In response to an Ontario Law Reform Commission report on mortmain, charitable uses and religious institutions, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) has introduced Bills 93 and 94 to update this very old legislation to take into account modern-day needs. It is important in several minor ways to take care of various problems that have existed in the holding and transferring of organizations that were not formerly covered by the former act.

In addition, this bill extends a convenience that was formerly enjoyed only by Christian and Jewish religions to several other recognizable religions which have now been recognized in Ontario as being of much consequence. It also expands the meaning of the religious organization in a general way to many other religious organizations which are not specifically mentioned in the bill.

It is in effect a housekeeping bill. I say that with some reluctance because sometimes that raises more suspicions than anything else, but in fact it is.

Mr. Warner: Right.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to be called upon to speak on this particular bill rather suddenly. However, the explanation that has been given by the parliamentary assistant is an interesting one. I suppose the House could debate for some time the reason one bill deals with religious organizations and the next bill deals with the Anglican church. I would have thought the House had come to some conclusion, as a result, that the Anglican church isn't a religious organization. Being a Lutheran, I am well aware of the old saw that says one is either a Roman Catholic or a Lutheran or belongs to one of the sects. In this case presumably the Anglicans, unfortunately, are beyond the pale, at least so far as this bill is concerned.

In all seriousness, the parliamentary assistant has clearly set out the fact that there are now a variety of other religious groups beyond the traditional Christian and Jewish congregations within the province. They have come and developed within Ontario as a further development of the multicultural mosaic which we have in Ontario and in Canada.

It is important that these groups with different means of guidance and leadership within their own organizations have the opportunity to acquire property and attend to the things the law imposes and requires in a proper and consistent manner. In the ordinary congregation, with which most of us are familiar, a church board or the operation of the ownership residing in an episcopalian corporation or in a bishop is the traditional thing to which most of us are used. But these are circumstances that now require changes.

I welcome the explanation which the parliamentary assistant has given. I don't know whether it is his intention to have this bill go to committee if there are any particulars which he wishes to further discuss. I will certainly accept his comments with respect to the support given by the Ontario Law Reform Commission. I hope the bill, as introduced, will resolve the concerns of other groups so that they can hold title to properties in accordance with their needs in a proper and consistent manner.

Mr. Warner: I appreciate the opportunity to enter into this debate. I know the Speaker is aware that this bill emanates from a long series of similar acts of the Legislature in Ontario and, prior to that, in England.

I think, as a starting point, we should refresh our memory of the comments made by the Ontario Law Reform Commission in its report of 1976 when it stated that the research for this reference, meaning the need for reform, has demonstrated that many of the laws in these areas have accumulated over the centuries, some of them dating back to feudal times and beyond, and have contributed to what once was described with reference to land law generally as "a rubbish heap which no one except professors in law schools understands"—rather, with the implication that even the professors do not thoroughly understand them or all understand them the same way.

That's the place where we're beginning, along with the comment of the law reform commission that there was a need for some reform and this bill is one small part of the reform which the Law Reform Commission was talking about.

Mr. Lawlor: That gave Allan Leal a chance to confess his own ignorance.

Mr. Warner: The roots of this bill go back and some would trace it, as my colleague Mr. Sterling perhaps would remark, prior to Christ. I don't know whether he has traced it back that far, but I have traced it back to at least Henry I and to 1100.

Mr. Samis: I thought he traced it back to Don Irvine.

Mr. Warner: Certainly what is interesting to me is that even in 1100 A.D. it's noted that the records of the city of London, England, "comprise of charters granted by the kings as far back as the time of Henry I conceding to the citizens the right to have actions for lands decided according to their own laws." Then, of course, later on there was the charter of King John, which the chair would be familiar with, and later charters that stated precisely that the privilege be extended to lands within the city of London, England.

Of course from there, from 1100 and later, the charter of King John, we find that the Great Charter—that being the Magna Carta, in 1215—talks in several parts about the city of London, because that's the place where the rights were first developed. Section 9 of the charter says: "Let the city of London have all its ancient liberties and customs." Of course one of the customs was that land could be set aside, apart from the fiefdom aspect of land, and could be held, in some cases for religious purposes.

Beyond that, we find references in sections 32 and 36 of the Great Charter. Section 32 forbids "any freeman to alienate so much of his land as will render the residue insufficient to secure the services due to the lord." Section 36 forbids a dodge whereby a tenant gave land to a religious house and thereby got it discharged from all services and then received it back again. What happened, of course, was that the development of both mortmain and charitable uses reflected a concern that the church was abusing the privilege of having lands and how it would dispose of those lands. If I understand the history correctly, that's how the Charitable Uses Act developed.

Beyond 1215, of course, there was a refinement in 1225 of the Great Charter and then, in 1279, what is called the mortmain de religioes.

Mr. Samis: Let's hear it for them!

Mr. Warner: Which again—and you must be patient here for a moment; how could I lose that reference? Okay; that was 1279. In 1392 there was the Mortmain Act; followed in 1535 by the Statute of Uses; and in 1601 by the Charitable Uses Act.

Of course that legislation, which is commonly known as the statute of Elizabeth I, is really what I would think is a turning point in that it sets out some criteria for charitable uses. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, as you realize, that the preamble to that statute provided the basis, and if I understand it properly still provides the basis, for this act tonight. That preamble reads:

" . . . the Relief of the aged, impotent and poor People, some for Maintenance of sick and maimed Soldiers and Mariners, Schools of Learning, Free Schools and Scholars of Universities, some for Repair of Bridges, Ports, Havens, Causeways, Churches, Sea-Banks and Highways, some for Education and Preferment of Orphans, some for or towards Relief, Stock or Maintenance of Houses of Correction, some for Marriages of poor Maids, some for supportation, Aid and Help with young Tradesmen, Handicraftsmen and Persons decayed, others for the Relief or Redemption of Prisoners or Captives and the Aid or Ease of any poor inhabitants concerning payment of Fifteens setting out of soldiers and other taxes. . . ."

That provided the basis for the further developments which result in our having this bill today. I am sure the Attorney General is well aware he is simply following the line of what had been set out by Elizabeth I.

What is interesting is that it did not provide for the courts the opportunity to be definitive about the churches, because in the statute of Elizabeth I they talked about the maintenance of churches. It was restrictive. Much later on, in 1805, Sir Samuel Romilly had to develop what he called the four heads of charity. That was later altered by Lord McNaughton. His classification is very interesting because he still has four, but he talks about the relief of poverty, the advancement of education, the advancement of religion and other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads.

I want to zero in on the advancement of religion. He makes the distinction, because the advancement of religion is a more encompassing term than what had come prior to that. It is interesting to note that beyond that interpretation of the court was that the advancement of religion is a very broad term. Hang on just a second here.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is great for those who haven't been to law school.

Mr. Acting Speaker: While the honourable member is looking for that reference, I might draw the House's attention to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a former minister of the crown, his wife, and I presume his grandson. They are here on this occasion to see this religious bill going through tonight. I refer, of course, to Allan Grossman.

Applause.

Mr. Warner: The argument that is put forward is that the court cannot place one religion above any other. That decision is a breakthrough in terms of religious freedoms. "Purposes conducive to the advancement of religion" is one of the terms that is used.

"The law of England has always shown favour to gifts for religious purposes. It does not now, in this matter, prefer one religion to another. It assumes that it is good for man to have and practise a religion. But where a particular belief is accepted by one religion and rejected by another, the law can neither accept nor reject it. The law must accept the position that it is right that different religions should each be supported, irrespective of whether or not all its beliefs are true. A religion can be regarded as beneficial without it being necessary to assume that all its beliefs are true, and a religious service can be regarded as beneficial to all those who attend it without it being necessary to determine the spiritual efficacy of that service or to accept any particular belief about it."

As I mentioned, that decision, which was in the Gilmore versus Coates case, provides a basis for some of the religious freedoms that we have. That brings me to one of the questions I hope the parliamentary assistant can respond to, because in his definition section of the bill the broadest term used is "Christian." I would want to know whether or not that includes the Church of Scientology. They are not specifically named in the bill. I think that what the bill does, if I understand the principle of the bill, is perhaps test some of our principles of tolerance of religious diversity. Does the bill assure the Church of Scientology, for example, that it is included in the definition in section 1 of the bill? That is one question I wanted to pose.

We could move on from 1805 to 1888, which again is a landmark in the development, with the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act setting out another refinement in the process. What I wanted to set out for the parliamentary assistant was the fact that there are various stages through the development, including 1888 and 1891; but not until 1960, with the Charities Accounting Act, did we revamp it again. Then the Ontario Law Reform Commission report brought it completely up to date.

All of this provides a basis for religious institutions to hold land, to retain some clear identity and to be able to dispose of the lands as they see fit. What's interesting, as I read it, is that there is a contradiction between what Bill 93 provides and what the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act says. That's supported in the law reform commission report. There is an interesting section in the report about the holding of land by people other than Canadians. On page 14 under foreign ownership of land, it sets out that there are rules for the foreign ownership of land. They seem to be fairly clear in theory, namely that the holding of religious lands cannot be attained by people who are not resident in Ontario or in Canada.

I understand that, but there is no such connection in Bill 93. In fact part of the bill says that the trustees can determine to sell the land or to lease it for 40 years by a vote of the trustees. My assumption would be that if they decide to dispose of the land or to lease it, as guaranteed under Bill 93, they would automatically be subject to the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, which precludes foreign ownership except under special provisions, that is either by licensing or by special provision granted by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That's outlined in the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act.

I'm making that assumption without any guarantee in this bill, and that's what I'm concerned about. In other words, does the bill provide an opportunity and is the Attorney General opening up inadvertently a loophole whereby—obviously not the major religions, or we think not the major religions—some of the minor or smaller sects or groups are able by a circuitous route to acquire lands in Ontario held in trust and leased out though those people who are the principals involved are not Canadian citizens and are not resident in Canada?

Secondly, the provision of the 40-year-lease opportunity seems to me to be not restricted to religious purposes but to allow the opportunity to develop commercial interests on lands which were originally set aside to be for religious purposes. I would stress that I'm unclear about those points. I am not saying the bill does provide the opportunity for that, I am simply not clear on it.

I have attempted to read the bill very thoroughly, the report of the law reform commission thoroughly and all of the history on the matter back to Henry I in 1100 as clearly and understandably as I can.

It seems to me the bill may inadvertently provide an opportunity which I don't think any of us want, that is to allow the holding of land by people who are not resident in Ontario nor Canadian citizens. Secondly, when the land ceases to be used for religious purposes it can then be leased for commercial purposes. I don't think that's the intent either.

I would wonder, then, if the minister might comment also upon the possibility of introducing an amendment which would stipulate that the trustees of any such holdings must be Canadian citizens; this would be based on a couple of things.

First of all, I cannot think of either a major or a minor religion which does not involve Canadians. Secondly, the requirements for Canadian citizenship in terms of years is reduced to three; so surely, if we are looking at trustees who are going to be charged with the responsibility of religious holdings, it would be reasonable to expect that those people would be Canadian citizens. Perhaps that is one way of helping to guarantee that the lands will be retained in Canadian hands and that they will be used only for religious purposes and not leased out for commercial purposes.

At this juncture, and realizing that all of us who are concerned with the legislation—including the many members who are glued to the squawk boxes outside the chamber—understand that we have here one small step in a chain that goes back to 1100 and emanates from the Great Charter, among other things, which indeed makes it an important piece of legislation, and not wanting us to make any mistakes on it, perhaps we can spend the next few moments going over some of the remarks I have made and make sure we are not going to make any mistakes before 10:30.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am indebted to my colleague the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere for the outline of the background and history of the evolution of the bill that is before us this evening. I therefore want to comment on only three or four matters which I believe merit comment.

First of all, I want to underline very clearly two of the requests my colleague made to the parliamentary assistant. The first is that it does appear to us to be essential that the act provide that trustees be Canadian citizens. It seems to me that is not only consistent with questions relating to the ownership of land by charitable organizations, that they should be owned by trustees who are Canadian citizens; it is also consistent with the slow but sure evolution, at some point in time, of an adequate government policy with respect to the ownership of land in Ontario, and I think now is the time to make that provision with respect to Canadian citizenship.

Secondly, I reiterate what my colleague said about the fact that charitable institutions as such—whether they are foreign or domestic is irrelevant—are prohibited now by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act from investing in land in Ontario for investment purposes. The point my colleague makes about the provision in this act which permits land to be used, when not being used for the specific religious purpose, for investment purposes by way of lease for terms up to 40 years seems to us to be a significant breach of that principle and one which we should not tolerate here.

We recognize, as well as anyone else does, that a religious institution no longer needing a piece of land would need a turnaround time in order to dispose of that property. But I do not think it should be provided that there should be a lease provision for 40 years and then, in theory, it could be reused again for religious purpose and defeat the purpose of the bill by permitting that religious institution to hold land in perpetuity and in intermittent periods of 40 years have the opportunity to use it for business investment. I think it is much better to require the disposition of that land within some particular stated and reasonable period of time than to grant that authority with respect to leasing.

Those are the two matters which I trust the government will give some thought to, as we will between now and the time the bill is considered in committee of the whole House, to see whether we can devise an adequate amendment which might have agreement of the government and my colleagues in the Liberal Party.

I want to welcome the act, Mr. Speaker. I suppose it's trite to say it is somewhat overdue, but I know how welcome it is to many of the religious faiths in Metropolitan Toronto, and elsewhere in Ontario, particularly to those in the riding of Riverdale. Significant numbers of South Asian people in that riding have worked long and hard in association with the government to try and get this bill before us to extend its provisions to religious communities such as the Hindu community, those adhering to the Buddhist faith, those members of the Sikh community and others of those South Asian communities. In that sense the bill is most welcome and a very real restatement and reaffirmation in Ontario of a most interesting principle, both historically and fundamentally to the law of Ontario, which stands consolidated in 1897 but unrepealed.

In that respect, I'm indebted to the work which the Ontario law reform commission did on this bill. It is quite fascinating that the principle of equality of religions and the practice of religion in Ontario is an ancient part of the tradition. It is quite fasinating that that particular statute, last consolidated in 1897, still remains unrepealed but is not included in the revised statutes of Ontario; nevertheless, it is the law of Ontario.

At this point in time, I think it is worthwhile to quote the recital to that act and the enacting provision, which are both still in force:

"Whereas the recognition of legal equality among all religious denominations is an admitted principle of Colonial legislation, and whereas in the state and condition of this province to which such principle is peculiarly applicable it is desirable that the same should receive the sanction of direct legislative authority recognizing and declaring the same as a fundamental principle of the civil policy of the province, therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, enacts as follows:

"1. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference provided the same be not made an excuse for acts of licentiousness or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the province is, by the constitution and laws of this province, assured to all Her Majesty's subjects within the same."

I was rather concerned when the parliamentary assistant indicated that perhaps this was simply a housekeeping bill. In fact, it is a modern reaffirmation of a fundamental principle of the constitution of this province with respect to religious freedom, an essential, basic and fundamental ingredient of the kind of society which we in Ontario, and all members of the House I'm sure, are anxious to preserve, enhance, develop and protect.

This bill, in a very real sense, reaffirms that particular aspect of religious freedom. I would hope that when the time comes, as it is coming very soon now—and I'm glad that the legislative counsel of the assembly is here—when the time comes to revise the statutes of Ontario for 1980, this particular provision of the revised statutes of 1897, which remains on the statutes of the province of Ontario but is not consolidated, would be brought into the statute books so that we could be seen to reaffirm positively, in the existing statute books to which reference is made by so many people, this particular and very fundamental principle.

I think it does not depart too far from the principle of the bill, to urge upon the government the importance of considering the other portions of the report of the Law Reform Commission of 1976 dealing with mortmain and charitable uses in religious institutions, because that report indicated very clearly the fundamental ingredients of the considerations that would have to be given with respect to the ownership of land in the province of Ontario, that we can no longer go along without a clear and definitive all-embracing policy with respect to the ownership of land by residents of Ontario and by non-residents of Ontario, whether they be from elsewhere in Canada or from other countries.

That particular report outlines the necessary framework in which the government could develop the kind of policy which the select committee of this assembly on economic and cultural nationalism touched upon clearly in their report, but which has been ignored so long by this government. I think it is worthwhile and appropriate that this report could be referred to in that context, as I have done very briefly.

I welcomed the bill in the terms that it is of such immense importance to so many people now in the province of Ontario that it is a fundamental step forward, as I know we all agree it is. It seems to provide an ongoing framework which would mean we will not have to amend it to include other organizations, because it provides for a method of establishing whether or not a religious organization will meet the tests which are set out in the statutes, even though it is not one of the religious organizations which is delineated in the inclusive part of the definition in the statute.

It is a good bill. I hope the parliamentary assistant will give consideration to the two specific concerns we have, particularly the concern that the provision in the bill relating to trustees should require that trustees of these religious institutions should be Canadian citizens.

Mr. Samis: I was so inspired by the history lesson given tonight by my colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), that I thought I would make two very brief comments.

First, I welcome the bill, for a variety of reasons. I want to specifically commend the government in its outline of various religious groups to be recognized for including what I think is the only indigenous religion in the entire list, and that is the Longhouse Indian religion, a very important religion in the traditions of our particular part of the province.

I think the ultimate irony of this entire debate tonight is that the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling) is the member piloting the bill through the Legislature, when one considers the traditions in history of the southern part of his riding and neighbouring Dundas, and what organization has been paramount in that riding since the inception of Upper Canada, I think it is a true indication of how Upper Canada has now progressed to the stage where we can recognize not just the second religious group but the multiplicity of religious groups. I commend the government for its initiative.

Mr. Sterling: I would like to thank the members who participated in this debate. I would like to indicate it is true this bill indeed is founded on the principle of religious equality, and in fact it still is a bill which will give effect to that principle. First of all I'd like to say to the member for Kitchener. I was not aware that he was a member of the Lutheran faith, but I thought I might add that my great, great grandfather was the first Lutheran minister in Canada. Although I do not profess to that faith at this time, I thought that might be of interest to you.

Mr. Peterson: It's not interesting to him at all; he founded the church.

Mr. Sterling: With regard to some of the points raised by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) in reference to other religions or smaller sects which are not specifically mentioned in this bill, the definition section outlines what in fact a religious organization is to be defined as. Later in the bill there are provisions whereby a religious organization or an organization professing to be a religious organization can go to county court or Supreme Court to determine if they do fall within the purview of that general definition. So that any particular sect can go to this bill to get recognition and there is a practical way for them to determine whether or not they do come under the provisions of this bill.

I would point out that this bill is really a method of holding land for religious organizations. Some religious organizations would rather hold it through incorporated companies and a lot of the various religions do it that way.

I also wanted to point out there's basically a very large difference when you're talking about the mortmain issue and you are talking about this particular act.

Mr. Peterson: He doesn't understand what mortmain is; he read the word in a book today.

Mr. Sterling: The foreign ownership issue is a mortmain issue, it has nothing to do with this particular piece of legislation. The mortmain act requires a foreign corporation to buy a licence in order to either lease or hold land or buy land, or it can qualify through having an extraprovincial corporation licence if it comes under the Ontario Business Corporations Act. So, that particular legislation is designed to take care of the problem of foreign ownership.

Whether or not the trustees of the organization are Canadian citizens or not, quite frankly I look at that as being somewhat irrelevant in connection with this bill. For instance I cannot see the difference between a landed immigrant being one of the trustees and a Canadian citizen being one of the trustees. The land that is held by the trustees is held for a charitable purpose, and if the land is sold or leased the proceeds must be devoted to charitable purposes. Whoever the trustee is is not so important as to how the trust is held.

Mr. Renwick: It should be within the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. Sterling: The other question that was brought up was the right of the religious organization to lease land for commercial purposes. I know within the communities that I represent, there are many churches that are leasing part of their building, for instance to daycare centres. They do that on a continuing basis. I don't think that would fall under the purview of the section that it was for a religious purpose as such. When you think of commercial organizations, when you think of commercial uses, it's difficult to delineate between a commercial and a non-commercial use. The restriction is when they acquire the land, hopefully, or practically, the use of that particular land must be in accordance with the wishes of the members of that particular religious organization, as outlined in section 6.

Now, the advantages of this particular act are not so all-encompassing that I can see anyone wanting to create a religious organization to avoid going through any particular matter. As I mentioned before, for a relatively minor amount of money they could incorporate and be right out of the purview of this act in totality.

At any rate, I would indicate to the member for Riverdale, too, that the old act which this replaces allowed a 21-year lease provision with a renewal period of 21 years, as outlined in the law reform and that was basically why the 40-year period was picked.

We intend to amend one section of the bill in committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

ANGLICAN CHURCH OF CANADA ACT

Mr. Sterling, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McMurry, moved second reading of Bill 94, An Act respecting the Anglican Church of Canada.

Mr. Sterling: I would indicate to the member for Kitchener that I am not a member of the Anglican church, but at any rate, the idea of putting this in the form of a public bill is that historically the Anglican church had a public act going back into the 19th century. The law reform commission recommended that we proceed this way to implement this legislation, basically in order to save the church the cost of bringing in a private bill, as the other religions mostly do have their own special legislation. That is basically the reason for doing it by way of a public piece of legislation rather than a private bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: Having dealt with religious organizations, it is now a pleasure to turn to the Anglican church as some group not otherwise included in the previous bill. Presumably a branch of the Christian faith, they are still worthy of having their own legislation and I suppose that is fine.

I am reminded of the story of an early pope who, in viewing some captured persons from Great Britain, was told that they were Angli—they were from Great Britain. His response was, "Non Angli sed Angeli." Because of their fair hair and blue eyes and the opinion that persons had of what angels should look like, he felt they were not Angles, but rather angels.

I presume if we update the Latin phrases, we are now dealing with what would be the response of the pope of the day; "Non Angeli sed Anglici." In other words, not angels, but Anglicans.

The end result is that we have this legislation which reminds us, of course, of the strong traditions within the province. The Anglican church in Canada has been involved with the very fabric of the formation of our province. As we look back into the background of this legislation and we see references to the effect of legislation passed in the third year of the reign of Queen Victoria and in the involvement of the Church of England in Upper Canada, which, of course, existed as a division of our nation from 1841 to 1867, we can see how the traditions of that church have been to hold title to property, particularly with an overview and involvement of the bishop in a diocese.

I note in the second section that the organization of ownership of that land continues the involvement of the congregation, but also the responsibility and authority of the bishop, which is the tradition of that church and which, of course, is just fine.

I think it is prudent to have this as a piece of public legislation now so that the statutes of the province will show an updating with respect to the entire series of ownerships of property within the province. I believe that bringing forward this bill is indeed a prudent thing and it certainly has our support.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, as you well know, the New Democratic Party has supported the Anglican church in the past—

Mr. Peterson: Anglicans don't vote for socialists.

Mr. Warner: —does support the Anglican church today, will continue to support the Anglican church tomorrow—

Mr. Peterson: You support any left wing cause.

Mr. Warner: As the member for Kitchener mentioned to me earlier—

Mr. Peterson: You'll hitch your wagon to any minority fringe group.

Mr. Warner: —this bill is important. I certainly recall, as the member for London Centre recalls, the young Anglican priest who, at the time of his very first sermon, asked the bishop, "What shall I preach about?" The bishop gave him very wise advice: "You should preach about God in about 15 minutes."

Mr. Peterson: Is this parliamentary humour?

Mr. Warner: It will take a while to sink in, I am sure.

We certainly support Bill 93. It is a companion bill to the one we previously discussed and it is certainly worthy of support.

Mr. Bradley: The member's best speech yet.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make certain that the member for Kitchener understood the reason for a separate bill. The Anglican church in Canada stands ever poised and ready to be established as the established church here—

Mr. Breithaupt: We live in hope.

Mr. Renwick: —and we wouldn't want to have to disentangle it from the other institutions of religious faith in order that that might happen. With the latter-day version of the Family Compact in power in Ontario, their hopes continue to exist that some day they will be so established.

Mr. Breithaupt: Shades of Bishop Strachan.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's hear it for the Family Compact.

Mr. Renwick: I suppose the history of Ontario in religious equality is nowhere better mirrored by the fact that Egerton Ryerson started out life as an Anglican and ended up as a Nonconformist and John Strachan started out as a Nonconformist and ended up as an Anglican bishop.

As my colleague said, because of the long tradition of association of New Democratic Party members with such venerable institutions as Trinity College of the University of Toronto, we will support this particular bill.

Mr. Peterson: You can't get in there if you're a socialist, surely.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to thank the members for their comments in relation to this particular act. As I said in my opening remarks, this bill provides special provisions so that the Anglican church can disentangle itself and make special rules in relation to its hierarchy as opposed to the general law that would be applicable to all.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

House in committee of the whole.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS' LAND ACT

Consideration of Bill 93, An Act to provide for the holding of Land by Religious Organizations.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, could we have the advantage of seeing the amendment which has been proposed by the ministry?

Mr. Warner: That is on section 11.

On section 1:

Mr. Warner: I listened carefully to what the parliamentary assistant said about the description of the religions. If he wouldn't mind going back over that, I would appreciate it.

In section 1(1)(b) reference is made to "religious organization" means an association of persons." It then goes on in a subsequent paragraph to describe "Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Islamic, Jewish, Baha'i, Longhouse Indian, Sikh, Unitarian or Zoroastrian faith, or a subdivision or denomination thereof."

Am I to understand that description may include the Church of Scientology, for example, or some other similar type of smaller group, sect or faith? Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. Sterling: Basically, the section is broken into two parts. In referring to the two words after section 1(1)(b)iii "and includes," the general rule is before that. In other words, the court would look at that part; then the other part further delineates these other religions that are named.

Mr. Breithaupt: What you are saying is that if some group said they were Unitarian, for example, that of itself would be sufficient to avoid having to go through the particular subheadings of that definition. It would be simply accepted without further inquiry. Therefore, the section is not meant to be exclusive at all, but simply descriptive.

Mr. Sterling: That's correct.

Mr. Renwick: I did want to point out to the parliamentary assistant what I believe he said earlier about the question of leasing property for an ancillary purpose such as a day-care centre or some such other operation. I think that indicated he missed the point my colleague had been trying to make. We recognize very clearly you can't make that kind of a distinction. The bill specifically provides in section 1(2) that, "In interpreting subclause (i) of clause (b) of subsection 1, an organization does not cease to be charitable for the reason only that activities that are not charitable but are merely ancillary to a charitable purpose are carried on in conjunction with a charitable purpose."

The point we have been trying to make, and which we will make at the appropriate time with respect to the 40-year lease provision, is that you can very clearly say whether land is being held for investment or is not being held for investment purposes. In that instance we can deal with the topic under those terms and not be diverted by the kind of distinction which I thought the parliamentary assistant was trying to make in reply to my colleague on second reading.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, with respect to section 1(2) and the interpretation that the member for Riverdale has given, is it not correct that in effect the Assessment Act is the tool which is used with respect to discovering whether property, no matter how it is owned, is to be used and therefore taxed?

Would not the provisions which he has referred to take care of the day-care centre or the other ancillary business operation under assessment and the decisions of the courts with respect to dormitories and residences and other matters that we have seen over the years?

I would have thought that would have been resolved in that the use of a property might bear certain taxes or other burdens, even though the title to the property would be attended to by this act.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, my interpretation of section 1(2) is that it is specifically to provide that the religious organization can do acts like leasing its basement to a day-care centre, or a women's association holding a wedding banquet and making some money from serving.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 3, and it would be subsection 7; so if there are comments prior to that, perhaps you would want me to wait to see if there are comments to subsections 1 to 6.

Mr. Breithaupt: May we have copies of the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Warner: I explored my concern with the parliamentary assistant and, having been assured that I am right, it was necessary to draft an amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Warner moves that section 3 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"7. A trustee shall be a Canadian citizen."

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, I first apologize for the short notice, but I wanted to—

Mr. Sterling: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman: I am sorry that I have to raise a point of order on this particular issue, but we are to be given some notice of these amendments; we have not received any notice of this amendment and, therefore, I think the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order: I certainly understand the rules well. The rule says where possible there should be two hours' notice. It is not mandatory.

Mr. Haggerty: The bill has been on the order paper for a couple of months.

Mr. Warner: Earlier, during the second reading, I attempted to explore my concerns, and they were confirmed. Had my concerns been allayed, I would not have entered the amendment. There is nothing out of order; there is nothing to preclude me from putting forward an amendment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You could have given him notice of the amendment and withdrawn it if you were concerned about it.

Mr. Warner: The member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick might wish to read the rules.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Like this afternoon?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order: Before the acting House leader of the government party has an apoplectic fit over the question—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am very upset about it.

Mr. Renwick:—we as always would cooperate. If the government wishes time to consider the amendment, we would be quite prepared to co-operate. If the acting House leader of the government party would move that the committee rise and report, we could always consider the matter at some future time rather than to get into, at this hour of the night, an excited debate over a technical question with respect to the application of a rule of the assembly.

[10:15]

Mr. Breithaupt: Speaking to the point of order: Surely we have had the circumstance very often in this House where amendments are brought forward, particularly from the government side, on bills that are before us, and copies wherever possible are given to the critics involved in the debate. However, surely other amendments, as we well know, come up from time to time in committee and are attended to. I would hope that this amendment, if it's the wish of the member to bring it forward, can be discussed by the House without any particular strain.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'd be happy to cooperate.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I would like to withdraw my objection to the amendment.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Chairman, what I'd like to do is put forward my reasons for placing the amendment, and if the parliamentary assistant would like some time to reflect on the matter, I would be most pleased to have it stood over for a while.

My concern is that I believe that notwithstanding the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act which was passed in 1970 and amended in 1972, the bill we have does not preclude foreign ownership of lands that were originally set aside for religious purposes. It is of concern to me, as it was to the select committee of this Legislature looking at the foreign ownership of lands in Ontario, that we increasingly have a problem of our land being consumed by people who are resident outside Canada.

It would seem to me that since this bill directs itself to land being held by religious organizations, and the implication being that those are organizations here in Ontario, we would want to guarantee that the trustees of such organizations are in fact Canadians.

The requirement for Canadian citizenship has been reduced to three years. It is almost inconceivable to think that the trustees of a religious organization, if it's a serious organization, would be people who are not Canadian citizens. Would they rise to such a position of trust and responsibility in less than three years? Would it not make sense that if the religious organization is important and substantial in our community, it would not be composed of people who are Canadian citizens?

I would argue that they would be, and that they are, they probably are. Then why not try to close the loophole which is evident, clearly evident now from the discussion we've had on second reading? Why not close that loophole at least part way? We will perhaps require an amendment later on, but let's close the loophole part-way by saying that the trustee shall be a Canadian citizen.

In closing, if other members of the assembly, including the parliamentary assistant, like some time to reflect on this, I would be quite happy to have this section stood down and we could carry on with the remaining sections. I'm certainly not one to pressure things through, but I think it would be one of the small guarantees we could make in this House to help retain ownership of lands in Ontario by people who are resident of Ontario or, at least, Canadian citizens.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, it's a difficult subject to address, I think, in this amendment. I have brought forward, on a number of occasions, amendments to various statutes in order to require voting and a variety of other responsibilities to be the prerogative of Canadian citizens only. We won't go into the meaningless phrase, "or other British subjects," a phrase which doesn't mean anything in law any longer. But I find this amendment a curious one because, to me, if trustees can be decided upon who are Canadian citizens, and the beneficial ownership within a congregation might be a group of landed immigrants who have not, as yet, achieved citizenship, then the fact of requiring Canadian citizenship for the trustees of that group doesn't resolve the problem to which I think the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere seriously addresses himself—that as soon as you use the word "trustees," they are holding something in trust for themselves and others.

To make citizenship a sole requirement with respect to being a trustee in that case, does not to me resolve a problem of what could be, and clearly was referred to, as "foreign ownership." Where we are dealing with a tract of industrial land, a recreational area around a lake or whatever it might be, the assessment rules as to use and taxation, as well as the other laws that involve themselves in ownership and use of property—whether it be by zoning for the taxation framework—are things which will be dealt with whether the trustees of a particular religious congregation happen to be Canadians or not.

So in first considering the amendment brought forward, I find my desire to have Canadian citizenship an important factor in voting for members of this Legislature, and indeed, the only factor as it's long overdue, or for being involved as a bencher of the law society, or for example, as a member of the board of governors of a university, however it might be, is seemingly to me a more important theme than this item. I don't see very much being resolved by this amendment, but I'd like to hear the parliamentary assistant's views.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might make a comment because of the remarks of the member for Kitchener. I think he sees the failure to include "landed immigrant" in the definition amendment as an exclusionary provision with respect to some of the religious organizations who may wish to use the statute for the purpose of establishing their right to hold land.

In the consideration we gave this, with the present three-year provision of being in Canada as a landed immigrant before your eligibility for Canadian citizenship, we did not feel that with most of the communities—and I'm thinking particularly of the South Asian communities in my riding; the Sikh community, for example and other such communities—that would be a problem. Nor do I think it would be in any way seen as a restriction on anything related to their religious freedom or their right to hold land for religious purposes.

If, however, it were to be seen that way, because in voting we have never adhered rigidly to the principle of Canadian citizenship and have admitted British subjects, as the member knows, I would have no problems. I think the Canadian citizenship is the appropriate way to do it. I have no particular problems. Perhaps my colleague would have no particular problem if we were to amend it to include immigrants or Canadian citizens.

I think we were more concerned that the wording "Canadian citizens" was an easier way of dealing with the matter. We were very much concerned about foreign nationalists who were not landed immigrants or Canadian citizens being the trustees of land in Ontario being held for religious purposes in Ontario. It was that problem we were addressing. We do not think it is wise for the trusteeship of land in Ontario for religious organizations to be in the hands of persons who have no connection whatsoever with this country.

There is the problem of the jurisdiction of the courts over trustees as such. We recognize that in order to tidy it all up we would also have to say "resident in Ontario" to be within the jurisdiction of the court technically. Nevertheless, if they are landed immigrants or Canadian citizens and they are within Canada, the question of attorning to the jurisdiction of the court is not an insurmountable problem of service in the other jurisdictions across the country.

In the comments that are made, I would like to say to the parliamentary assistant that if my colleague is agreeable we would accept the subamendment or agree to amend that to provide that it read "a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant" if that would meet the problem about which we are concerned.

Mr. Sterling: Basically, I really don't know the purpose of this exercise. The land is here, the books of the trustees are here and the court has jurisdiction over that property. The trustees are not the beneficial owners, as the member for Kitchener pointed out.

Mr. Warner: I missed that.

Mr. Sterling: They are not the beneficial owners of the property. The trustees are not the beneficial owners.

Mr. Renwick: They have the legal title to the property.

Mr. Sterling: They have the legal title to the property and they must act in accordance, under section 6, with the wishes of the religious organization that is there. If you are transferring title or accepting title from a religious organization, you should make certain that the religious organization has in fact approved by resolution what the trustees are doing.

I don't know anywhere in our laws where we prevent foreign ownership. I may or may not disagree with that philosophically, but I don't know any precedent for including it in this particular piece of legislation.

The other thing is, I do not see any reason to encumber the legislation with rules. We are going to be dealing with the idea of this particular piece, to simplify a process of law to let a congregation hold land by way of trusteeship rather than by incorporation. That is the idea of the piece of legislation. So what do we do? We start to put strictures on what a trustee must be. Must he be a Canadian citizen or must he be a landed immigrant, or whatever!

I don't think it is fair to these organizations, first of all, to make the distinction between a landed immigrant and a Canadian citizen. They may very well appoint a trustee who is not a Canadian citizen. I object more strenuously to the amendment in terms of restricting it to Canadian citizens, because the group might very well, in error, appoint a trustee who is not a Canadian citizen. He may be the sole trustee and therefore where would all the conveyancing go in terms of that piece of land down the road?

Is that enough reason to attack the title to the property because a landed immigrant was the sole trustee who signed the particular conveyance? The protection is in section 6. That is a religious organization, they control the trustees.

Mr. Warner: What about section 10?

Mr. Sterling: Section 10 is controlled by section 6.

Mr. Warner: Such terms and conditions as they consider expedient.

Mr. Sterling: Section 6 says they can't exercise any powers conferred upon them by this act until they are authorized to do so by resolution of the religious organization. So they have to take whatever mandate they get from the religious organization. I think we're going very far. We're trying to make the thing more complicated than it should be. We're trying to simplify this thing for religious organizations.

Another matter that may be of interest is that I think when you're dealing with religious organizations, as the member for Riverdale pointed out, we are talking about equality and we are talking about equality in religions. I don't know whether that doesn't transverse the nationalistic point of view; are we discriminating then against certain religious people because of the fact that they may have a trustee who is not a Canadian citizen? I don't know, I just think we're encumbering the act more than it needs to be. I just don't see the necessity of this particular amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Are there going to be further comments on this amendment?

Mr. Warner: Yes.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DARLINGTON NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. S. Smith: I will question the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

I wonder if the Premier recalls the last days of the Duplessis regime when it was necessary, in order to draw attention to the high-handedness of that entrenched government, for three students to park themselves outside the office of the then Quebec Premier until he finally agreed to what were indeed reasonable demands.

I wonder if the Premier has any reflections on the obvious parallel between the Duplessis era and the situation now where three people have had to resort to climbing the tower at Darlington simply to try to force this arrogant government to have an environmental assessment hearing on what is after all, the largest nuclear plant yet undertaken by Ontario Hydro—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. S. Smith: —a hearing which was refused on the basis of time and yet now there are many additional years which are there. The hearing could be heard under the government's own legislation. Why does the Premier insist on refusing them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not as familiar with the political history of Quebec as is the honourable member and, in that I live in the present and look to the future, unlike him, and in that he knows far more about arrogance than any of us on this side of the House, the answer is no.

Mr. Cunningham: The Premier never answers a question.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the answer is itself a reflection of the very regime about which I have spoken, may I ask what possible excuse there is for the Premier to deny an environmental assessment hearing regarding the Darlington project, since the original excuse was that the matter had to be rushed through and that the year or so delay would be a dreadful and expensive matter? Now that Darlington itself has been delayed for several years, what possible excuse can there be for telling these people, who have resorted to having to go up that tower and who have said that their intent is to stay there, that the government still won't abide by its own legislation and have a proper environmental assessment hearing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I realize the honourable member is not too concerned about the economic aspects of any of these problems in the province. I recognize that the leader of the Liberal Party would delay any project that will provide employment, a degree of economic security and availability of power supply.

Mr. Haggerty: There are other alternatives.

Hon. Mr. Davis: While the on-stream dates for Darlington have been delayed, it is also true that a great deal of work will be going on, and many job opportunities will be provided. The thought of probably a two-year delay in terms of an environmental hearing, which then would mean that the contracts would be delayed two years, which could mean substantial financial commitments on the part of Hydro and which could mean the loss of a substantial number of jobs, happens to be a concern to this government. It is quite obvious from the various utterances of the leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario that jobs are not of interest to his party, but they are of some interest to us.

Mr. Van Horne: Oh, get serious.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since it is the position of the government that there should be environmental assessments on all major projects which are undertaken, beginning at some point in the future, is the Premier now saying that the government does not believe that environmental assessments in fact will be carried out on major projects? How can he explain why it is that on this particular project, whose start-up date has been delayed by a total of five years since 1977, there is now no time to undertake something when the reasons for delaying the environmental assessment and not having it at the start no longer apply?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This government introduced what is probably the most comprehensive and far-reaching legislation on environmental issues that one will find anywhere in this country or in the United States.

Ms. Gigantes: You haven't applied it to Hydro once.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fairness to the member for Ottawa Centre, who raised this issue some many months ago, before the Leader of the Opposition probably understood it, I say to him the answer is the same. Certainly it is the policy of the government to have some major work submitted to environmental assessment. It was the decision of this government on this issue that it would not be.

Ms. Gigantes: You have excluded every Hydro project.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be interested to know if the Leader of the Opposition, in the absence of his colleague from the far northwestern part of the province of Ontario, will be urging us to have an environmental assessment on Atikokan, to delay it two or three years. Before he answers that, he had better check with his colleague.

Mr. S. Smith: We believe in the law. The government passed the law.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. You are up and down, across, sideways and in every direction.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Since the Premier is busy praising the Environmental Assessment Act and since a project like Darlington is probably the largest project and one of the most important in the history of the province, why would Hydro not have planned in its own background the opportunity for these necessary or predictable delays, as the Premier refers to them, if the act was in fact used?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect to the member for Kitchener, whose knowledge of this is far greater than that of his leader—

Mr. Cunningham: You are stretching it. Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, it is true, it is. I would say to him that while he says it is the largest project, if he were to take the megawatt production from Darlington vis-à-vis the megawatt production from Pickering, he would find that Darlington is not in fact substantially greater than Pickering.

Mr. S. Smith: The capital cost is higher.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is more in dollars because dollars today don't buy as much as they did when Pickering was built. In relative terms, with great respect to the member for Kitchener, he is exaggerating the situation and exaggerating it substantially.

He knows how to do mathematics but his leader doesn't. He knows full well that if he took the dollar terms of Pickering today, related to what the projected cost of Darlington is, his statement that it is the most significant or largest is just not factually correct.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is certainly a major project.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly it is a major project. That's right. I am glad to see the member is backing off a little bit. One thing I would say to the Leader of the Opposition is that some of his colleagues are somewhat more fair and objective.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I would like to ask the Premier, doesn't it worry him that the Environmental Assessment Act will never be used for an Ontario Hydro project and that Darlington may be the last chance he will have to do an environmental assessment of a nuclear power program? Doesn't it worry him that the Environmental Assessment Act of Ontario is becoming known as the best piece of unused environmental legislation in North America?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I realize that the honourable member for Carleton East is knowledgeable about environmental legislation all over the world. She travels extensively, and she has constant communication. But I think if she looked at it objectively, if that is possible for her so to do, she would discover that the environmental legislation, the environmental policy and the care that Ontario Hydro gives to environmental issues are superior to that of any other public utility, and that the policy of this government is more specific and has been adopted and pursued more so than in any other jurisdiction she knows of on this continent.

Mr. Breaugh: Tell them that in Pickering.

Ms. Gigantes: When are you going to use the legislation on Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know she won't acknowledge that. It would be against her principles ever to suggest that is the fact.

Mr. Breaugh: That's garbage.

Mr. Mackenzie: There is no control of Hydro at all.

SALES TAX ON ENTERTAINMENT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question I will direct to the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) or the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz). It is with regard to the government support of Canadian cultural talent, including professional Canadian cultural talent.

I refer to Bill 58 which recently passed in this House and received royal assent. Specifically, I refer to the deletion of section 4. This deletion, I admit and I apologize to the people of Ontario for it, was sneaked past us. I apologize for letting the government sneak it past us.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on!

Mr. S. Smith: And by you. Just listen and you will see.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please put your question.

Mr. S. Smith: It refers to the fact that whereas Canadian talent used to be provided with an exemption from the provincial sales tax when such Canadian talent was booked into an Ontario theatre—this was by ministerial exemption—that exemption can no longer be given except in the case of amateur groups or groups that are receiving public assistance.

Mr. Speaker: Will you please put the question?

Mr. S. Smith: Given that we have in Ontario and in Canada a policy to prefer and assist Canadian talent with regard to prime time on television and with regard to the record industry, why did the government take away this particular benefit? Has it received any representation from the Canadian talent industry asking that the matter be reconsidered?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is quite obvious that the leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario is becoming increasingly desperate these days. I have sensed this for the past 10 days, ever since he probably voted for Bill Kempling, which I am always suspicious that he did.

Mr. J. Reed: Is the Premier going to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will say to the member for Halton-Burlington that it is a horrible confession for his leader and all of his party to make, to say that they didn't look at legislation that was approved by the members of this House and to come in here today and say it was snuck through.

Mr. S. Smith: You sneaked it by us, and we admit it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: What are you talking about?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the Liberals are acknowledging to the public of Ontario that they do not bother to read the legislation before voting for it, then I have to say—

Mr. Breithaupt: The minister didn't report it and we were not aware of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —they are very derelict in their responsibility. It was there in black and white. Even the leader of the Liberal Party should be able to read it. I would say with respect, if he now says he didn't want to pass that legislation, where was he when it was done?

Hon. Mr. Norton: They are totally irresponsible.

Mr. Breithaupt: All that aside, will you reconsider it?

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, given that we have heard from the Canadian talent who themselves were not told about this; given that the theatres tell us they were not told about this; given that the bill was put forward basically as a budget bill and that there was no reference to it in the budget; given that the minister made no mention of the matter during the debate—we have checked Hansard—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did the Leader of the Opposition read it?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And he didn't understand it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: —given that the minister made no reference to it, what I ask now, and I apologize for letting it be snuck by like this—and so did the NDP—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Sneaked by?

[10:15]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a question in there some place?

Mr. S. Smith: The question is, and the Premier has not answered it, has he received representation from outraged people within the Canadian talent industry pointing out that now that the bill is being put into effect they are suffering from it? And will the government reconsider that matter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This has to be one of the most incredible moments for the Leader of the Opposition. I never dispute his disagreeing with government policy. I never dispute his opportunity to say he doesn't agree with legislation. But to have the unmitigated gall to come in here this morning and say that legislation was snuck by, if that is proper grammatical phraseology, has to be the most ludicrous thing I have heard from a Leader of the Opposition in years.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't say for a moment that everything we legislate represents perfection, but the Leader of the Opposition always wants to talk about sharing responsibility. If there is something the honourable member doesn't like to approve of, why doesn't he assume some of the responsibility and say to people that he goofed in his opinion?

Mr. S. Smith: I apologized to the members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He apologized, but why doesn't he say he made a mistake?

Mr. S. Smith: Are you going to reconsider it or not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As a matter of fact, I can't say. I haven't seen any representations. Certainly, if there are representations, I will take a look at them.

Mr. S. Smith: You will receive them, I assure you.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Premier, which also relates to the question of nuclear power.

In view of the confirmation by Ontario Hydro that there are substantial heavy water leaks at the Rolphton nuclear power plant and that those leaks are far more serious than the routine housekeeping which the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) told us was taking place while that plant was closed over the course of the past couple of months; in view of the fact that those leaks have led Hydro to delay the reopening of that plant past the May 31 date that was predicted earlier, will the Premier undertake to have Hydro keep the Rolphton nuclear power plant closed until this Legislature can have a full report on all the safety aspects of the Rolphton plant, including the leaks? Will he also undertake that the plant will be closed until the matter of safety at Rolphton has been fully investigated by the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This matter has been discussed, I think, on two or three occasions, with some lack of unanimity across the House, as I understand it.

An hon. member: Is it housekeeping or not?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Am I wrong in saying there is lack of total unanimity? Isn't that a very objective statement? I can only say that the Atomic Energy Control Board and Ontario Hydro are as conscious, and more so, of safety at Rolphton and anywhere else, as the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Quite obviously Rolphton will not be opened by AECB and Ontario Hydro until they are satisfied it is safe.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that just in the last three or four weeks we have had problems about radiation exposure of workers at Bruce, we have had leaks in nuclear power plants both in Pickering and in Rolphton, we have had problems with the boilers of Babcock and Wilcox, can the Premier not understand that the concerns about nuclear plant safety will not be resolved just by leaving the matter to the Atomic Energy Control Board? Will he, therefore, not agree that the Rolphton plant, which is insignificant in terms of power supply for Ontario at this time, should remain closed until these matters of safety can be fully investigated by the public's representatives here in this Legislature through the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I take nothing away from the abilities of the members of this Legislature, and I mean that sincerely. But I also suggest, with respect, to the leader of the New Democratic Party that there are sometimes temptations on his part and on that of others to partisanize a very sensitive and important issue. The decision is that of AECB, which is the statutory body that controls the safety of these plants. If I were in the member's position, I am not sure I would say, as he is attempting to say, that he has the competence to second-guess. I would say to him what I said in the answer to his first question, that the Atomic Energy Control Board and Ontario Hydro are concerned about, are sensitive to and I think have demonstrated, in any objective analysis, a very thoughtful approach to the planning and operation of the nuclear system in this province.

I understand it is the growing philosophy of the honourable member's party, as particularly represented by the member for Carleton East, that it would call a halt to the nuclear program. That party would probably shut down all of the existing nuclear facilities if she had her way. That party would take away 30 per cent of the generating capacity of this province, with all of the economic implications that are maintained in that.

Ms. Gigantes: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If it is just for a supplementary question, in the proper rotation of things it goes to the member for Halton-Burlington.

Ms. Gigantes: I have a point of privilege I would like to raise before a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege?

Ms. Gigantes: I have a point of privilege. The Premier has suggested to the House that my position is that every nuclear plant in Ontario should be closed down. I would like to tell this House that that is not my position at all and that the Premier and the members of his cabinet should refrain from saying that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Speaking to that point of privilege, I want to say—and I want to say this in public—how encouraged I am that the member for Carleton East is now in support of the nuclear program in this province.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Yesterday afternoon after question period I drew your attention to standing order 19(d)(9). I suggest to you that the Premier's previous statement and his second previous statement with regard to his imputation of motives to my colleague from Carleton East falls within the ambit of that rule and that you should have called the Premier to order. I draw that to your attention with the greatest of respect. Otherwise, we are going to get into these incidents that have plagued this House over the past week.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wasn't talking about motivation; I was talking about a point of view.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly I am talking about a point of view. If one sat on this side in the House and read the reports from the select committee, one would gain the impression that the member for Carleton East was less than enthusiastic about nuclear energy, and I think that is a valid assessment to make.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur did, quite properly in his mind, get up and draw my attention to the possibility of a violation of the standing order with regard to another member imputing unavowed motives.

I have looked at the matter and, since you raise it again today, I do not think there is any relationship to what went on yesterday afternoon or what was said this morning with regard to imputing unavowed motives. I think that members of the House are far too sensitive when somebody gets up and says, "I think such and such a member holds a particular point of view." If in the mind of someone else that is not a correct position, or it is not a correct assumption, it is quite proper for that member to get up and deny that.

The member for Carleton East has an opportunity to do that. I do not think it is really any big deal. We have differences of opinion here every day. For the honourable member to suggest that every time there is a difference of opinion there is a violation of the standing orders, I think borders on the ridiculous.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY (continued)

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the Premier, in connection with the Rolphton matter: I wonder if the Premier would undertake to advise those caucus members who sit on the Hydro select committee to support an immediate examination by the select committee of the Rolphton situation while Rolphton is still shut down, as we had previously requested but which had been rejected in the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I always am prepared to discuss certain issues with members of our caucus. But, unlike the Liberal Party of Ontario, I do not direct our members, who are there to act in the interests of the people they represent, to take dictates from me. I know the member's leader wanders in on occasion and whips his people into line to satisfy a particular position. But we are independent thinkers on this side of the House. We are prepared to make some of our own judgements. I cannot say to the honourable member that I can impose my will on the members on that particular committee. He may run his store that way; we do not. So I cannot give that undertaking.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker—on a matter of personal privilege—when the Leader of the Opposition reflects this weekend, and I am sure he reflects every weekend, on the suggestion that we sneaked something by, I would say to him to please take the bill home and look at page whatever it is; I guess it is opposite page four—

Mr. S. Smith: Just a moment. What is this on?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a matter of personal privilege. The Leader of the Opposition said we sneaked something by. Let him read it. It was there; it was printed. Reread it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, we all know that the Premier of this province is the most sensitive person alive—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Without doubt. That's what my wife tells me.

Ms. Gigantes: —so I would like to ask him whether it does not ruffle his sensitivity just a little when the director of nuclear generation for Ontario Hydro says he cannot estimate the amount of radioactivity that is being emitted by the heavy-water leaks at the Rolphton plant?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member is asking me whether I agree with her that I am the most sensitive person around, the answer to that is yes.

Ms. Gigantes: I did not ask that.

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower, arising out of yet another attempt by a multinational corporation to find skilled workers abroad rather than get them here in this province.

Can the minister explain why Rio Algom has applied to Canada Manpower to import, from Britain, 130 skilled tradesmen such as mechanics, electricians and millwrights, for its operations up in Elliot Lake? Can he explain why there were no requirements for the training of skilled workers here in Ontario, since the province is advancing, through Ontario Hydro, a sum approaching $300 million for the uranium contracts which it has undertaken with Rio Algom and Denison Mines in Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, first of all, with regard to the reference by the leader of the third party to the Ministry of Labour and Manpower, I would advise him that we are well along with internal discussions regarding that projected mandate. I would expect there will be an announcement some time within the next few weeks about the exact delineation of the nature of the transfer of power.

In the meantime, as he well knows, I would like to refer those two specific questions to the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson).

Mr. Cassidy: I redirect the question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the leader of the third party that obviously in the course of a year, as I made quite clear a couple of weeks ago to the House, there are several hundred firms which approach us to use our selective placement service. Offhand, I would not know whether or not that particular firm has used our selective placement service. They may have gone directly. I obviously could not tell him that this morning.

If in fact they have used the selective placement service, I can assure the member that in each and every case the process I outlined to the House a couple of weeks ago is followed. I will be pleased to find that out for the member and report to the House on Monday.

Mr. Cassidy: I redirect the question to the Minister of Education as well, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You can't do that.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Minister of Industry and Tourism explain why it is that Denison Mines, which has got the other major share of this multibillion-dollar contract being paid for by the taxpayers of Ontario through Hydro has, in just two years, trained more than 100 mechanics after the union involved resisted the company's efforts to go abroad to Britain to bring those workers in from abroad? Why can't this be done as well in the case of Rio Algom, rather than having Rio Algom bring 130 workers in from another country, when they should and could be trained among workers here in this province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm not prepared to answer a question based on certain premises that the member wants to advance this morning, not knowing myself whether the information he is offering us is true. I would prefer to get the facts of the situation and I'll deal with all of those things on Monday. I know the member would want me to have that information so we can have an intelligent dialogue on the problem, and I'll do that.

Mr. Wildman: Can the minister indicate, in a general sense at least, that he is committed to the proposition that young people graduating from high school in North Shore and in Elliot Lake should be able to gain jobs in their own area rather than leave and go elsewhere?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not only committed to that personally but through the efforts of my colleagues, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Education and, certainly, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), plus other representatives such as my seatmate, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle)—

Mr. Lupusella: He doesn't know anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—have affirmatively indicated in an aggressive way, not only our commitment to that, but that our commitment is no less equal and, perhaps, surpasses the commitment that the member can so easily talk about from the third party on that side. We have some track records to prove it. Our commitment is there, and the member can't presuppose from the circumstances surrounding one company of which I don't even have the details that our commitment isn't—

Mr. Warner: You are doing nothing.

Mr. M. Davidson: The minister of wild rice contracts.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —every bit as strong as his. It is.

Mr. Cassidy: When the minister reports back to this House, would he care to explain why it is that Rio Algom has made no effort to expand its 25 trainee positions in Elliot Lake in the 15 months since Ontario signed a multibillion-dollar contract for uranium with that particular company? Why is Rio Algom only training 25 workers when it's going abroad for five times that number under the application to Canada Manpower?

Mr. Wildman: Why can't we do the same for Denison mines?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I will deal with the selective placement portion of that question to the extent that I can, although one of my colleagues might have more appropriately answered that question. I can assure the member that I will have that information next week.

FIBREGLASS STUDIES

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the potentially harmful effects in both the manufacturing and the handling of fibreglass as has been found in Japan indicating those who had been exposed to fibreglass dust now suffer from a lung disease called pneumoconiosis? Will the minister implement a monitoring project so that he could find out, in the early stages, if there is that harmful effect in both the manufacturing and the handling of fibreglass?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'm well aware of the fact that a variety of studies over the years have indicated that fibreglass was a relatively inert substance that was not known to create any pathology. As the member quite properly points out, there are a few reports that have come out of Japan recently that have a contrary point of view.

During consideration of my estimates, one of the members raised the suggestion that Dr. Selikoff of New York had, indeed, published some material. We contacted him directly some weeks ago and he indicated that although he was in the midst of some studies, he had not submitted any reports yet or drawn any conclusions. But, all of that having been said, I don't think we can ignore the fact that there may be reports somewhere indicating that there may be some harmful effects from fibreglass. I instructed staff some weeks ago to arrange for a meeting with labour and management representatives to discuss the very problem the member has raised and then proceed with further investigation of those studies.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if, in the light of this new thought that has been expressed by the member for Windsor-Walkerville, are all precautions being taken in the work place in the Fiberglas Canada Limited plant in Sarnia, the largest manufacturer of fibreglass insulation, to make sure this is being monitored? Would the Minister of Labour further undertake to have the Workmen's Compensation Board keep abreast of this situation in case certain cases come up in the future that are based on this new concept in the work place?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, I want to make it very clear that there have been many well-respected authorities who, as recently as two years ago, have indicated quite clearly that fibreglass is still considered by them to be an inert, harmless substance. What I said to the member for Windsor-Walkerville, and I will repeat it again, is that any information to the contrary has to be followed up.

I hope the member is not implying that we now have massive information that it isn't inert, because that isn't so. There are some suggestions from new studies. We can't ignore those and we have to proceed to review any new device that comes up.

Certainly I will involve the board and keep it informed. We will proceed to discuss the problems with a variety of companies, including Fiberglas Canada, and with labour representatives to make certain there is no validity—or, indeed, that there is validity—to the suggestions that have come out of the Japanese studies.

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Mr. di Santo: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism about the critical situation in the electrical industry in Hamilton. In view of the fact that Mr. C. F. MacNeil, the plant manager of Westinghouse Canada Limited, where 700 jobs are about to be lost, was quoted in the Hamilton Spectator as saying: "Looking at the Canadian switchgear and control market through American eyes, they couldn't see why it couldn't be supplied from Buffalo and Pittsburgh"; and in view of the fact that since we last asked the minister questions about employment in the electrical industry in Hamilton the situation has become worse with electrical jobs in that city falling below the 1974 level of 2,600 and 700 lower than last year, doesn't the minister think it is just possible that Mr. MacNeil's prediction will come true?

Doesn't he think that with the lowering of the tariffs as a result of the GATT negotiations more jobs may be lost? What does he intend to do, since his ad hoc grants to industries won't solve the problem?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think if the member will recall our discussion on this earlier he will note that at that time we were reflecting on the need for certain changes in the electrical industry. One of the changes most firms are having to go to in order to compete is specialization in certain products and rationalization of their operations throughout North America. The changing GATT situation is a fact of life.

What Westinghouse is doing now is what most firms in the electronics industry are doing, and that is looking at the different products made in different plants and tending to treat the entire North American market, if not the world market, as the market for each particular product. They look at their whole family of plants and decide which products should now be made in which plants. That is a strategy that more and more firms, regardless of their field, are going to have to adopt with the new tariff competition.

Mr. di Santo: That's the strategy of the multinationals. What's your strategy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't know what Westinghouse in Hamilton is ultimately going to decide. I wouldn't be surprised if some of the consequences the member has talked about do occur. That is why we are anxious to get Westinghouse to agree there would be no layoffs, but that any reduction in employment would be through attrition.

None the less, I do want to emphasize this point: It is likely that if Westinghouse concludes the product specialization it might have to move to require some decentralization, firstly, employees there will be given the first opportunity to move into whatever decentralized operations are developed—

Mr. di Santo: What if they move to the States?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me finish. Secondly, I am quite confident that a fair number of plants into which they may decide to decentralize their operations will be plants in this province. We will work hard to ensure that occurs if, in fact, that is the business decision they make. It's relevant to remind ourselves that one of the reasons firms go through these exercises, when tariff changes occur or at certain points in time—

Ms. Gigantes: This doesn't make sense. You don't make sense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —is in order to remain competitive, so that instead of folding up entirely and going home to the United States they find a different way to run their operations in the province, which keeps that employment in this province.

Mr. di Santo: Or they go to a non-union shop.

Mr. Wildman: They're just going to avoid the union.

Mr. S. Smith: How can the minister accept both theories which Westinghouse floats from time to time, when the two are in contradiction? Does he not realize in fact, they suggest on the one hand they might have to pack up and rationalize the operation into one big central switchgear plant in the United States, and on the other hand, they speak about a whole lot of small decentralized plants all over Canada replacing the present profitable operation in Hamilton?

Does the minister not understand what they are really saying is they want to close the switchgear plant in Hamilton and either ship it back to the States or decentralize to small non-union plants all over the rest of Canada? Why is he sitting back and letting them advance that particular proposal in this day and age when surely unionism must be accepted as a fact of life?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think it is relevant to point out that one of the problems with the electronics industry over the past many years has been a failure to anticipate some of the changes that occur down the way. That particular operation must be looked at by Westinghouse in terms of a profit centre. In those terms we understand from the firm it isn't as profitable as it once was.

Mr. S. Smith: It is still very good.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, it isn't as profitable as it once was. I think it is important that firms carrying on business in this province understand they don't have to wait until a particular operation becomes totally unfeasible and totally unworkable to assess the alternatives. The member opposite would be properly critical of government for failing to anticipate its own concerns in that way.

If he wants to resolve the issue down to whether or not they are escaping the union, then let me tell him we have discussed that matter with them and from everything we can see and everything they have indicated to us at this time, that does not appear to be one of their strategies. The member may be able to prove otherwise and if he does, both the Minister of Labour and I would be anxious to receive that information.

I should point out the Premier, the Minister of Labour and I have now received extensive delegations from both the union and the company in an attempt to trace down that particular matter and others.

Obviously, one of the points Westinghouse is well aware of—they are not naive, they are very familiar with the situation—is that even if the strategy the member is suggesting was their strategy, the experience of every firm anywhere in North America is that if they do decentralize to get away from the unions, the unions follow. They are not going to be one or two years behind the game. There aren't very many places they could go in Ontario which would work for Westinghouse where the union won't arrive. That isn't advice I am giving them; that's information of which they are well aware. With respect, I want to say categorically, we put that question to Westinghouse, and we have seen no indication from them in writing or orally that would indicate that is part of their corporate strategy in making that move.

I think it is important for the Leader of the Opposition to attempt to approach this issue, certainly in his own constituency, on the two grounds. The first is they are trying to escape the union. If they are, I would like to receive information.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister is beginning to repeat himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I should say the entire series of questions on Westinghouse was debated extensively in this House a couple of months ago. The opposition has raised them again and I think it is fair to put on the record that the two concerns are escaping the union and, secondly, they have the freedom to remain competitive by assessing their operations from time to time. I think they have to address that in a sensible fashion.

Mr. Mackenzie: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not feel there is a possibility he may have been conned? Does he know the first 60 employees in the meter division of that switchgear department who have been told they are finished at the end of the year have already been denied the right to transfer to the replacement plant in Alliston and company personnel have clearly indicated they don't intend to give them that right?

When will this human waste end? When are we going to start considering those 700 employees and the 60 who have already been told they are finished and have been denied the right to transfer? Is that not verification of the attempt to get out from under the contract? When is the tail going to stop wagging the dog in a situation like this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would wonder, in view of that recent situation, whether those 60 employees have not been given the opportunity, instead of moving to Alliston, to be relocated in other parts of the Hamilton operation. I believe that is the case, isn't it?

Mr. Mackenzie: The rest of them are going also. They have been denied the right, where they have asked for it, to go to Alliston.

[10:45]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We've now clarified the impression the honourable member intended to leave that the 60 employees were being cut loose.

Mr. Mackenzie: The rest of them are going at the end of the year.

Mr. S. Smith: Why can't they go down to Alliston?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, instead of being either cut loose or forced to go to Alliston, the company is making efforts to relocate them within Hamilton, which I suspect, if we ask the 60 employees, they would prefer to do. All their rights are being protected as employees of the company and they are being left in the community in which they are working. I bet they would prefer to do that than be forced to go to Alliston.

Mr. Mackenzie: Within a matter of months, 700 more are going. Where are they going to transfer to?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Clearly, we understand those 60 are not being cut loose. The member should get the facts straight or not try and leave a wrong impression in this House.

Mr. Mackenzie: You are being conned.

Mr. Foulds: You wouldn't know a fact if you stumbled against it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The honourable the Minister of Labour has the answer to a question previously asked.

Mr. Renwick: He believes what the corporations tell him. That's all he does and he calls it fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order: The Minister of Labour has the floor.

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, recently the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway)

asked several questions regarding the qualifications of Ministry of Labour X-ray equipment inspectors and the types of tests they conduct.

The ministry currently employs two radiation physicists and six technicians within the radiation protection branch. The physicists hold advanced degrees and are directly involved in the X-ray inspection program. The six technicians have community college level training, supplemented by specific on-the-job training in carrying out routine equipment inspections.

The radiation protection branch inspects X-ray machinery used by veterinarians, educational institutions where medical and dental practitioners and their assistants are trained, industrial and research establishments. The inspections are aimed at ensuring the health and safety of the equipment operators and other workers.

In these inspections, the adequacy of X-ray shielding is checked and examinations for radiation leaks are made. Techniques and work practices are studied to minimize dosages received by workers. Dosimeter badges and other appropriate devices required for personnel dose monitoring are checked. Electronic interlocks and other safety switches and devices on the equipment are tested for accuracy and should overexposures occur, these incidents are investigated and directions are issued to prevent reoccurrences.

CHOICE OF PHYSICIAN

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) also asked me a question on May 18 regarding section 21(1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Recently that member asked a question regarding section 21(1) and the power of an employer to order an employee to attend a medical examination conducted by a doctor chosen by the worker's employer. I would like to advise him that although section 21(1) exists in the act, there have never been any regulations enacted regarding the application of this section.

Currently, should an employer believe that circumstances exist such that a medical examination might be warranted, the employer may request that the board arrange for the employee to be examined and his claim reviewed under section 24 of the act. The board will then arrange for an examination either by one of its own doctors or through referral to an appropriate outside specialist. I might also add that the employee may also request this review himself under section 24.

I can state quite categorically that under the provisions of the act the employer has no right to insist that an employee present himself for examination regarding compensation by a legally qualified practitioner provided and paid for by the employer. Thus it would follow that an employee's refusal to submit himself for a medical examination by a doctor chosen by his employer and at the wishes of the employer, for a workmen's compensation matter, would not constitute grounds for repercussions against the employee.

CHARGES AGAINST WOMEN

Mrs. Campbell: My question, Mr. Speaker, was originally to the Solicitor General, who I believe is lurking in the wings.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Attorney General awaits without.

Mrs. Campbell: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this: Has the Solicitor General undertaken any investigation into those cases where the police have laid charges against women as a result of charges which they sought to lay, or did lay, in assaults? Can he tell this House what the circumstances are under which the police are laying these charges, since there is an element of intimidation to women in this province as a result of this course of action?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Although I don't have precise figures, I am advised that such charges are relatively rare and are only laid when the police have reasonable and probable grounds to believe the allegation of assault, usually a sexual form of assault, is a false charge.

This is a matter I have reviewed with senior members of both the Ministry of the Attorney General and the Ministry of the Solicitor General. I am assured these charges are laid only where the police have strong evidence. When I talk about reasonable and probable grounds that the allegations are false, what I am really talking about is strong evidence, evidence on which they believe they can secure a conviction, which of course must be based on proof beyond reasonable doubt. As I have already indicated, it is relatively rare for these charges to be laid. Occasionally it is necessary, in order to protect the rights of innocent people who may be innocent victims to false serious allegations.

Having said that, I would want to assure the member for St. George and all members of the Legislature that I personally would be very much opposed to any police conduct that would have even the perception of intimidating any individual from bringing forward allegations that should be brought forward and pressing charges that should be pressed.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: I appreciate the Solicitor General's remarks but would he not feel there should be some public statement in this matter so that women do not feel they are first going to have to prove their case to the police before it gets to the courts? Many women are concerned about this new procedure. And it is new. In view of the fact that, as far as women are concerned, in cases of assault there has been a history of great difficulty in getting the cases to the courts, would he not believe it would be timely to make a public statement to reassure women in this province?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would hope the dialogue in which the member for St. George and I are now engaged would at least be a form of public statement and form of reassurance to any people, women or otherwise, who may be concerned about this issue.

I am not sure I can agree with the member for St. George when she states that this is a new development. It has been in the news recently, I appreciate that, and the member for St. George refers to two occasions. Considering the size and population of this province, the fact that two charges have been laid for public mischief or otherwise in relation to what the police believe to be false allegations, does not in my view, with the greatest respect to the member for St. George, represent any trend or new policy in this direction.

I reiterate that individuals, male or female, must be protected from the consequences of individuals making false allegations that lead to criminal charges. I know the member for St. George would agree totally with that. When we talk about the number of charges that are laid in sexually-related assaults, the fact that two individuals have been charged in the circumstances that have been mentioned really represents an infinitesimal fraction of the complaints that are made from week to week.

I just want to reiterate as forcefully as I can that the police regard the problem of assaults and violent attacks of any nature, particularly if they are sexual attacks, as matters that must be given the highest priority so far as law enforcement is concerned. Certainly it is our attention in the Ministry of the Attorney General to prosecute vigorously all cases in which there is evidence to lay a charge. Actually, the rate of conviction in the last several years, since the amendments to the Criminal Code, has increased somewhat significantly.

But as the member for St. George is very concerned about this, and properly so—we have discussed it outside the House, as well—I wanted to make it clear that the attitude of the police in this province is to encourage any citizen to bring to them proper, well-founded allegations of criminal activity, whether it is criminal assault, or any other criminal offence.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the acting government House leader. Since, despite all the posturing by the Leader of the Opposition and the Liberal House leader yesterday, the Liberals last night demonstrated, if not their incompetence, their indifference to the investigation of the Babcock and Wilcox boiler controversy last night by failing to muster enough voting members at the resources development committee to combine with the NDP—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Wildman: —to force the scheduling of the committee and the consideration of the Hydro annual report referral, can the acting government House leader assure us that the government will agree to a committee recommendation if it is made to the assembly, to refer the matter immediately to the public accounts committee?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course the circumstances surrounding any request would have to be considered by the government in the ordinary course of affairs. There is a procedure set up for this, Lord knows—as we went into yesterday—and at such time as the committee may make that recommendation there is the House leaders' forum set up to negotiate those things and try and work out scheduling.

I might add, when we are approaching the summer season particularly it is very difficult for one committee to arbitrarily recommend that another committee be seized of a matter without having consulted with that committee. That is why the Speaker's panel and the House leaders' forums have been set up. If that recommendation comes, I can assure the member the government House leader will be happy to take it up with all the appropriate forums and do so expeditiously, so the committee can know what course of action is open to it during—I suppose just after returning from Dryden next week.

Mr. Foulds: What authority did the government House leader leave you with this week?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just to try and keep you folks well-ordered and under control, which indeed is a difficult task.

JOB INFORMATION FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Van Horne: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Given the promise in this year's throne speech of a new emphasis on providing guidance information on job markets and training opportunities in the industrial sector, and given last year's throne speech promise of a specially-designed program to satisfy the manpower needs of industry, can the minister tell us if his ministry is now providing job opportunity information for the Ministry of Education student guidance service?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, with regard to the second-to-last matter the member raised, as he well knows the employer-sponsored training program was the program that was referred to in the previous speech from the throne. That is well under way, maybe not to the satisfaction of that member but it is expanding all the time. The number of community industrial councils now number 30 and the number of trainees enrolling is increasing.

With regard to the labour market information service, it was established, I believe, last summer or in September. It has started to try to gather that sort of information. It is a very difficult task and it is one of the matters we have been dealing with at the ad hoc advisory committee level that was established very recently.

We have had some good recommendations from that committee. We are vigorously pursuing one suggestion they have made with regard to a method of gathering such data about the needs out there so we can match the skilled training to those needs. I expect efforts will be made to gather that information, which will be much more accurate than what we have been able to gather to date because of the changing data base that has been offered to us by Statistics Canada. I think it will give us some of the information we have been unable to gather accurately up to the present time.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I appreciate the initial response in so far as the manpower needs of industry go, but the question is: is that information being relayed to the guidance people in the province of Ontario? Secondly, given the at least six months to one year lead time to program any of this information the minister is now just looking for, is he not really telling us that the student guidance information service for the students in Ontario will not be apprised of the job market and training opportunities until at least the school year 1981-82, two years behind time?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I am advised by my colleague, the Minister of Education, that the information we have been able to gather—and again I must say I am not entirely satisfied that the material available to us from Statistics Canada, which changes and is withdrawn periodically, is adequate—will be made available to the school system in September. I again emphasize that I have much greater hopes for the new thrust the advisory committee has recommended with regard to more accurate and informed information about the Ontario scene. I trust that sort of information, if we are able to proceed as planned, will be available in late fall.

SUCARYL MARKETING

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is the minister aware that Abbott Laboratories Limited is conducting a promotional campaign for Sucaryl, which is sodium cyclamate powder, a low-calorie sweetener recognized as a carcinogen, banned for human consumption in the United States and banned as a food additive in Canada?

Is the minister also aware that as part of that promotional campaign free samples of the stuff are being handed out in supermarkets to everybody who passes by, and free cups of coffee containing this cancer-causing compound are being handed out to customers in supermarkets? Whether or not the minister is aware, is he prepared to undertake that his ministry will take immediate action to ensure that promotional campaigns of carcinogens of this kind are stopped?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of it, but I will take immediate action. In about 30 seconds I will call the responsible part of the federal government in Ottawa which has jurisdiction over it, something the honourable member could have done yesterday if he was so alarmed about it.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Renwick, in the absence of Mr. Philip, presented the following report from the standing administration of justice committee and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Delila Construction Limited.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr1, An Act respecting the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake;

Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Borough of East York.

Report adopted.

MOTION

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to sit the evening of Wednesday, June 6, and concurrently with the House on Thursday, June 7, and Friday, June 8.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make some comments on the consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

It is now just under 10 months since this ministry was created to co-ordinate and consolidate relationships between the province of Ontario and other governments. It is a broad mandate with two major aspects: on the one hand, the province's relationship with the federal and other provincial governments, as well as important contacts with governments outside Canada; and, on the other hand, the province's relationship with local government in Ontario.

Our brief existence has been a busy and, I believe, fruitful period. I would like to use this opportunity to provide members with a progress report on some of the major activities and issues which have occupied much of our time and interest to date and which will doubtless continue to be in the forefront of our work into the immediate future.

Before getting into the detail, however, I should, first of all, provide an overall financial context by which the fulfilment of our mandate may be fully assessed. In presenting the spending estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs for the fiscal year 1979-80, I am asking the Legislature to approve an expenditure of $549 million. This represents an increase of $29 million or about 5.5 per cent over our total estimates for the 1978-79 fiscal year.

In very general terms, the $549 million total budget is allocated under four major expenditure categories. By far the largest is for transfer payments to municipalities, including both unconditional and special grants, which amount to $511 million or 93.1 per cent of our total budget.

The second largest category is the Ontario Youth Employment Program, which shows as a $26 million expense item or 4.7 per cent of the budget. Third, $8.9 million or 1.6 per cent is for operational and administrative expenses. Fourth, the remaining $3.1 million or 0.6 per cent is for a variety of special programs, including disaster relief, shoreline property assistance, property tax credits for senior citizens and so on.

As we move through the 15 hours of debate which have been set aside for consideration of these estimates, I look forward to discussing many of the individual items which make up the $549-million total budget. In recapping the initial nine-and-a-half months of my ministry's existence, I would like to begin by saying that the birth pains have been minimal and that, by and large, I have been very pleased with the progress that has been achieved, both administratively and operationally, to ensure that the ministry is on a sound footing which will enable it to properly fulfil its mandate from year to year. Much of this, I believe, is a direct credit to the senior management team in the ministry.

My new parliamentary assistant, the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg), is devoting much of his time and attention to municipal-provincial issues. His background as a senior alderman in the city of Toronto, plus his involvement on Metro council and with several municipal organizations, is already proving to be valuable to this ministry.

Mr. Foulds: You should have kept those contacts yourself. Those are the best Tory contacts if you want to run for the leadership.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I want to say that my previous parliamentary assistant, the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), carried out his responsibilities in an excellent fashion while he was with this ministry. He has now taken on a new assignment as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy.

The other members of our senior group are my deputy minister, Don Stevenson, and under him the executive director of the local government division, Eric Fleming; the executive director of intergovernmental affairs division, Ed Greathed; and the executive co-ordinator of the planning and co-ordination groups, Sam Clasky.

Without going into administrative detail, I believe that there are three organizational aspects of the ministry which I should mention because each of them impacts significantly upon our role and performance.

The first is the fact that we have now reached the point where we will soon be relocating all of the central offices of the ministry into one location, namely, on four floors of the Mowat Block. I know this will give us more cohesion and co-ordination in our day-to-day operations.

The second organizational aspect which I wanted to mention briefly is in relation to the municipal finance branch and the inter-governmental affairs and grants policy branch, both of which, as members will recall, remain in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. The decision to leave these two branches in Treasury and Economics was a crucial one. It was clearly recognized that the functions they perform are in many ways integral to the operation of both ministries and that there would indeed be a need for co-ordination between the two ministries in these areas wherever they were located.

Clearly, the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs has a very important advocacy role on behalf of local government in this province. In order to fulfill this responsibility properly in the long term there may be a need to establish within this ministry a sound base of financial data and expertise which would permit us to assess needs and projections in a manner more closely related to our own perceptions and experience with local governments.

The third organizational point which is relevant to our discussions here is the recent decision to transfer the government's protocol services operation to the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, again in order to increase co-ordination in the area of representation of other governments. The protocol was previously under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Government Services and the transfer became effective in early May.

As members are aware, the protocol office is largely responsible for arrangements and special functions when representatives of other countries visit Ontario, as well as events involving visitors from other provinces. It also organizes major public events such as the July 1 festivities, as well as special ceremonies, hospitality functions and other protocol procedures involving intergovernmental relationships, including day-to-day relations between the province and the consular corps here in the city of Toronto.

The transfer to Intergovernmental Affairs involved no staff or budget changes. It was done solely to reflect this ministry's role in integrating and co-ordinating Ontario's relationship with other governments.

I am pleased that Walter Borosa is continuing to head up this function, with a new title, chief of protocol. We all know that Walter's fine eye for detail and the grace and thoughtfulness with which he has traditionally fulfilled his responsibilities have been major strengths, and I am glad—I know all of us in this House are glad—that the province will continue to benefit from these as he continues this operation in this ministry.

For the next few minutes I thought it might be useful to report on several of the key activities related to the municipal side of our mandate. Beginning last August, when the ministry was established and I became minister, I emphasized the fact that our style and our modus operandi was going to be open, co-operative and responsive.

This is a theme we have constantly repeated, because I consider it essential that the provincial government and local governments fulfil their natural partnership role in harmony, in the interests of the citizens and taxpayers whom we all serve. This is why over the past months I have worked hard to establish closer personal contact with as many municipalities as possible, and at the same time to encourage the various municipal organizations to play an even greater "contributor" role in the overall decision-making process here at Queen's Park.

Our basic posture within the ministry, when making decisions affecting municipalities, is to do so only after discussion and consultation with representatives of those who may be affected.

To me, this kind of approach represents much more than common courtesy, although that is important in itself. Throughout this province there is a great deal of municipal expertise and commonsense advice available to us from those involved with local government, and it would be plainly shortsighted for a ministry such as this one not to capitalize on this as part of the decision-making process.

I believe we are doing so to an even greater extent and on a much wider range of issues, large and small. The primary formal vehicle for this kind of consultation and input continues to be the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee. At our regular meetings throughout last fall, the winter and this spring I think it has been clear to all parties involved that there is an inherent benefit to this kind of sounding-board mechanism.

The PMLC is a forum where proposals can be discussed openly and where the ideas and concerns of both municipal and provincial representatives can be given a good public airing. It's working well and it will continue as a basic component of our operations.

There is another kind of important consultative co-operation, of course, which is usually much less formal. I'm referring to our frequent and fruitful contacts with individual municipal organizations and, of course, with representatives of individual municipalities themselves. Personal contact and rapport with one's own constituents, as members of this House well know and, in this case, our local government constituency, is irreplaceable and valuable beyond tangible measure.

In this connection, I especially want to say how impressed I have been with the alert and responsive attitudes that are characteristic of the staff of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs who are involved with the municipal sphere of our mandate. I personally would like to say how very fortunate I feel we are to have a group of men and women who have shown me, on countless occasions, that their scope of knowledge and concern goes far beyond the walls of Queen's Park and out across this province to the real life concerns and needs of people at the local level.

It is a professional approach geared to an understanding and recognition of our province-wide overview, but it is a professionalism which, as I have seen time and time again, includes a grassroots feel for the realities and needs faced by our municipal partners. I would not want it any other way and I think that all members will join me in saluting the efforts of all these individual men and women who work on behalf of our citizens in this way.

Naturally, in any kind of consultative approach, there cannot be consensus and agreement on every issue. But, if I can assess the situation around this province with some objectivity, I would say that our basic message has come through—that we mean it when we say that both the provincial government and the local governments are involved in a co-operative venture, and that we, this ministry and this government, want full local input on all matters which are felt to be important.

There is one particular aspect of this co-operative theme that I specifically want to mention. Not to belabour it, because I have said it publicly many times before, but I do especially want to pay tribute here to the very mature and responsible attitude of municipal representatives regarding the monetary constraints that today confront all governments.

All governments, federal, provincial and local, tend to pass blame for financial pressures on to others. But I think there is a new and real awareness on the part of our elected people that we have a shared responsibility towards the present challenge to reduce the proportion of our gross provincial product being spent by government. To me, this has shown up in our dealings with municipalities over the past months. There is a general recognition that the call upon taxpayers is not endless, that we all share the restraint challenge, that we all must do the best we can with the funds available, and that there is little sense in getting into a protracted harangue over money when all governments are trying to curtail spending from the public purse.

As members know, in March I announced a series of ad hoc grants for 49 municipalities, totalling about $6.6 million. The purpose of these grants was to help offset some of the more substantial inequities that had developed in the grant system since the equalization factors were frozen in 1970. At the present time, the Ministry of Revenue is developing new equalization factors which will be used in the development of revised grant and apportionment formulae in 1980. As these new factors become available, we will be analysing their impact to make sure that the transition can be achieved as smoothly as possible and without radical distortions in municipal mill rates.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I do want to repeat a strong government commitment with regard to the new equalization factors, and it is that no municipality or school board will receive a lesser grant in 1980 than the amount received in 1979 because of the introduction of the new factors.

About six weeks ago, I tabled in the Legislature a booklet entitled 1979 Ontario Assistance to Local Governments, which contained a general overview of 1979-80 provincial transfers, as well as details of the 1979 unconditional grants program. Overall, transfer payments to municipalities and agencies in the fiscal year 1979-80, excluding payments into teachers' superannuation and the home-care program, are expected to total $3,872,000,000. This figure represents a 5.4 per cent increase over the 1978-79 figures.

This year's approach, of course, represents a departure from what we have come to call the Edmonton commitment, and it gives rise to concerns expressed by representatives of local government throughout the province.

Mr. Haggerty: I thought that was buried.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is buried. As I said, it represents a departure, and the Edmonton commitment is buried, but there have been concerns from representatives of local government throughout the province.

Initially, we had announced that the aggregate transfers would probably be increased by about five per cent, the amount by which the program expenditures of all government ministries were expected to increase. Now, of course, the final percentage increase in transfers to municipalities is expected to be somewhat higher than five per cent, as I have just indicated.

I believe the essential point here is to remember that we have said all along that this is strictly an interim approach to a long-term and very complex problem. There is no doubt that changing circumstances and economic conditions in the last few years make this an appropriate time to take a long, hard look at the whole system of transfer payments to municipalities.

This is why one of my early actions in this ministry was to initiate discussions with representatives of the Municipal Liaison Committee. The result was the establishment of a special committee, called the long-term fiscal arrangements committee, to look at the options available in the years ahead.

The committee has already done a good deal of fruitful work. My hope is that by the end of the summer we will have broad agreement on a formula that will be satisfactory to everyone concerned: the provincial government, the municipalities and school boards. It will not be easy, of course.

On the one hand, a clearly understood formula by which transfer payments are calculated would help ease the minds of municipalities and school boards and perhaps allow them to plan ahead with more confidence as to the revenues that would be forthcoming.

On the other hand, from the province's standpoint, we have to guard against a situation where we could be without the flexibility required to adequately manage our fiscal and economic policies.

I am fully optimistic that there is middle ground to be found on this issue and that, if we all persist and work together co-operatively, our mutual objectives can be achieved.

Related to this, of course, is the whole area of unconditional grants versus conditional grants. I certainly understand the concerns expressed by local governments on this issue. Personally, I do believe there is some scope for increasing the proportion of transfer payments that are made unconditionally. As a starting point, we have the report of the committee on grants reform, which was chaired by my deputy minister, Don Stevenson.

I realize that many of the recommendations in that report are controversial, both at the municipal level and within this government itself. Yet it seems to me that a good number of the recommendations could be implemented or modified to meet some of the concerns that have been raised. Let me say quite candidly, though, I do not expect to see a major deconditionalizing of grants over the next few years. But as we continue our discussions I will personally be looking for ways by which there can be an increased emphasis on unconditional transfers and, at the same time, a major simplification of the present conditional grant system.

In any event, we will be considering these and other related matters in the months ahead, and giving them the high priority they deserve.

This has been the first year in which section 86 of the Assessment Act has been used to rectify some of the inequities in the tax base between different properties in the same class. Quite obviously, the effect of applying section 86 has meant tax decreases for many taxpayers and tax increases for others as a result of the new assessments which have been placed on their properties.

The government has been monitoring the impact of this program very closely and has considered whether special assistance should be provided to municipalities using section 86, to help them soften any substantial and immediate tax increases arising out of the reassessment.

We decided against providing more provincial funds for this purpose. But we have, as members know, introduced an amendment to section 505 of the Municipal Act to give municipalities wider latitude to phase in, on their own, any such tax increases without special assistance from the province.

As I said earlier, I have been greatly impressed and encouraged by the extent to which municipalities have been able to exercise constraint in a reasonable manner. What is even more encouraging is the great interest of the municipal sector to find innovative ways to economize. Two examples come to mind, the region of Durham's experience in energy conservation and the study being concluded now by the Bureau of Municipal Research on innovative methods of cost savings in municipalities.

With regard to the latter, this ministry intends to co-operate with the bureau to make the published report available to every municipality in Ontario. Also, we will probably be co-sponsoring with the bureau a series of seminars based on the report on this very important topic.

Last fall, during the discussions of this ministry's first estimates, we discussed at some length some of the problems related to annexations. There are few subjects which pose as many challenges to the province and to local government as does the definition of boundaries around many cities, towns and villages. The process of adjusting municipal boundaries through an application to the Ontario Municipal Board has, of course, been roundly criticized for the last several years.

I think there is general agreement throughout this province that there is much to be gained if some alternative mechanism could be found to solving the vast majority of annexation disputes, an alternative to the rigid judicial approach via the OMB, which so often becomes frustrating, protracted and very expensive.

Last October, when I addressed the conference of the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario, I urged the delegates to take the initiative in attempting to come up with a workable alternative process. It is a great credit to municipal leaders in this province, and particularly the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario and the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, that they have, since last fall, moved a long way towards developing such a proposal.

April 27 of this year was a landmark date for local government in Ontario. On that day ACRO and ROMA held a joint seminar on urban-rural relations to which representatives of urban municipalities were also invited. Both urban and rural proposals were discussed in an open and co-operative manner. The effects of this seminar have already been widely felt.

It has become obvious that most municipal leaders, urban and rural alike, agree on the fundamental problems in the present annexation process and, more importantly, on the basic principles of a new procedure which might become an alternative to it.

I have therefore asked the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee to ask ROMA, ACRO and AMO to appoint people to sit down with representatives of this ministry to work out a new process. This exercise is now beginning. I am optimistic that by late summer we will have in place a set of proposals for dealing with the vast majority of annexation problems.

We expect that these proposals will emphasize the rational resolution of boundary dispute problems through negotiation and mediation between the municipal councils involved, and then involving the OMB only as a last resort. The ministry anticipates playing an active role in any resulting procedure, but that role will be restricted to use the provincial presence to assist in developing an agreement and will not involve unilateral action on our part.

The longstanding problem between the city of Brantford and Brant township could well be the first candidate for any new process that may be developed. I know that both parties in this case are deeply concerned about the prospects of a long and expensive dispute and they have indicated a willingness to participate in a new procedure which may be developed.

There is one further important topic related to the municipal side of this ministry's mandate which I would like to touch upon briefly, and it has to do with our new approach to the restructuring of municipalities in the province.

Members will recall that during the discussion of estimates last fall I indicated we had moved into a period in which there will be a new emphasis upon local initiatives in the evolution of municipal structure. Of course, this does not mean we are in any way abdicating our responsibility for ensuring strong and effective local government for all Ontario. Like all institutions local government must undergo periodic adjustment if it is to keep up with changing social and economic conditions.

Our starting premise is that we are beyond the point where the provincial government should come along with schemes from on high which involve large-scale municipal restructuring. Instead, we've been conveying the idea that the onus at this time should be upon local leaders to assess any perceived need for change, to discuss the problems involved among themselves and try to arrive at a consensus before coming to see us with their ideas for improvement. Evidence that this is a proper and workable approach is already I think available to us. The follow-up to the Waterloo local government review is an illustration of how I think constructive local initiative can lead to a healthier, more fruitful resolution of perceived structural and organizational problems.

The final report from the review commissioner, in that case Mr. William Palmer, a former deputy minister in this government and chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board, was made public in the Waterloo region in early April. It was, I think, generally well-received; it candidly addressed the practical concerns that people had about regional and government organization and efficiency in the Waterloo region.

But I think the noteworthy aspect of this review project was the local initiative—not only in undertaking the study in the first place, but also in the determination to follow up on it. Once the Palmer report was available the mayors of the seven municipalities within the region plus the regional chairman formed a committee immediately to consider the recommendations. This process is continuing now and I am firmly convinced that the consultative and co-operative approach that it represents will lead to changes for the better in the local government system in that area.

Many of the Palmer recommendations of course could be implemented by the local authorities acting completely on their own, if there is agreement there to do so. Others would require provincial action and we stand ready to consider any changes which the committee proposes, as long as they have been extensively considered locally and are widely supported.

I wanted to mention the Waterloo experience particularly because I believe it points the way for other municipalities as a means of achieving progress in the process of streamlining local government.

With this summary of our activities arising from the local government side of this ministry's mandate, I would now like for a few minutes to turn to some of the matters at the federal-provincial level which have occupied a good deal of our time and attention since last fall. Without question, our overriding concerns in this sphere have been related to constitutional reform. Since last November, there has been a great deal of activity in this area, on a Canada-wide basis, and the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs has played a lead role in Ontario's participation throughout.

During the debate of this ministry's estimates last November, a full account was given of constitutional developments to that date, including the results of the conference of first ministers which had taken place a week earlier on October 30 and November 1, 1978. At the conclusion of that meeting, the first ministers decided to meet again in February 1979 to continue discussions on selected issues relating to the constitution.

In the interim, a great deal of preparatory work was carried out by the Continuing Committee of Ministers on the Constitution which is composed mainly of federal and provincial Ministers of Intergovernmental Affairs, Ministers of Justice, and Attorneys General. Specifically, this committee met three times in preparation for the February first ministers' conference—first at Mont-St.-Marie, Quebec, in late November, then in Toronto in mid-December 1978, and finally in Vancouver in mid-January 1979. Each of these was a very full three-day session, and the combined efforts proved to be quite effective as a means of preparing for the first ministers' deliberations.

The continuing committee acted as a focus for the presentation of individual governments' positions on a list of 14 issues and as a means to narrow differences substantially. Because of its political composition, the committee was able to move things quickly and flexibly and its report to the first ministers greatly facilitated their discussions by concentrating chiefly on those matters which remained unresolved.

The discussions at the February conference of first ministers were well publicized at the time but I would like to comment briefly on a few aspects at this time. First, some progress was made with regard to the entrenchment of individual rights in the constitution. All governments with the exception of Manitoba agreed in principle that some rights should be entrenched in the constitution. The differences arose over which rights and how extensive should be the rights to be included in the constitution.

On the matter of language rights, substantial differences still exist with regard to their entrenchment in provincial areas of jurisdiction. Agreement was reached on two specific issues: family law and the monarchy. The first ministers also agreed not to consider, for the time being, the extension to the provinces of the power to tax indirectly, except in so far as it relates to natural resources.

Time did not permit sufficient discussion on two items: the declaratory power and delegation. However, preliminary work by the Continuing Committee of Ministers on the Constitution had shown that there would not be major difficulties in reaching agreement on these two subjects.

Discussions concerning natural resources were of particular concern to all provinces, and perhaps especially to the western provinces. A majority of provinces and the federal government agreed on the basic principles of provincial ownership of resources and the need for some limit on the federal government's power over trade and commerce to ensure that provincial control is not completely undercut. The important differences that remain focus on the degree to which federal authority should be limited.

In the end, some workable compromise will have to be achieved with regard to natural resources. We cannot afford to have in our federalism a system where either provincial resource control is rendered meaningless by federal actions or where the great priority of energy self-sufficiency can be stymied by the policies of one or more resource-blessed provinces.

On several items, including cable television, equalization and regional development, a high degree of consensus was reached as to the kind of changes to be made. It is my opinion that the differences that still exist between governments on these subjects are primarily of a technical nature, rather than matters of principle, and could well be resolved by further discussion.

On the remaining subjects, there are still some major differences to be resolved. These include the Supreme Court, the Upper House, fisheries, offshore resources, the spending power, patriation, the amending formula and communications, other than cable television. Some very intensive discussions will be required to achieve consensus on these items.

At the February conference, Premier Davis proposed that all governments agree to the immediate patriation of the British North America Act. We hoped that agreement on an amending formula could also be reached and included in the patriation process, but if it could not, we urged that Parliament proceed simply to patriate the constitution immediately in its present form.

Simple patriation, as we envisage it, would remove the last symbolic vestige of Canada's colonial status, would encompass the present custom and practice for making constitutional amendments and, most significantly, would clearly indicate to all Canadians the determination and commitment of their governments to the process of constitutional change.

As a first-hand observer and participant at the conference and the meetings which led to it, I do believe that these meetings, and the first ministers' conference particularly, must be regarded as a success. I say so because in a process such as this it is often the intangible elements such as the will of governments to resolve the issues and the degree of participation in the process by which success in the longer term can be measured.

In the past three months, since the February conference of first ministers, there has emerged in Canada, I believe, a new set of circumstances, a new environment, a new sense of reality and urgency, which may profoundly affect the nature and perhaps the substance of forthcoming constitutional discussions. One key element of course is the fact the Canadians have elected a new federal government which will see Joe Clark become Prime Minister this Monday and a fresh team of Canadians working with him. The second key element is the fact that the Quebec referendum is now in all likelihood just over the horizon.

Taken together, I believe these two events add up to an emerging scenario in which the events that unfold will impact very greatly upon the future shape and character of this country. It seems to me that from here on in any Canadians who have thus far looked upon constitutional discussions as somewhat of an abstract exercise would be well advised, if they have any feelings for holding Canada together, to recognize that we are now on the threshold of a significant and probably historic period in our history. There is nothing abstract about the dilemmas and challenges which now face us on the national stage.

Today, with the new federal government yet officially to take office, I do not want to speculate on the specifics of constitutional discussions which will hopefully resume soon, except to say that constitutional reform, the renewing of our Constitution, is of the utmost importance at this time in our history.

As our Advisory Committee on Confederation said in its first report entitled An Approach to a New Constitution, and I am quoting from the report: "There are no perfect solutions in a revised federal system, any more than in any other creation of man. However, we believe that we can secure changes which will give Canadians a sense of well-being, and a feeling that their constitution is tailored to the reality of Canada's future."

The Task Force on Canadian Unity put it very well, too, in its report entitled A Future Together. In that report they said this: "We share the widespread public view that among the requirements for Canadian unity is a fundamental revision of the Canadian constitutional and political structure. Many English-speaking Canadians, particularly in the west and the Atlantic provinces, are critical of the way our political system has been working. The vast majority of Quebecois want, at the very least, basic reforms."

"Although the British North America Act has served Canada well for 111 years in a variety of changing circumstances unforeseen by the Fathers of Confederation, and although there have been numerous piecemeal adjustments over the years, there is a growing gap between the structure created in 1867 and the social, economic and political realities of the vastly different Canada of 1979.

"We believe, therefore, that there should be a new Canadian constitution to meet the aspirations and future needs of all the people of Canada." That, as I said, is from the Task Force on Canadian Unity.

Ontario is ready and anxious to participate fully in this process with one major goal in mind: that of strengthening our federal system and reinforcing the links between Canadians in order to keep Canada united. Our general principles in this respect were well summarized in the speech from the throne in early March, and they are worth repeating here again, and these are our general principles:

"First, the preservation of the unity of Canada wherein our bilingual and multi-cultural heritage can flourish; second, the continuation of strong government whereby the federal level has the power to pursue the national interest and the provincial level has the capacity to reflect the regional diversities that are Canada's heritage; third, the strengthening of our economic union by ensuring a free flow of goods, services, people and capital across the country and through a firm commitment to a sharing of each other's economic burdens and endowments; fourth, the preservation of the monarchy as the head of state for Canada; and fifth, a truly Canadian constitution achieved through the immediate patriation of the British North America Act, preferably with a flexible amending formula."

These basic principles and objectives constitute, I believe, a sound framework to guide the process of renewal of our constitution. I believe that they reflect our traditions, history and past commitments, they are shared by the vast majority of Ontarians and Canadians in other provinces, and they provide sufficient flexibility to make the necessary changes to re-establish harmony in Canadian society.

Ontario's approach to the renewal of the constitution is therefore aimed at contributing positively to the process of constitutional discussions through a stance of leadership, moderation and conciliation.

In my opinion, it is time to again take up the process we began last fall. The new federal government and all 10 provinces should now get down to the hard and serious work of constitutional reform without waiting for the Quebec referendum to take place. In other words, we disagree most strenuously with the Quebec position that there should be a complete moratorium on constitutional discussions until their referendum has taken place.

We believe it is extremely important that we get down to business right away and continue the process that began last fall on constitutional reform, and we don't think we should be diverted from this task at this time.

As we proceed, we are fortunate that we will have, I think, in addition to the work we have already done in the previous inter-governmental conferences I have talked about, a number of very valuable tools to aid us in finding accommodations and solutions that will be required. There are, for example, the first two reports of our Advisory Committee on Confederation, headed by Ian Macdonald, the president of York University. These reports will be very helpful. Also, I am particularly impressed by the main report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, whose analysis of the Canadian situation and recommendations for a renewed federalism will be useful in all future discussions.

It seems sure the Parti Quebecois will soon be indicating more definitely the timing of its promised referendum. It has indicated it will perhaps indicate that during this month of June. While there has been a great deal of speculation about the possible nature and substance of the referendum question or questions, only time will tell how the Parti Quebecois ultimately decides to solicit the views of the people of the province of Quebec and what kind of mandate it will seek.

Only time will tell, for example, whether the referendum is totally specific in asking the people of Quebec for their views on full withdrawal from Canada; or whether, as another example, the referendum is designed in such a way as to attempt to solicit a more general mandate in support of negotiations for additional special arrangements for Quebec in the short term; or whether, as yet another example, the referendum will ask specifically for a mandate to negotiate sovereignty association with the rest of Canada.

On the matter of sovereignty association, Ontario's position is quite clear: we will not negotiate sovereignty association. In fact, Ontario cannot negotiate sovereignty association with another province because Ontario is part of a national reality: a federal state called Canada. Besides, sovereignty association is a concept whereby Mr. Levesque and his colleagues obviously want to have their cake and eat it too.

Certainly Ontario will not go along—nor, I think, will the rest of Canada—with Mr.

Levesque's rather naive assumption that he can bargain with us in order to have all the advantages of a wider economic association, and at the same time have almost complete political autonomy. The Parti Quebecois is trying to make the case that there should be two equal entities, Quebec and Canada. That view may make some sense in Quebec's terms but it flies in the face of reality in the rest of this country and it totally ignores the fact that there is virtually no support for the concept in any other province.

Frankly, we believe that Mr. Levesque is misleading Canadians and especially deluding the people of Quebec when he talks of a bright and prosperous future for Quebec and Canada under sovereignty association and when he says the impact of sovereignty association will be quite minimal.

In effect he is saying Quebec can and should retain its present advantages as a member of the Canadian federation, but do without the obligations and responsibilities of membership in that federation. I do not think this is the kind of one-sided relationship which fair-minded Quebecers even would like to see established between their province and the rest of Canada.

Having said this, I find I must return again to the area of constitutional reform. It is our view we in Ontario must indicate to the people of Quebec, in every way possible, that we remain prepared to embark, with our fellow provinces and the federal government, upon any set of negotiations that is directed towards redefining and retuning Confederation so that this country may better respond to the pressures and realities of the 1980s. This has always been Ontario's position, but I believe we must be prepared to restate it and restate it effectively, consistently and loudly over the next few weeks and months.

It would be a serious distortion if the people of Quebec—or the news media in Quebec—took our very firm position on sovereignty association to mean we are unprepared to engage in broad negotiations within a national context which sought to correct injustices, broaden and make more representative our national institutions, and respond to the specific cultural issues which are critical to the survival of the French-Canadian people and essential to the preservation of Canada.

In the months ahead, there may be opportunities to bring these kinds of thoughts to the increasing attention of the people of Quebec. If there are ways in which the Premier of Ontario, or myself, or other members of this Legislature, all members of this Legislature, can contribute to the debate, realistically and meaningfully, I believe most strongly that we should do so.

In summing up, the essence of our position is to find the best ways of letting Quebecers know that we value and cherish their continued participation within the Canadian Confederation; that the very idea of sovereignty association cannot be achieved; that we are striving to achieve a fuller understanding of their linguistic and cultural concerns; that we are open to considerable change in our current constitutional arrangements to better reflect Canada's contemporary needs and conditions, provided such change is workable and realistic; and that we believe that the best hope for a strong Quebec in the future lies within confederation, in the Canadian Confederation, not isolated outside it.

Let me close by saying I am heartened when I read words such as those written by Claude Ryan in his booklet, Our Best Choice: Quebec and Canada. He begins in the introduction by saying: "It has not always been easy for Quebecers and for francophones to live in Canada. Canada has, nevertheless, been one of the greatest political and economic successes of the past century. As we prepare to decide whether or not to continue our participation in this country, it is essential to draw up an honest statement of the benefits that it has brought to us and still brings to us."

Mr. Ryan finishes his booklet with a ringing conclusion that I believe leaves no doubt that there are many people in Quebec who think and feel just as we do in Ontario and in this Legislature. That, I think is expressed most eloquently in these closing words of Mr. Ryan's booklet:

"There is no authentic or demonstrated flaw in Canadian federalism that cannot be discussed, criticized and reviewed publicly, or that one cannot undertake to correct by the method of democratic negotiation. Even the slowness for which the Canadian system has been reproached in this respect, is, from another standpoint, a protection against the dangers of improvisation.

"It is much wiser, therefore, to try to improve Canadian federalism than to destroy it on the pretext of seeking later to rebuild a diminished version of it. The Canadian federal choice is the path of sturdiness and continuity. It is also the choice that answers the call for a broader and more generous solidarity."

As I say, these words of Claude Ryan I think show us that many in Quebec feel as we do in Ontario. I think they give us cause to believe the next few months are going to be exciting for all of us, but they also give us cause to believe in the ultimate end the unity of Canada will be preserved.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the fairly detailed statement the minister has made. I'm sure other members of the Legislature would appreciate receiving a copy of it, particularly that section of the statement which deals with the interprovincial and federal-provincial relations.

I must say from the outset I am sorry my colleague from Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) is not here today to join me in this opening statement, since he deals with the federal-provincial aspect of the intergovernmental affairs relationship. However, he will be here next week and be able to get into that in more detail. I also want to say that my colleague the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) will be participating in these estimates, as will other members of my party.

I believe at a time when we are considering the estimates, we are afforded an opportunity to discuss a variety of items which fall under the purview of Intergovernmental Affairs. These include items such as conditional grants to municipalities, deconditionalization of grants, disaster relief, property tax reform, equalization of assessment, local autonomy, provincial authority over municipal governments and responsibilities to municipal government.

The responsibilities which municipalities hold are in the areas of fire, police, planning, property taxation, the business tax, recreation, welfare, health, education, personnel, transportation and communications and many more. The list is almost endless, when we consider the responsibility that municipalities have and the impact the province exerts on both the formulation of these policies and their implementation. What I'm really saying is that it is so vital for the effective delivery of these services that a good understanding must both develop and permeate any discussions held between the two levels of government.

The problem, as I see it, is that the government has had the support of the people of Ontario and the municipalities for so long that it is taking both for granted. By taking this support from municipalities for granted, it is injecting in its action a serious element of cynicism into the picture.

Take, for example, property tax reform. For over 10 years, this matter was studied by special committees that travelled from city to city, town to town, village to village, from city to town, from village to city and all over the province. It was studied by special committees made up of elected aldermen, mayors and trustees. It was studied by government committees. It was studied by appointed municipal and educational people as well as provincial personnel. It was studied by knowledgeable and not-so-knowledgeable people.

The government received draft reports and final reports. A majority report and many minority reports were received. The public was told that property tax reform was just around the corner. In the final analysis, property tax reform was shelved for an indefinite period for a variety of reasons. One was Proposition 13 in California which, the day before the announcement of the shelving this particular tax reform, passed overwhelmingly in that state.

There was the political impact. The province admitted and was told on numerous occasions that there would be a lot of losers and winners. It felt there were going to be more losers than winners and, therefore, politically it was not a good thing to implement.

The third aspect was that it was going to cost about $300 million to $400 million in order to implement, when the government was already experiencing a deficit of $1.5 billion annually—and all this after the spending of millions of dollars for upgrading much of the data for assessment purposes.

The indicated costs of $3 million to $5 million is a conservative figure. Is it any wonder that people become cynical when they witness such manoeuvres, at their, the public's, expense? To add insult to injury, we now see that the government employs section 86 of the Assessment Act to equalize assessment within classes of property owners. That is a step I agree with but it is one that could easily have been used all along to prevent many of the inequalities to grow to ridiculous proportions.

This cancerous growth is seen in many areas of the province. There is no better example than one in Cambridge, Ontario. It is more difficult now to apply the remedy than it would have been 10 years ago. Let's look at another area. Let's look at regional government, where a number of studies were carried on. We had the Archer report in Niagara, the Mayo report in Ottawa-Carleton, the Roberts report in Toronto and the Stewart report in Hamilton. Now we have the Palmer report in Waterloo. They cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to develop. They all, supposedly, were well researched and rehearsed. They all gave numerous recommendations with different degrees of validity or justification for implementation. What has happened to them? Are they gathering dust or is peat moss settling on them? Will the government act?

We cannot suggest that they are not being implemented because of a minority government, simply because none of the proposals have come before the House to have an airing here and, therefore, the opposition parties have not had a true opportunity to react to them. What will happen to them? Will the government in the next few months bring in some recommendations to this House so that we can deal with them properly? I doubt it.

Let's look at the transfer payment aspect. The minister has referred to this in a statement, and I appreciate the lengthy statement he made. Transfer payments add to the cynicism that the people of Ontario hold with respect to much that has gone on in the provincial sector. First of all, the Edmonton commitment—and I'm not going to delve into it very deeply—was made and then the province reneged on it.

The municipalities felt the amount that was committed was going to be a maximum. The province then came back and said it was a minimum. Then the province injected some other payments into the formula which, in effect, had the effect of decreasing the total number of dollars that went to municipalities. Then earlier this year the province indicated that it would transfer payments to municipalities which would be commensurate with provincial expenditures. The municipalities thought that this would be about six per cent, but the province came back and said it was going to be five per cent, resulting in a loss of about $180 million.

It seems to me that with all of the negotiations that go on between the provinces and the municipalities surely to goodness these major discrepancies, or these major misunderstandings shouldn't develop. I would hope that the present Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs will go out of his way in trying to avoid these kinds of misunderstandings in the future if that's what they are.

Let's look at another thing. The Comay report, which is a planning matter but obviously concerns municipalities, was published a couple of years ago. Yesterday we had the benefit of the Minister of Housing's announcing a white paper on the Planning Act. In the next number of months, there will be a lot of discussion on this particular issue, but are we to believe that viable alternatives will come out of this discussion? Or will the government then sit on these various reports that have been submitted and will be submitted by local municipalities, regional municipalities and private concerns across the province in order to justify the kind of expenditures that go into these kinds of discussions?

Another aspect which the government, and the minister particularly, has referred to is that of the deconditionalization of grants. About two volumes came out on this a couple of years ago, which I had the opportunity of going through. I find that a fantastic amount of time was spent in compiling that kind of information. The question now remains whether a serious look will be taken at the deconditionalization of grants. The municipalities have asked for it. Almost annually the Association of Municipalities of Ontario passes a resolution asking for greater deconditionalization of grants but with very little success.

In fact, a few years ago, the deconditionalization of grants was greater than it is currently. We now have the minister indicating that there will be some simplification of grants. I wonder very much what that means. I'm not sure whether that means that the various forms that the municipalities fill out will be simpler or whether they will be able to get those grants more readily or whether there is going to be a tightening up of grants. Whether it will be simpler for the government to say no to the various grants that the municipalities have received before and that they are expecting and the qualifications will be more stringent, I'm not sure. Nevertheless, I look forward to having some kind of clarification of this simplification of deconditionalization of grants.

Very properly, the municipalities deserve more than they are getting from the standpoint of deconditional grants. The minister himself is not totally to blame for this. He has been in the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs only for about nine or 10 months, as he indicated earlier, and I think he is trying to do a commendable job in relating to the municipalities of Ontario. He does, however, have to share some responsibility for the policies that have gone on in the past 10 years or so, simply because, first of all, he has been a member of the cabinet that obviously approved the various policies that were espoused and that were applied to municipalities.

I now want to turn my attention to another item the minister alluded to. That has to do with the urban-rural problem that has existed in the province almost since the Baldwin Act of 1849 and certainly since Confederation, and, more importantly, since the turn of the century when the urban areas began to grow with greater rapidity than they had in former years.

There is ample evidence that current procedures dealing with the annexation of land by growing urban municipalities are not adequate. In fact, they often lead to continued ill-feeling and the expenditure of large sums of money. The fact that approximately $3 million has been spent by Barrie and Innisfil township for legal and other services to adequately present their side of the annexation picture is a prime example of how outworn the present policy of the adversary process is and how the people's money is being wasted for high-priced professional assistance. The only people benefitting from such a procedure are the lawyers and the planning and engineering consultants. It's a sad commentary on the present process and on the government.

Two other areas which obviously are going to encounter the same kind of problems are Brant township and the city of Brantford, and the city of Sarnia and Sarnia township. Both of them have discussed their problems with the ministry on a number of occasions.

The question we must ask ourselves is: Is there a better alternative? I believe there is. At a recent meeting of the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario and the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, Mayor Andy Brandt of Sarnia presented an alternative which deserves serious study. As the minister knows, regionalization is not a viable alternative. Mayor Brandt and his municipal colleagues recognize that fact. I basically concur with their analysis and their conclusions.

I think it's important that one recommendation be on the record, because I think it goes a long way towards resolving the various problems now encountered by sprawling urban municipalities, with their need for more land on which to build industry, residential projects and commercial projects, whatever they may be. The municipal representatives at that conference, which I attended, put forth a proposal which suggested, first of all:

"Notice should be served to the boundary owners and that there should be a one-month time limit here. Notice would be served by the annexing municipality to the province and the municipality or municipalities from which the annexation is requested, indicating the proposed boundary adjustments and the reasons for such adjustment, and requesting a meeting within one month.

"The second stage would be negotiations for about 12 months. These would be undertaken at the local level between the municipalities involved, in the presence of a provincial ministry official. The suggested parameters for negotiation will be established by the province.

"The third stage is conciliation which could take about three months. If negotiations are unsuccessful at any time within the 12-month time limitation, then a fact finder or conciliator appointed by the province would meet with the parties in an attempt to negotiate a settlement of the problems within a three-month period.

"Following that there would be arbitration if necessary. If the negotiations were unsuccessful during the conciliation period, the matter would proceed to arbitration. The urban municipalities prefer a separate tribunal, possibly within the framework of the Ontario Municipal Board, but with particular expertise in the area of local government restructuring.

"The tribunal would be aided by a staff. The staff would be responsible for receiving input from potentially affected parties and also for the gathering of information beyond that submitted. It is suggested that written submissions be made by the municipalities involved, stating and supporting their requests that boundaries be adjusted or remain static. Such submissions should be as comprehensive as possible.

"The tribunal would have authority to contact the municipalities involved to clarify issues or request additional input, but the present confrontation process should be abandoned. After analysing the information received and/or separately collected, the staff would make a recommendation to the tribunal, which would make a final and binding decision."

The next stage would be that, if there was disagreement with that decision and someone wanted to appeal, there would be four months in which to do so.

"The final authority must rest with the government, and any appeal should be to the cabinet. The suggested time limit for lodging an appeal is one month, and it is respectfully suggested that three months be allowed for a determination of the appeal by cabinet.

"The entire process as outlined, from serving notice to appeal, is shown as a maximum of 22 months, a reasonable length of time to resolve boundary questions. However, in any changeover period, special consideration should be given to any municipality that has already been involved in boundary negotiations.

"It is suggested that a comprehensive report be prepared by the ministry official at the negotiation stage and by the conciliator at the conciliation stage in order that their observations will be available for the decision-making process."

They go on to say: "It is the opinion of the urban municipalities that within the context of this position paper we have addressed the questions raised by the Honourable Tom Wells in his speech to ACRO in Sudbury on October 17 of the past year"—1978.

"The urban municipalities represented in this position paper fully appreciate the difficulties and sensitive nature of the questions we are attempting to address. In a spirit of understanding and goodwill, it is our hope that the government of Ontario will recognize the inadequacy of the present procedure and will see fit to make the necessary changes and adjustments to bring about a badly needed and overdue improvement in the present process before the Ontario Municipal Board."

The minister is following the right procedure in asking ACRO, ROMA, AMO, through the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee, to come up with some solutions to the present dilemma. I do not think the various municipalities across the province which have these annexation problems should be asked to spend millions of dollars in the future to resolve something before the Ontario Municipal Board.

I think a better solution is around the corner, and the municipalities should be commended for their leadership in trying to resolve this problem. I commend the minister for giving them the opportunity to try to resolve this in co-operation with ministry personnel and the elected representatives in that ministry.

I want to touch briefly on the constitutional aspect referred to in the minister's opening statement. All of us appreciate that constitutional reform is needed. I personally appreciate the fact that the minister wants to proceed post-haste in trying to get some constitutional reform, irrespective of what Claude Morin said the other day in asking for a moratorium on this matter.

I am wondering, however, what the government of Ontario will do if the government of Quebec says it will boycott the meeting if any discussions are held prior to the referendum being conducted in Quebec.

[12:15]

One of the problems with the sovereignty-association suggestion that the province of Quebec has made is that no one really knows what sovereignty association means. I suppose this is one of the cards Mr. Levesque has up his sleeve in that he hasn't really defined what sovereignty association will mean to the people of Quebec and to the people of Canada. He has indicated that yes, they would like to have some liaison with the rest of the provinces and with the federal government, but he prefers to be very ambiguous on the whole matter. I would hope that for the benefit of all Canadians he will come forward and make a more definitive statement on the matter before too long.

I think at this point I will bring my remarks to a close, knowing my colleague for Ottawa East will want to speak to the second part of this, the federal-provincial aspect, next week, and knowing also that as we go through the estimates there will be other questions we will want to address ourselves to.

Mr. Swart: I am happy to rise to give a leadoff statement for our party on the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. I immediately want to acknowledge the co-operation which the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has extended to me and to my colleague the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs), in my case, since he assumed the ministry. Also I want to congratulate his parliamentary assistant, the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg), for being selected for that position, and although he is not in the House, to thank him for his co-operation. I also want to concur with the comments of the minister with regard to the quality of the staff in his ministry, serving him and serving the municipalities in this province. I have known quite a number of them for many years and share his respect for them. May I particularly mention his deputy minister, Mr. Don Stevenson.

I want to say, too, at this time that this is probably the last time I will be dealing largely with municipal affairs in these estimates, or for that matter in the House. My colleague from Wentworth who has, I suggest, already made a masterful contribution to this House and gained the respect of this House, as members here know is taking over that aspect of intergovernmental affairs and will be phasing that into his hands rather rapidly from now on.

In speaking in this debate today, I want to say that I am doing so as an individual and as a member of a party which is angry about what's taking place in this province under the control and direction of the Tory government. It's a direction for which the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has very serious responsibility.

We're angry because what the government is doing is contrary to the principles in which we, in this party, believe. The government has produced a very high level of unemployment in this province, where we have 300,000 unemployed. To a very substantial degree it has restricted the opportunity for young people in our province, not only to obtain jobs but even to go to university and higher levels of education because of cutbacks, perhaps more so because they see no future anyway in taking that route. They do not have the opportunity to learn trades as they should have in this province. There is, generally, a restriction of opportunity for young married couples to be able to purchase their own homes.

Generally speaking, in terms of the situation as it is broadly across this province, the opportunities that traditionally existed here, for the young people particularly and for many others, no longer exist to the same degree that they did.

We are angry because the standard of living has been lowered in the last year. We are well aware of the fact that average wages increased by something like seven per cent in 1978, while the cost of living went up by nine or 10 per cent. We are concerned about the decrease in social security, whether it's in the health field—yes, I see members over there shaking their heads; I am going to come to the responsibility of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs in this and to what I propose will be remedial measures in that field. We are concerned about the decrease in social security, whether it's in the health field or whether it is in lowered income for those on fixed incomes. There is a generally lower degree of social security than there has been.

We are very much concerned about the greater degree of inequality that exists in this province at this time than existed 10 years ago or even 20 years ago. Relatively, the poor are getting poorer and the rich are getting richer. I pointed out in this House a month or so ago that this government in the last three years—and incidentally this all started back about 1975—I pointed out that the minimum wage had been increased by something like only 13 per cent, although average wages had gone up by something like 27 per cent. A family of four in this province now which happens to be on general welfare assistance has had an increase during those three years of something like 16 per cent; a single person an increase of about 14 per cent; family benefits generally have increased about 15 per cent—even though profits have gone up in those three years by 41 per cent.

Mr. Gregory: What has that got to do with Intergovernmental Affairs estimates? When are you going to get on the point?

Mr. Swart: It has quite a bit to do with it. Mr. Chairman, I hear somebody on the other side of the House saying: "What has this got to do with municipal affairs?" It may have something to do with municipal affairs. The amount of money that is transferred to municipalities with regard to providing employment or with regard to providing social assistance to those in society has quite a bit to do with it.

I would point out, Mr. Chairman, as you well know, that we are discussing inter-governmental affairs, which is the relationship between this province and the federal government, where such things as conferences take place with regard to the state of the economy as well as with regard to the constitution, and therefore there is a very real relationship between these matters and the Intergovernmental Affairs estimates.

If the minister were to give the reason for this reduction in the standard of living, particularly for those on lower incomes, for the reduction in the social assistance, he would say it is simply because we cannot afford it. He would have to admit that this widening of the gap has taken place, and in fact the standard of living has fallen. I think he would say that it was because they could not afford it.

I want to say that if we organized our economy properly, there never has been a time when we could afford it better. Canada—and even this province—has the greatest amount of natural resources per capita of any nation or state in the world. We have the technology and the skills and the ability to acquire them. We have the largest percentage of our population in the work force, or who would like to be in the work force, that we have ever had. The latest statistics show that 49 per cent of the people over 15 in this province are in the work force—although some of them may not be working—compared with 45 per cent for Canada, and of course this is substantially up from what it was 10 years or so ago.

Mr. Riddell: Obviously they don't all support the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Swart: But there's a growing number who do, compared with those supporting the party on my right if we just look back to the recent federal election.

The additional number in the work force, in fact all these three conditions, should mean that more people would be producing leaving less to keep who are not producing, and therefore our standard of living should go up.

There are fewer children; we don't need new capital expenditures for schools as we did back 10 or 20 years ago. I think the minister will recall—I am not sure if he was Minister of Education; it was perhaps, back in the days of the Premier (Mr. Davis)—when they were opening one school in Ontario every week. I believe that was about the maximum reached at one point. We don't have those expenditures any more.

We have plenty of teachers, therefore, there really should be a higher quality of education; with lower numbers in the classroom we should be in a position to do more for our young people in the field of education. Instead, in fact, the quality of education is decreasing.

We don't ever talk any more, it seems, about introducing such things as denticare. When the population is growing more slowly we have no capital expenditures for hospitals. We have lots of nurses and should be having a higher quality of health care; but in fact it is the reverse.

In our municipalities, too, we are having, as the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) mentioned, less expansion in our municipalities. There are no longer the costs there now for sewers, although many of them are paying debentures over a long period of time. There is not the capital to be found for sewers and water systems and new fire halls and all of those things; therefore we should be able to have a higher quality of life within our municipalities, which should be able to provide that for their citizens.

In 1976 this government embarked on a negative, economically-restrictive program which the government said was necessary because of the economy; but really, those programs and similar ones by the federal government are the cause of our worsening economy, not the result of it. The special program review, the Henderson report, was really the wrong medicine. It was similar to cutting the diet of a person suffering from malnutrition. The alternative that was needed was an economic strategy for Ontario where we would consciously plan to fully utilize our work force; where we would process our natural resources, and replace imports with domestic production; where we would have a higher quality of the environment and increase the quality of life generally.

The Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs could have been one of the vehicles to accomplish this. There is a real opportunity for this province, because of its size if nothing else, to give leadership at the provincial-federal conference. The minister will be there; he has been there before and will be there again I am sure. He will be attending economic conferences as well as constitutional conferences; I urge him to reverse the kind of stand this government has taken at those conferences.

I have here a report from the February 14, 1978 Toronto Star, in which they talk about the stand which Ontario took; and of course we know that the Toronto Star is more and more becoming a very sensitive paper which recognizes qualities and those sorts of things. It says, "Jobs the Priority in Ottawa Summit"—

Mr. Gregory: They haven't picked a winner in years.

Mr. Swart: —and that is the point that I want to make here; jobs should be priority of the Ottawa conference when they take place.

The Star made these comments:

"Canada's federal and provincial leaders should make sure they don't leave Ottawa's economic summit tomorrow without coming up with a program to cure the country's unemployment crisis.

"In yesterday's opening session there was some leadership on this vital issue from Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney. He urged Ottawa and his fellow provinces to embark on a massive program of government investment to create jobs.

"The projects, as Blakeney made clear, make economic sense." It goes on to say: "In the case of energy projects, delays will mean Canadians will have to find billions of dollars to import oil instead. Blakeney put it, "The choice is between jobs today, energy tomorrow, or no jobs today, no energy tomorrow.

"The greatest barrier to bold new action to find jobs for the close to one million unemployed is that many of the provincial premiers, along with Prime Minister Trudeau, want to adopt do-nothing, conservative economic policies. Not only have they taken up the long-discredited notion that the only real jobs in society are private-industry jobs, they also claim incorrectly that more stimulus would lead to more inflation.

"Even Premier William Davis seems to have adopted a do-nothing attitude on jobs. His 10-point job program unveiled yesterday contained not a single proposal for increased Ontario action to create jobs."

Mr. Haggerty: Mel, you've got a good speechwriter.

Mr. Swart: The minister should consider that admonition from this party, and consider a realistic job program and a realistic economic program to present to the federal government at the next conference, whereby we could get the economy moving again in this nation and in this province. But far from using Intergovernmental Affairs to improve economic and social conditions, it has in fact been used to bring about greater inequality. Even where the federal government had made fairly adequate transfer payments to the minister, he has somehow or other distorted it to the disadvantage of Ontario citizens.

I want to speak briefly about the transfers under the established programs' financing which is predominantly—almost entirely, the minister will agree—for hospital insurance and medicare and for post-secondary education payments. The increases this year from the federal government to the province were 14 per cent, but the province only increased the transfer to Health by some 5.37 per cent and to Colleges and Universities by just over four per cent.

I would like to know where the rest of the money went, because at the same time the minister increased premiums. He must have kept that money. He has allowed doctors to opt out and bill their patients, and the average billing of their patients is something like 42 per cent over and above the OHIP rate. This once again has meant a real shift of the tax burden down to those on the lower incomes. It has meant a greater inequality—and I am sure the minister agrees—in our society.

These additional payments may not be any hardship to those who have the higher incomes—as we do here in this Legislature—but to the people who are making $10,000 a year, and there are a lot of them in this province, it is a real hardship to have to make those additional payments. The minister has used even the transfer payments from the federal government coming down to this province in the administration of those transfer payments, even though they are tied to two specific areas—not legally of course but morally. He has used them elsewhere and has permitted greater inequality in the field of health and in the field of education.

On Ontario federal-provincial intergovernmental affairs I am really proposing two things to the minister. One is that I think he should use his office to develop, as the opportunities arise, and to make the opportunities to develop an economic strategy for this nation—to make proposals for it in which of course Ontario would benefit. Second, the money the minister receives in transfer should be used to provide greater equality in our society, not less.

I was generally pleased with the comments made by the minister in his statement here today with regard to the constitution. I think I and my party, generally share the government's view. Obviously, we want to see Canada stay together. Obviously we want to see a strong central government.

I am, however, a little concerned if the Ontario government is going to tie its pronouncements too closely to the words—and the member for Waterloo North made comment on this too—"sovereignty association." We all know what separation is and we can all come out solidly against separation. When we talk about constitutional reform, we don't know exactly what constitutional reform means. We are all prepared to make some reforms in our constitution but it is going to be difficult to get agreement. We are all prepared to make some constitutional reforms to keep Canada as a nation and perhaps even to improve the functioning of Canada as a nation.

I am just not too sure what sovereignty association means. I know what sovereignty means. I am not sure what association means. It sounds like two nations associated together. I don't disagree with your interpretation of it, but my concern is the Premier of Quebec may well be using this terminology—I know he is using this terminology—to get votes in the coming referendum. I don't know what that will mean. He may only use it in an attempt to get constitutional reform, and I am humbly suggesting to the minister to not tie too tightly into that terminology because it could trip us up and trip you up from doing something we wanted to do in the field of constitutional reform.

I want to switch to the intergovernment relationship between the provinces and local government. I want to say immediately that here again, the transfer system, as is the case with the transfer of money from the federal government to the province, has been used in recent times to bring about greater inequality and to shift burdens to those least able to pay. Mr. Minister, you are relatively new and I think this is really the first budget you have prepared yourself. Because municipalities and taxpayers have to look to you to re-establish fairness, I want to deal with the basics in municipal financing and your transfer system.

The government of this province, during the 1960s and the early 1970s, publicly acknowledged the regressivity of the property tax. Statement after statement said provincial transfers ought to be increased to limit that regressivity. To their credit, they did that. They lived up to their statement, but then, in 1976, the reversal started. The minister's and government's own figures show in the field of education, the share of elementary and secondary education costs attained by the province was something like 61.4 per cent. In 1977 it had dropped to 54.8 per cent. This year they are estimated at 51.5 per cent, representing a drop in the share the province is paying.

Of course, the other side of that coin is the municipalities are picking up, going up from 38.6 per cent to 48.5 per cent in just that short period of four years.

If we look at the total transfer picture for all levels of municipal government and education—once again, figures from your ministry—in 1975 the province was transferring something like 43.9 per cent of their expenditures and that dropped in 1977 to 41.5 per cent. Our estimate is that this year, two years later, it will be down to slightly less than 40 per cent. Perhaps the minister will agree that those are not unfair figures—they are accurate—and even that the estimate is not unfair.

That means there will be $300 million to $350 million more that local government has to get from the municipal taxpayer this year alone because the province has not kept paying the same percentage to the municipalities and the school boards as it was in 1975 or 1974—they are basically the same. They have to raise $300 million to $350 million, or seven per cent more, which averages out to about an additional $50 per household that they will be paying this year because that percentage was not kept up.

The average tax increases—once again, using the ministry's own figures—are approximately 40 per cent in the three years. I would point out, in fairness, that that is down from what it was when I dealt with this issue last year. When we dealt with 1974 to 1979, it was something like 74 per cent. It is down now to something like 40 per cent. There are other things the minister can add in or take out, such as the average increase in residential assessment. He can use a mill rate or he can add that in, and he makes adjustments each year on the amount he uses each year for the resource equalization factor. The increase is now in the neighbourhood of 40 per cent, or perhaps a little bit more, in the last three years.

Once again, I point out that average wages and salaries in those three years went up 27 per cent. But property taxes went up something like 40 per cent. That means the property tax payer is losing out.

There is a real regressivity there, and I think the minister would agree—using comments made by the ministers over the years when they were implementing the property tax credit—that the municipal property tax is regressive. When we turn back and put more of it back on the property owner, we are increasing the regressivity. I think that follows, as night follows day.

In those years when the government recognized regressivity as something that was undesirable—it did recognize that at one time and increased transfers—it did something else as well. The government introduced the property tax credit, which I mentioned a moment ago, as the second method of eliminating the regressivity.

The first method was to cut property taxes as a share of municipal expenditure, and the second was to implement the property tax credit. At the time that was introduced, back in 1972, the then Minister of Treasury and Intergovernmental Affairs, the Honourable Darcy McKeough, said: "Our property tax credit plan has one primary objective: to produce a fairer and more progressive distribution of the property tax burden borne by individuals and families in Ontario. Ontario's tax credit will deliver substantially greater tax relief to low-income families and individuals and to pensioners and farmers." That was a clear recognition of its purpose.

When it was increased two years later, the same kinds of statements were made by Mr. White, who was then the minister, that it was necessary to increase that property tax credit to give fairness and to reduce the regressivity of the property tax.

But now the minister has reversed that. Not only has he reversed the percentage of municipal and school board expenditures that are being levied at the local level, but he has also reversed the property tax credit so that it pays a lesser and lesser share of the property tax.

You can check out these figures, which I hope you will. If I am wrong, I will stand corrected. Although property taxes have increased by 40 per cent in the last three years, the property tax credit has increased by nine percent. Property tax is up 40 per cent; the tax credit is up nine per cent. This means that those in the lower-income group not only have this 40 per cent increase, but because they're getting less property tax credit and they're getting a substantial portion of their taxes paid before, are now finding that their percentage increase is substantially higher than the others.

May I again give you some figures which you may want to check out? I hope you will because I think it's pretty fundamental to the transfer system. Where there is an income in the home of $5,000—and there aren't too many cases, although there are quite a lot of single people who are living on fixed incomes or public assistance of some kind who still aren't getting more than $5,000, for example, a woman with two children, of whom are a great many of them—the net tax increase in those three years in those cases would be 70 per cent.

If they're making $7,500, then the net tax increase would be 55 per cent. If their income is $10,000, the net tax increase would be about 43 per cent over those years.

If we take this a little bit further, if those people with those incomes are senior citizens over 65 years of age and get the additional tax credit of $110 or $100, they get an additional tax credit, which also hasn't been changed over the years. The person on a $5,000 income would have had an increase of 130 per cent in those three years; the person on a $7,500 income would have a 90 per cent increase in net taxes and a person on a $10,000 income would have about 65 per cent.

There is a real need. I would beg the minister, if it would do any good, to make a strong recommendation that there be a substantial adjustment in the property tax credit so that those on lower incomes aren't getting a greater percentage increase in their property taxes than those on higher incomes. I think that is just justice. I would also ask that you give some consideration, recognizing the complexities, of applying the property tax credit at the time of payment of the tax bill.

I would point out that there may be some hazard in not giving consideration to these inequities and injustices which are building up year by year. I came across a clipping the other day from the Toronto Star, of late February 1978 under the heading "Property Tax Time Bomb." It says: "Will Treasurer McKeough escape unscathed?"

I don't need to give the answer to that. He is no longer here. This may only be one of the reasons, but it's undoubtedly one of the reasons he is no longer around because he didn't give sufficient concern to the increase in property taxes which are taking place across this province.

Apart from the inequality, I want to say, that government policy from the years gone by has also created unnecessary costs in many areas of this province. I'm referring specifically to regional governments, in which 60 per cent of the population reside.

You are probably aware, or you may not be, that the party and I did a study comparing the increase in the property taxes in those municipalities within the regions across this province with those which are not in the regions and which have only one level of government. It showed at that time—it was done a couple of years ago—that the average expenditure per household was substantially higher in those municipalities within the regions compared to a similar municipality with a similar growth rate outside of the regions. At that time, we included capital costs.

Mr. Haggerty: We're listening to the expert, the godfather of regional government in Niagara.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes.

Mr. Swart: I would think the member for Erie has never taken up the offer I made to him to read the brief which I presented to the commission which was sitting in the Niagara region at that time.

Mr. Haggerty: I've heard it all—

Mr. Swart: I'll supply him with a copy of it and then he won't make those incorrect interjections.

Mr. Haggerty: You're backtracking now.

Mr. Swart: In bringing this study up to date, in comparing major cities within regional government to those outside regional government, we left out the capital expenditures. That's not entirely accurate, perhaps, to leave them out, because they would have shown even a greater difference. The regional municipalities, for some legitimate reasons, have had greater capital expenditures than those outside the regions because, in many instances, there has been greater growth within the regions. I'm the first one to admit that.

I also know from experience that in some regions at least there has been overexpenditure on capital projects, on servicing projects. You should have read the St. Catharines Standard a number of months ago, where the chief financial officer for the region made a pretty strong statement about that. In fact, he was backed up by the finance committee, as the member for Erie will well remember. He was backed up by the finance committee saying they had overspent and had spent money which really wasn't needed for rather massive service extensions.

In the comparison we did, we compared Hamilton with London, Sudbury with Thunder Bay, Cambridge with Brantford, Niagara Falls with Kingston, Welland with Peterborough, Waterloo with Sarnia, Stoney Creek with Belleville, Port Colborne with St. Thomas, Grimsby with Owen Sound and Thorold with Trenton. We picked municipalities that were approximately of the same size.

It showed that the expenditure per household, less capital, on those 10 municipalities—yes, there are 10 municipalities inside regional government—was $1,239, and the average of those outside was $1,053, a fairly substantial difference. I reiterate, that was without the capital expenditures. For instance, the expenditures for Hamilton were $1,396, compared to London at $1,027. As many people are aware, London is now growing at a much more rapid rate than the city of Hamilton. Sudbury and Thunder Bay were approximately the same: $1,525 and $1,563 respectively. Cambridge was $1,203, compared to Brantford at $1,088.

I won't take time to read all of these, but I would like to send them across to the minister so that he can take a look at them and perhaps have his staff do some further examinations.

The Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, or the then Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, did a substantial study on its own a couple of years ago with regard to the expenditure per capita with those municipalities inside regional government and Metro Toronto and those outside of any form of regional government. It shows the same sort of pattern. Perhaps the minister would like to update that study. At the time that was done many of those regions had only been formed for one year, two years, three years. I think it would be very valuable to the minister and to us as the opposition, to have those kinds of statistics and I would invite you to follow up on that.

I admit I am not sure what the ideal answer is to the structure of local government, but there should be an ongoing critical review of the regional governments and consideration being given to making changes. I know there have been studies of a number of the regional governments throughout his province—Niagara or Kitchener-Waterloo or Hamilton-Wentworth—but I have also been close enough to the studies to know they really didn't deal in fundamental matters; they dealt with a particular region.

I think perhaps study is needed on the principle of regional government, because there is no doubt in my mind there is duplication between the local and the regional levels. The regions may operate more efficiently, but the more government you get the greater the cost and the less accountability. I think we have to take a look at that.

In a few moments I will be moving adjournment of the debate. I do have about 15 minutes left, but I want to deal with the issue raised, perhaps somewhat obliquely, in the minister's statement regarding some form of guarantee to municipalities relative to the amount of transfer payments they get from year to year.

I invite the minister as cordially as I can to consider introducing some legislated revenue sharing in this province. The minister knows they have done this in British Columbia and they have done it in Saskatchewan. The municipalities and the municipal associations in those provinces are delighted with what is taking place and I say we should emulate it in this province.

I have copies of the two bills here with me, Mr. Minister, as I am sure you do. Even the explanatory notes ought to be almost enough to sell it to you. This is the BC bill:

"The purpose of this bill is to provide the municipalities and regional districts with a defined proportion of shareable revenue of the province. This is expressed as a formula for assigning the annual yield of one individual income tax point, one corporation income tax point, six per cent of the renewable resources, non-renewable resources and sales tax revenues to municipal and regional district grants.

"The bill provides for identifying the sources, calculating the amount and determining the distribution of grants under the revenue-sharing program."

Then it goes on to give more details.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They still don't give as much as we do.

Mr. Swart: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the net municipal taxes in this province are among the highest, if not the highest in Canada.

When the need isn't as great there may not be as much given, but proportionately throughout the rest of this nation the municipalities vis-à-vis Ontario are giving substantially more. Saskatchewan under its new bill will have passed Ontario as a percentage of transfers related to municipal expenditure.

But that is not really the point I am trying to make. Although there is a real need for increases, there's a separate point from that. It is the point of giving a guarantee to the municipalities.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells the committee of supply reported progress.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SALES TAX ON ENTERTAINMENT

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Last week the Leader of the Opposition raised in the Legislature the issue of retail sales tax on admissions to places of amusement. For many years, sales tax exemptions have been granted to non-profit, charitable and sporting organizations as well as to performances using Canadian talent.

In recent years, however, the number and variety of organizations seeking exemptions have increased rapidly, with the result that it became apparent that the process of granting exemptions needed to be improved to make it more consistent, fair and clear. In recognition of this, three principles were introduced in amendments to the Retail Sales Tax Act, subsequent to the budget on April 10 last: the increase in the numbers of organizations qualifying for automatic exemptions; removing existing size and number of performance limitations; and making qualifications for exemptions clear and exemptions more quickly obtained.

Consequently, recent amendments to the Retail Sales Tax Act contained four major measures concerning tax on admissions to amusements: First, the basic tax-free level of admissions price was raised from $3 to $3.50. This itself will automatically grant exemption to a larger number of community and charitable entertainments and small theatre groups.

Second, charitable organizations and their affiliates, amateur sport organizations and non-profit community service groups will now be automatically exempt if they qualify under the federal Income Tax Act for tax-free status. This will eliminate the need for such organizations to apply to the Ministry of Revenue for each and every performance or event.

Third, new provisions were introduced to grant exemptions to a wide range of amateur athletic associations and affiliates as identified for public assistance by the Ministry of Culture and Recreation.

Fourth, the exemption for commercial profit-making entertainment using Canadian performances was removed. The main purpose of this move was to put all profit-making entertainment on the same tax basis. The government fully recognizes this last measure may affect some Canadian-talent performances. However, I also wish to remind members that provision remains in the act which will allow relief to be continued where warranted, as has always been the case. On this basis the government will continue to review individual cases and make decisions on the merit of applications.

Finally, we also prepared to consider relief where contracts or commitments have been made on the basis of the provisions of the act previously in effect.

WINDSOR METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful to give the House a brief progress report on our litigation with the Metropolitan Hospital at Windsor.

Mr. S. Smith: May we have a copy of that statement?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think they have been sent. If not, they are on their way.

Mr. McClellan: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister would do us the courtesy of providing the statement before he starts, as the rules require.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to sit down. I understood it had been sent around.

Mrs. Campbell: The rules require it. He never pays any attention.

Mr. Speaker: Are they being distributed now?

Mr. McClellan: Ask him. We haven't got them.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, although we have not yet received a copy of the order which was made on Friday, I understand Mr. Justice Trainor agreed to our request for an adjournment of the action on condition that the planned reduction of 25 active-treatment beds, which the hospital has challenged, be deferred pending a hearing which we expect in a month.

When Mr. Justice Trainor's order becomes available, it will be reviewed by the law officers of the crown and I can assure the House we will be guided by their advice in regard to the order of the courts.

I don't think it would be proper to say more than this at the present time. The case has not been decided and the whole matter is still before the Supreme Court of Ontario.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday this House debated the procedures governing the public accounts committee's request to have Dr. James Cruise, Director of the Royal Ontario Museum, and me appear before them. I would like to assure this Legislature that I will be more than pleased to appear before the committee, as will Dr. Cruise, Mr. Sidney Hermant, chairman of the ROM board, and Dr. Douglas Wright, my deputy minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you have a copy of this?

Mr. S. Smith: The chairman of the committee doesn't, but I do.

Mr. Speaker: The minister may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

For the record and in fairness to Dr. Cruise, I should like to reiterate the point made by my deputy in last week's public accounts debate. Dr. Cruise did not try to avoid the committee. He was advised by my officials that it would not be necessary for him to appear.

As members know, Royal Ontario Museum accounts are audited annually by Clarkson, Gordon and Company. Nevertheless, we welcome the provincial auditor's examination of the museum's financial organization. It will clarify the museum's financial situation and its renovation and expansion program. Before we meet with the public accounts committee, let me make these points about ROM's expansion and renovation program.

I am persuaded that the overall policy of the museum board governing that program is sound and prudent. The basic feature of the policy is that work should proceed in three distinct phases, and work on any one of these phases will not begin until all the money for that phase is either in hand or committed. This policy enabled ROM to start building the curatorial centre at an estimated cost of $25.6 million in April 1978. The cost of the curatorial centre has been covered by a $12.75 million grant from the provincial government, $6.7 million raised to date from voluntary donations and a matching $6.7 million from Wintario.

Construction of the curatorial centre is the largest of the three phases and will provide the ROM curatorial staff, for the first time, with their own offices and laboratory facilities. That means there will be more space for the viewing public and a quiet place for the curators to do their work.

No decision has been made on which of the next two phases—that is, the construction of the terrace galleries or renovation of the main building—will proceed first. Let me make this clear: It is government policy that there will be an absolute minimum of disruption to the viewing public.

Mr. Peterson: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I suggested before, we don't know when the next phase in the expansion and renovation program will begin.

Mr. S. Smith: They didn't even tell you that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That depends to a large extent on federal help. For many months prior to the May 22 federal election, we negotiated with the then Secretary of State, John Roberts, about an early federal commitment. Contrary to some public reports, the federal government did not finally reject our request. The moment we know who Mr. Roberts' successor is, we will resume our negotiations. I think we can be confident of receiving some help because of ROM's national and international stature.

Finally, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, and this House, that there will be no layoffs at the museum for fiscal reasons.

Mr. Grande: Since when?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I hope that in the midst of the current debate about ROM, we do not lose sight of a central, crucial fact, ROM is already one of the great museums on this continent and in the world. The renovation and expansion program will only help it serve the people of Ontario, our fellow Canadians and the people of the world even better than it already has in its long and distinguished history.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege related to the Rolphton nuclear power station and statements made by the Minister of Energy in the House: On May 10, the minister advised the House in response to a question put by the Leader of the Opposition that that plant, which is a 20-megawatt nuclear demonstration plant, has been on a planned outage since March 26 of this year. Again, on May 24, he stated in the House, "Rolphoton is currently shut down for routine maintenance."

I draw the minister's attention to the report in the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, June 2, to the effect that the planned date for the shutdown was April 17, not March 26; and, secondly, the shutdown which did occur at the Rolphton plant had nothing to do with routine maintenance but was forced because of a radioactive leak within the reactor core which had been discovered at that time.

Would the minister please comment as to the extent and reasons why he may have misled the House, intentionally or unintentionally, and I assume unintentionally?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

[2:15]

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of privilege. A newspaper reported something different from what was stated in the House by the minister, and nobody's privileges have been abrogated. However, if the minister would like to set the record straight, it is his prerogative to do so, but in no way should it be construed as a point of privilege.

Mr. Roy: With respect, Mr. Speaker, my intervention involves the minister's statement and a statement by one of the officials of Hydro who apparently publicly admitted towards the end of last week that the official misled the public about the shutdown of Rolphton.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister wish to reply?

Mr. MacDonald: Before we have the minister reply to this I think there is one point you have made, Mr. Speaker, that is not strictly accurate; that is that it isn't simply a case of misinterpretation or a difference in interpretation. Two officials of Hydro are involved. Larry Woodhead, the director of nuclear generation, referred to the leak in the boiler tubing and the plant manager referred to the reactor heating transport system that was allowing the escape of several kilograms of heavy water, et cetera.

In short, it is officials of Hydro who are now saying that the plant was shut down for reasons other than plant maintenance. The question of privilege is: How come the minister made a statement which was incomplete to the point of being inaccurate?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps I can clarify the question. The responses that I gave in the House were on the basis of information supplied to me by Hydro at the time.

Mr. Warner: They misled you.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This morning I got a further, more comprehensive report from Hydro which indicated, as the member for Riverdale said, that it was originally intended to shut down for routine maintenance on April 17. However, on March 26 the station was shut down to carry out repairs to a fuel channel closure plug which was leaking. Rather than restart at the time, they decided to carry on with the rest of the maintenance.

I am told that maintenance would include turbine overhaul, inspection and repair of heat exchanger tube leaks, routine inspection of four pressure tubes, and routine safety system tests. I can only say to the honourable member that the information I had received up until this morning was what I had said. I think there may well have been a misunderstanding on what was housekeeping, what was routine maintenance and what was extraordinary maintenance.

Mr. Roy: Are you going to speak to Hydro about giving accurate information?

Mr. S. Smith: It's like the routine maintenance for a car, starting by replacing any missing wheels.

Mr. Warner: Hydro isn't under public control.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WINDSOR METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to question the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Metropolitan Hospital in Windsor is before the courts and he may not wish to comment on the merits or the outcome of the case, but I have another question.

Mr. Speaker: I see. You're not going to address yourself to that particular question. I don't want to intervene unduly, but I just want to caution members that the questioner and the minister should use their own discretion. It won't be imposed by the chair with regard to whether or not something else is sub judice.

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May I once again address this question? Understanding that the matter is before the courts and the minister may not wish to comment on the outcome or the merits of the case, can the minister tell us whether it is accurate, as reported in the press, that the minister entered no case or argument before the judge who made his recent ruling?

Is it a fact that the minister did not submit a case in the matter of the Metropolitan Hospital and, if that is a fact, does the minister consider that this failure to submit a case shows the proper regard which a minister of the crown should have for the courts?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The application, if that's the right term—not being a lawyer, I'm not certain of that—was filed a week ago last Friday, and we were informed thereof. It was set down to be heard in Windsor by Mr. Justice Trainor on Wednesday.

The impression left by some of the media accounts that the ministry ignored it or did not appear is totally inaccurate. We were in fact represented by counsel, that is, the crown was represented by counsel. I'm told that counsel spoke for two-and-a-half hours on the matter.

Mr. T. P. Reid: On which side?

Mr. Swart: And you still lost it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: At that time we asked for an adjournment so there would be sufficient time to examine the affidavits filed by the applicant, if that is the proper term, and to prepare our own, which would themselves be cross-examined. We were represented, and I'm glad to have the opportunity to set the record straight.

Mr. Lawlor: It is shameful that you should be forced into the courts on a matter like that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We certainly wouldn't ignore such an important matter.

Mr. Warner: It's a good thing we've got a judicial system. You can't punish people and get away with it.

Mr. S. Smith: This may be redundant. By way of supplementary, I take it what the minister is saying is that the ministry was represented. Did it in fact make a case and an argument as to why the beds should remain closed, as the ministry was suggesting? Can the minister give us some indication as to whether he has any fear that now, because his bed allocation and his previous regression analyses are all rather arbitrary, he is going to have to defend these in the case of a good many other hospitals in Ontario, as he goes about ham-handedly trying to close beds in the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me say, first of all, that I got word of the application having been filed at something like four o'clock or 4:30 on the Friday afternoon, if memory serves me correctly. There certainly wasn't time, between then and whenever it was heard on Wednesday, to get counsel to the city in question to examine affidavits—to the best of my recollection, we didn't even have them on the Friday—to cross-examine on affidavit and to file our own.

When we were represented on Wednesday, it was to ask for an adjournment—

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, you asked for an adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—so that we could have sufficient time to examine the affidavit and to file our own.

Mr. Lawlor: You said your counsel spoke for two-and-a-half hours.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We asked for a two-week adjournment. I believe that's what counsel asked for at the time. The main application—and this has been a point that has been glossed over—has not even been heard and has not been won or lost by either side. That is the point of the adjournment. It will be heard within the next month.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, and respecting the sub judice concern, I want to ask the minister whether it is true, as reported in the Windsor Star, that the ministry received a report from the ministry consultant, Mr. Chet Singh, which recommended that Metropolitan Hospital be allowed to reopen the 25 beds.

Second, did the minister receive an urgent telegram from the Metropolitan Hospital itself urging him to reopen the 25 beds? If he did receive both of these documents, when did he receive them and, most important, why did he fail to respond to those documents? Why did he remain silent, particularly with respect to any communications to the Metropolitan Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There are many aspects of the Windsor situation, particularly with respect to Windsor Met, that I would love to debate today. However, I think it best that all of the information in regard to this come out in the proper way, in the affidavits and the cross-examination of the affidavits.

Mr. Swart: Certainly not through the minister.

Mr. Warner: They have to fight you in court to get decent health care.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't intend to say anything that would in any way prejudice the outcome when the application is heard within the month.

Mr. Mancini: I have a supplementary to the Minister of Health. Does it not concern the Minister of Health that the relationship between Metropolitan Hospital and his ministry is now in a complete shambles? And does it not concern the minister that the hospital feels it has to take him and his ministry to court so that the people of Windsor can get adequate health care?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I certainly don't consider the relationship to be in a shambles.

Mrs. Campbell: How would you describe it?

Mr. Breagh: How would you describe it?

Mr. Warner: A wreck on wheels.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Otherwise, I don't know why I would have approved an expansion of the cancer clinic there a few months ago, if it were in a shambles.

Mr. Breagh: What are your words to describe it?

Mr. Wildman: You are Delilah to the ministry's Samson.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With regard to the particular application, there are many aspects of it and many things that have been written and said the last few days on which I would dearly love to join in debate. But I don't intend to prejudice the outcome of this application.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary, the member for Windsor-Riverside.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the minister if he remembers that on March 13, 15, 29 and April 5, 9, 19 and 23 I raised the problems of the Metropolitan Hospital in this Legislature during question period. He was aware of the problems, why didn't he respond? Why did he neglect this situation? Does he not feel his neglect should result in his resignation as Minister of Health?

Mr. Warner: The sooner the better.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, again I think once we have the opportunity to file our affidavit in a proper court of law and not in a kangaroo court the member would operate—

Mr. Breagh: Would you call this House a kangaroo court?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —then all of the facts, some of which the member may like or which he won't like, will be public knowledge.

Mr. Warner: The minister is destroying the system.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I'm not.

Mr. S. Smith: If I can have the attention of the minister, can I ask a final supplementary? Could the minister clarify for the benefit of this House and the people of Ontario that he is saying he had enough evidence to force the closure of 25 beds of that hospital, and any other hospital beds throughout the province, but he couldn't raise a word in his own defence without having an additional two weeks when challenged to produce some of that evidence in a court of law? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is, clearly, counsel for the hospital had obviously been working on their application for some time. I think the member would acknowledge that. In that time, it had prepared certain affidavits.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister had the policy for some time.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, only proper that we ask for a few weeks within which to provide time to cross-examine the people who gave those affidavits, to file our own affidavit and, of course, to provide the opportunity for those people who provide those depositions—

Mr. Warner: It should be a Frank Miller restraints speech.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —be cross-examined so any final judgement would be based on all the relevant facts. That only seems reasonable.

SALES TAX ON ENTERTAINMENT

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to question the Minister of Revenue, Mr. Speaker, regarding his statement today on the matter of retail sales tax exemptions with regard to Canadian professional talent.

I'm pleased to note the minister recognizes the need to provide some relief. May I ask whether the provisions the minister mentioned on page three of his statement will ensure the situation will be the same as it was before the new law was passed with regard to professional Canadian talent? The minister is going to be inundated with applications. Can he assure the Canadian talent industry the applications will be dealt with essentially exactly as they were before the law was changed? If not, would he not simply change the law back to what it was in that regard?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I can't give the Leader of the Opposition a blanket assurance that I'm going to change the law back to the way it was before, because they were a very confusing, mixed-up set of regulations, with which it was very difficult to deal. It was unfair to some of the people who were not able to take advantage of it simply because of the fact they weren't aware of all the existing regulations. I'm not prepared to make a commitment that we would go back to where we were. I am prepared to make the commitment to examine each application on its own merit.

You have to remember that in the statement I also said the price of admission had been raised from $3 to $3.50, which is going to make a considerable difference. Except in certain circumstances, the price of admission for most Canadian talent in various theatres is less than $3.50, so the rule doesn't even apply. It's quite true amongst the smaller theatres. Go around the province. Get around out there and see what is going on. I'm not suggesting Hamilton Place or the O'Keefe Centre would fall into that category, but I am saying most of the smaller theatres do fall into that category. There is going to be larger numbers of exemptions now than there ever has been. We are prepared to look at any of the other places where there could be some difficulties, certainly.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the minister fail to understand that the issue does not have to do with the small amateur theatres or those groups already getting public funds, but has to do with professional Canadian talent? At the moment, when a promoter is seeking to book an act or a musical group or whatever, there is an incentive for the promoter to book a Canadian group rather than an American one because he can evade the tax which is otherwise applicable. He used to apply, and if he could satisfy the minister that it was Canadian he would get the exemption.

Does the minister not recognize he has now introduced an uncertainty inasmuch as those who do the bookings will have to pour into his office seeking this relief? Why not simply assure them the situation will be unchanged for professional Canadian talent? If he can't give that assurance, why not bring back that provision from the previous law and clarify the matter that way?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I think the Leader of the Opposition perhaps doesn't realize this tax is a consumer tax. It isn't the Canadian talent who are paying it; it isn't the people who operate the theatres who pay it. It's the consumer. If the price of admission is $5, $8 or $10, surely the people who can afford to pay $8 to go to a performance can also afford to pay the tax. Who are we giving the break to?

Mr. S. Smith: To Canadian talent.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Are we giving it to Canadian talent or are we giving it to the owner of the theatre, who may not even pass it on? There is a little more to this situation than meets the eye at first glance. We have worked with this for quite some time and we are trying to be as fair as we can be.

It must also be pointed out at this time that Canadian performers are being used the same way as any other performer. We're not taking anything away. We're not saying: "It's going to affect you in a lesser manner."

Mrs. Campbell: No, it's gone too far already.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't understand. If Canadian performers were getting the advantage of the 10 per cent, that's one thing, but they are not getting that advantage.

Mr. Eakins: "We treat you royally."

Mrs. Campbell: "Buy Canadian."

Mr. S. Smith: I'm alarmed, though.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You don't understand it.

Mr. Foulds: Can the minister assure us that those amateur theatre groups and other artistic organizations, which, through programs designed largely by the Ontario Arts Council and other programs of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation, occasionally hire a professional director or a professional stage manager or designer to assist them with their productions and to upgrade their own talent, will continue to be exempt, as they are under the basic guidelines he has outlined here?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: By all means. The whole thrust of this change in legislation was to provide exactly that type of thing. In other words, any group that is a non-profit organization—athletic associations and so on—approved by the Ministry of Culture and Recreation would not be taxable.

Mr. Foulds: Even if they had one who was a professional?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That is included in the act. Certainly we have no intention of changing it.

Mr. S. Smith: Final supplementary: I'm alarmed that the minister appears not to understand the implications of what he is doing. Does the minister recognize that, at the moment, if he gives the exemption to Canadian talent, there is then an incentive to book a Canadian act? One can either charge the same ticket prices as for an American act and make more profit or pass on the difference, in whole or in part, to the audience and hope to attract a larger audience and make more profit.

Either way it is a stimulus to the booking agent to hire the Canadian act and book it into the hall rather than the American one, under similar circumstances. Does the minister realize that is an incentive? Why is he taking that incentive away?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Has the member's agent had difficulty booking him lately?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have already indicated we will examine each one of these. Our intention is not to take that incentive away. I understand what the member is saying. I have already said in my statement that we will examine each one of these and we will see that fairness comes into play. I don't know what more I can do for the member.

Mr. S. Smith: You are creating confusion; put it back the way it was.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You are not aware of the confusion that existed out there before we brought this in.

WINDSOR METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL

Mr. McClellan: I would like, if I may, to go back to the Minister of Health with respect to Windsor Metropolitan Hospital. I want to ask the minister, notwithstanding his statement today that Mr. Justice Trainor agreed to his request for an adjournment, is it not a fact that Mr. Justice Trainor asked himself the question, and I quote him from the Windsor Star, which I assume is a quote from his report: "I have asked myself if it has been determined that an emergency endangering the lives of patients in fact exists and that in fact he ruled that on the basis of the evidence before him such an emergency did exist."

I ask the minister, is that not a fact, and if it is, will the minister admit that the bed allocation ratio is an arbitrary one which doesn't conform to the real needs of many hospitals and he ought, as a course of sanity, to re-evaluate the adverse effects of the cut-back program, restore those 25 beds and obviate the necessity for further litigation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the question of the general policy of allocation figures and formulae and so forth have been under discussion and will continue to be so in the social development committee, of which the honourable member is himself a member.

I have made certain arguments there and I can only repeat them today, but with regard to the wording, we do not have the judgement or decision from Friday. I understand it will be in the hands of the crown law officer some time this afternoon and, once we have had an opportunity to review it, then we can conduct ourselves accordingly.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask, by way of supplementary, whether the minister is aware that the evidence before Justice Trainor was not the only evidence to suggest he should re-examine his bed allocation ratios? I want to ask him whether he has seen the report of the coroner's jury into the death of Katarina Frydryk who died in St. Joseph's Hospital, according to the coroner's verdict, as a result of accidental strangulation due to compression of the throat by a safety vest. The accident occurred in the emergency department of St. Joseph's Hospital while the patient waited on a stretcher to be admitted as an inpatient.

One of the recommendations of that coroner's jury is that the Ministry of Health should re-examine the bed situation. How much evidence is he going to have to receive, and how many tragedies are going to have to occur before the minister acts responsibly as Minister of Health in this province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, no tragedy will knowingly be allowed to occur anywhere in the province. The honourable member knows that. The honourable member knows, too, that we would respond and will be responding to the recommendations of a coroner's jury. He knows that the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the University Teaching Hospital Association, two hospital planning bodies, are examining the bed situation in Metropolitan Toronto. As in many communities in regard to the situation around here, the matter is in the hands of local planning bodies, looking to come up with advice to us as to what is most appropriate for the future needs of the province or of the particular community.

I really don't intend to comment further on whatever was before the justice inasmuch as I do not intend in any way, as I said earlier, to prejudice the outcome of that application.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that the bed allocation at present at Windsor Metropolitan Hospital is below the limit he suggested? It is down to 3.49 and if they follow his suggestion it will be down to 3.03. Even the minister's officials suggested to him last day that the 25 beds remain open. Does the minister intend to follow that suggestion?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will only answer in this way: Of course, bed allocations are based on hospital centres and beyond that I can add no more at this time.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. McClellan: A question for the Minister of Education: Pursuant to her statement in the House of May 15, when she told us with respect to heritage languages that "the province is assuming the full cost of the heritage languages program," I want to ask the minister whether at the time of her statement she was aware that there was a reduction in existing grants to the Metropolitan Separate School Board, whether she acknowledges she had meetings with representatives of the separate school board in which they told her that the program cost $28 for a class of 25 as opposed to her offer this year of $21 per class of 25, and finally, whether she acknowledges that the Metropolitan Toronto School Board has advised her that their real cost was $23 per class of 25? If all of that is true and accurate, how can she tell the House that she is providing total funding when she knows at the time of her announcement that she wasn't providing total funding for the heritage languages program?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there was a careful examination of the statements which were provided by all of the boards involved in the heritage languages program. There was a very careful examination of the statements provided by the Metropolitan Separate School Board and the Metropolitan Toronto School Board. There were certain features included within those two statements which were not in fact directly related specifically to the heritage languages program which were not included in other statements.

There was discussion of this. Both of the boards understood that we were funding the heritage languages program per se and that is the reason that the decision was taken that the province would indeed cover the entire cost of providing the program. On average, this will more than supply the cost for many of the boards providing the program.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, I still don't understand what the minister is saying. Let me ask her bluntly, is she telling us that the Metropolitan Separate School Board and the Metropolitan Toronto School Board submitted information to her which she in her infinite wisdom deemed to be inaccurate? If so, will she give us the specifics of the figures which she disputes with the MSSB and the MTSB with respect to their real costs of the heritage languages program?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I did not say that they submitted inaccurate information. They submitted information which had in addition to the actual specific cost of providing the heritage languages program, other costs which could be construed as a part of the school program in ordinary circumstances, which was perhaps not an appropriate inclusion in the costing of the heritage languages program, which was what had been requested.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given that some boards offer the program during the school day and some offer it after school or on Saturday mornings, does the minister have two different sets of cost figures which take into consideration that two different kinds of boards operate in two different ways?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We are aware of varieties of methods of providing the course and are aware that indeed as a result of the inclusion within the so-called school day by the Metropolitan Separate School Board that there were certain modifications which they considered to be necessary. There was much discussion of this with representatives of the Metropolitan Separate School Board. The decision was taken that indeed it was reasonable to provide the cost, on average, of the delivery of the heritage language program—

Mr. McClellan: Yes, your version of the cost, not the real cost.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —in Ontario on the basis of the real costs of the program as defined by almost all of the boards which submitted their reports.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: Could the minister give us any information that she may have as to whether such boards as Ottawa, Metropolitan Toronto, Kapuskasing and others are going to receive one red cent more for their heritage languages program as a result of her May 15 memo?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I don't have those figures with me at the moment. It is my understanding that in most instances most of the boards will indeed receive more in support of the heritage languages program, because instead of being provided at the rate of grant of the board it is being provided at the level of 100 per cent of the cost of the program.

Mr. Grande: Could the minister get that information for us?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes.

[2:45]

LAND SPECULATION TAX

Mr. Epp: I have a question for the Minister of Revenue. I wonder if the Minister of Revenue is aware his officials are not reducing proportionately the amount of speculation tax demanded when a citizen of this province takes back a mortgage at the time of sale of a piece of property, and that when discharging that mortgage at a discount a year or so later he is expected to pay the full amount of speculation tax on the sale?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Without referring in depth to the legislation on this matter, it's my understanding—and I am sure this is what the member is referring to—if a mortgage has been taken and then the purchaser defaults and it goes back to the original owner, of course he is subject to speculation tax—if there's a profit, that is.

Mr. Epp: The problem is not that he's subject to speculation tax; the problem is that he's subject to the total speculation tax. In other words, the ministry is demanding money from citizens of this province in the form of speculation tax—

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister agree.

Mr. Epp: —on the amount far beyond what the actual person received in payment for the sale of that property. Does the minister not agree this is a dishonest way to collect speculation tax from citizens of this province, particularly when the speculation tax has already been rescinded and also when many large corporations in this province have been exempt from paying speculation tax?

Mr. Roy: Does the minister understand the question?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I really don't.

Mrs. Campbell: No, he doesn't.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would ask the member to provide me with the details on the complaint he has and I will have it looked into. At this point, I am really not in a position to say whether or not I disagree. I would like to have a lot more detail than he has given me.

PARK LAND ROAD PLAN

Mr. M. Davidson: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware of the Waterloo regional transportation plan which has an east-west arterial road running through land which was donated to the province to be used strictly for the purposes of providing park and recreational facilities for the citizens of that area?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Given that the land was accepted by the province for park purposes by order in council dated December 20, 1967, and given that there are letters on file from both former Premier Robarts and Premier Davis, and given that a much-honoured member of this House, former Speaker Allan Reuter, has said that "for the province to allow the use of this land as part of a highway is totally erroneous in my opinion," can the minister assure us the commitment to the donor made by this government will be upheld?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I would have to get some legal advice on that matter. As I am sure the honourable member—

Mr. Warner: You are going to spend half your life in court.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the details of this gift by Mr. Percy Hilborn who I think was not only one of our area's finest and most public-spirited citizens but I might add also happened to be a relative of mine.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Not necessarily in that order.

Mr. Breithaupt: Since I am particularly concerned that this action, if it proceeds, will be a disgraceful—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Breithaupt: —abuse to his memory, will the minister undertake to interview all of the interested parties in this matter before any decision is made by cabinet so that any precedent established will be done with the full knowledge of its future effects on other such possible philanthropic gifts?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't know of any application that is before cabinet for a decision at this time, although one may come forward. I am quite familiar with this matter and the feelings of the family of the donor. I believe it is the daughter of the gentleman who is a constituent and close friend of ours in Oakville.

As I recall the situation, this parcel of land was accepted by the province and was ultimately turned over to the conservation authority. I don't know at this time whether the covenants were on the land when it came to the province or when it was turned over to the conservation authority. I know there is a very decided opinion within the community as to whether this particular east-west artery should be built. That, I think, is a decision that has to be made by the transportation planners and the elected officials of the region of Waterloo and the city of Cambridge.

Mr. M. Davidson: Final supplementary: Will the minister, when he is reviewing the situation he has before him, take into consideration a letter to Dr. George Priddle, who is chairman of the Provincial Parks Council, which ends by saying, "Authority representatives"—meaning the conservation authority—"have also indicated that under these circumstances there was no possibility that the authority could release willingly any of the property for purposes of constructing a highway bypass"? That letter was signed by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller).

Hon. Mr. Snow: Again, I am not aware of that particular letter. We will look into that matter, as well.

HOSPITAL BOARDS

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Health: Does the minister believe it is appropriate that membership on the board of governors of a publicly funded hospital should be determined solely by a nominating committee, especially when the existing board of governors names the majority of members to that nominating committee? Would the minister not agree that in fact gives the existing board of governors literally total control over all future boards of governors? Is such a practice permissible in this province.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the bylaws passed by the board and/or approved by the membership of the hospital association set out a particular structure, and they are all different, then that is what would be followed. I don't know whether this is a hypothetical example or if it is one that is incorporated in the bylaws of a hospital that have been approved in one of those two manners, but it would have to be done according to the bylaws.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: To be specific, is it not true the St. Thomas-Elgin General Hospital has, in fact, passed such a bylaw and that bylaw has been forwarded to the minister for approval? Can the minister tell us whether or not he has supported or intends to support such a bylaw?

Mr. Roy: Doesn't that appear to you to be somewhat undemocratic?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I believe they have passed some bylaws—and I am not sure whether it includes that—which would have gone to the institutional division, who would then check to see whether they are, in fact, in conformity with the Public Hospitals Act. As long as they are not in conflict with the Public Hospitals Act, inasmuch as we do believe in local autonomy, they would be sent back as being approved.

Mr. Sweeney: Final supplementary: Would the minister not agree that if in fact such a procedure is put into effect, then any semblance whatsoever of democracy, or the possibility of dissenting voices becoming members of that board of governors, is eliminated?

Mr. Warner: The people are going to have to take you to court again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would want to think about the example, but I am sure the hospital board, representing as they do, the community, would not pass or propose any bylaws that were not in the interest of the hospital and the community. As I say, if they have submitted bylaws and if they have been returned to them as approved, they wouldn't come through me, they would go through staff. It would be on the basis that they had been checked against the Public Hospitals Act and found to be in no way in contravention of the act.

USE OF MATACIL

Mr. Foulds: In the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment a question. Has the minister's colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources, consulted with him, and has he justified to him the use of aerial spraying of 40,000 to 45,000 acres for spruce budworm in the Geraldton and Kirkland Lake districts with Matacil when there is increasing evidence from Maine, New Brunswick and Newfoundland that: (a) the spraying simply produces a bigger and better super spruce budworm and prolongs the epidemic; (b) the side toxic effects on other life forms, such as insects, animals and humans, are potentially hazardous, and (c) only about 50 per cent of the pesticide reaches its target because of wind and other meteorological conditions?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, my colleague has not discussed that with me, but I will be sure to send him a copy of Hansard and he will reply.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister not consider this a very serious matter and bring it directly to his colleague's attention in that it is the so-called non-active ingredients of the mix, such as nonylphenol, the solvent, and diesel oil, the emulsifier, which are suspected of contributing to the high number of cases of Reyes syndrome affecting children in New Brunswick and Quebec, rather than the active ingredient? Is he aware that the US Environmental Protection Agency withdrew the licence for Matacil in 1970?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would be very surprised if our Pesticides Advisory Committee has not considered the chemicals involved here. I will certainly consult with them, get their advice, as requested by the member, and then discuss the issue with my colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Will the minister assure the House that the use of those pesticides does not have any effect on an individual, causing Reyes syndrome?

Mr. Foulds: That's just what I asked.

Mr. Speaker: That question was already asked.

PHOTO ON DRIVER'S LICENCE

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Since the House passed enabling legislation more than a year ago for photographs on drivers' licences, will the minister report at what stage the implementation of that policy is? Is he contemplating using a procedure which will provide a second photograph or a negative for a number of photographs which would then be provided for Ontario Provincial Police or other law enforcement files? Is the minister aware of the concern among people interested in civil liberties that such would be and may be regarded as an intrusion similar to the filing of fingerprints of those persons not accused or convicted of crimes?

Hon. Mr. Snow: To take the second part of the question first, no decision has definitely been made yet as to which process will be used with respect to the photographs—whether it will be the instant photograph without a negative system or whether it would be the wet process where a negative would be on file. If that were the system to be used, I would be concerned, as the honourable member is, as to the security of that particular negative. That is certainly something I would want to look into.

To answer the first question, I have not yet got a definite date for the implementation of the photo on the driver's licence. Although I set it as a relatively high priority among a number within the ministry in our budgetary allocations this current fiscal year, we were not able to assign the necessary funds to this new initiative at the expense of ongoing programs within that division of the ministry. As we were not able to get the additional funding for the program, it has been delayed. But we are looking at it as one of our new initiatives in our budgetary planning for next year.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Since the minister must be aware that the recommendation from the select committee on highway safety was simply to cut down the number of people using drivers' licenses improperly, that is, a licence borrowed from somebody else while their own was suspended, and since the minister would then agree that it is for identification purposes and not law enforcement purposes otherwise, would he not agree that the policy for implementation should be for a procedure that provides a picture on the licence and no other? Would he not also agree that the $60 fee we pay for the licence of a vehicle might provide at least some of the money necessary for the implementation of this program?

Mr. Ruston: That should be enough.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't see any relationship whatsoever with the $60 fee. We are not photographing one's automobile and putting the picture on the registration.

Mr. Nixon: There is a relationship.

Mr. Roy: The minister's automobile would look better than him on the photo.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That might be possible. As I am sure the honourable member knows, all revenue raised through those processes goes to my colleagues, the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck). Getting it back from them is not very easy.

Mr. Nixon: You're like the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman). You have no punch.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Under any circumstances, I assure the member that the concerns he has expressed here have been ones we have been discussing. I think the process has been such that until we are ready to proceed with the program there is no need to make that final decision.

[3:00]

GLUTEN-FREE FOOD

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware that the price of gluten-free food used by children and others who suffer from the coeliac disease, has doubled in the last two months? Does he know this has been caused by a decision of the women's auxiliary at the Hospital for Sick Children no longer to do the retailing, handling and shipping, a service they were providing on a voluntary basis and which the Hospital for Sick Children has refused to continue?

What steps is the ministry taking to see that these kinds of food, which are about the equivalent of medicine, are available at something other than an exclusive price which many sufferers cannot afford?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will ask for a report from the president of the Hospital for Sick Children as to exactly what they are doing about that and will let the member know.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Might I inform the minister of the gravity of this situation when a nine-ounce loaf of bread has gone from $2.20 to $4.80? Would the minister fail to understand that the increase on these foods will cost people like the Ivan Weasners in Welland, who have three-year-old coeliac twins, something like $60 to $100 a month extra? Will he, through his ministry, provide sufficient funding to the Hospital for Sick Children so that they can continue the program at cost?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will look into the matter. I will also investigate how many of those things can be made in the home.

HOME CLOSURE

Mr. Blundy: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. I want to refer the minister to the impending closure of the home in Feversham and to ask him, particularly, if he is aware of the confusion that is going on in that area in the families of the patients who are being transferred from one home to the other, with no regard, really, for any kind of programming that might assist the people from the Feversham home?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Just for clarification, I wonder if the member is referring to a closing of a nursing home. Is that what he is referring to?

Mr. Blundy: It is a home for retarded children and adults. I would think the minister would be aware of it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I believe the facility the member is referring to is, in fact, a nursing home in which there are some mentally retarded residents who are being transferred. If that is the place he is referring to, and I believe it to be so, then I am aware of it. Our staff are working with the local association in that community in an effort to facilitate the relocation of those residents who are moving.

The reason I am a little less than clear on it is because of the reference only to the name of the facility. I am not sure I am thinking of the correct one, or whether the member is. I believe it is a nursing home.

Mr. McClellan: Perhaps neither of you is.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's possible.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: It may be a nursing home, but it does have a number of retarded people, both young and old. I would ask the minister what he is doing to alleviate the situation there, where the people are perceiving it to be as if these patients were pawns in an inter-ministerial chess game? There is great confusion among the relatives of these people.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have just received some clarification. It is, in fact, a home for special care which would be at the present time under the Ministry of Health. We are working with those families in an effort to find appropriate relocation for them in that community, and working with the local association for the mentally retarded.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Does the minister recall that he told the House on December 8, 1978, he would bring in a plan to develop the Canadian forestry and pulp and paper machinery industry in conjunction with his pulp and paper industry incentive plan, and that he would put that plan before the House this spring? It is now spring and I would like to ask the minister when he will be sharing his plan with us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to read exactly what I said at that time. I'm not sure that's a direct quote in that we would have presented a formal plan as such. If that was the impression I left then I should take this opportunity to correct it.

Mr. McClellan: What did you mean?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will say exactly what I meant. I meant any action the government takes in the pulp and paper industry will be directly tied to the machinery part of that industry. To that end the discussions that have been carried on with very many pulp and paper firms with regard to the Employment Development Fund have in each case included discussions with regard to sourcing of machinery in Canada. As we get a better feel for the amount and the type of machinery involved, then we will be able to go on to a second step. This would be to meet with the various companies that might be able to supply that machinery and encourage them to respond to what will then be an apparent market for that machinery.

Mr. Wildman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister commented last December 8: "... seeing if we can't put together enough people in industry to respond to what will obviously be a demand for that product and arrange for it to be made somewhere in Canada." Then further: "We would expect it to be before this House next spring. Or sooner."

The trade deficit on pulp and paper machinery increased in 1978 over 1977, leaving us with a trade deficit of $83.4 million, and we are importing close to 50 per cent of our needs for this machinery. Doesn't the minister consider it worth pursuing this machinery inventory plan with all the vigour he can muster rather than just discussions, especially as it could be the basis for developing a sound high-technology secondary manufacturing industry in the north?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now that I've had a chance to read a copy of my remarks on December 8, I know the member will agree that notwithstanding the way he posed the question today, I did not say I would be bringing forward a plan this spring to put together a machinery operation in the north. What I did say I will read from page 5837 on December 8, 1978. It was a response identical to the response I gave two minutes ago—that there's no point talking about pretending that an industry can grow up for the production of pulp and paper machinery, in the north or anywhere else, until we know the extent and size of the market there may be for that machinery.

When one is talking about very expensive and complex machinery, an industry can't grow up overnight relying upon the sales of one or two pieces of machinery that a particular firm might be able to build and supply. They are of course going to have to compete with long-established industry throughout the world which have the capability to build and sell those machines. I think it's only reasonable to look at that part of the market which may be in Canada and which we may have some influence over before we spend millions of dollars setting up an industry to respond to what may be a very limited and uneconomic market.

I am sure the member would agree with me that's the sensible way to approach this problem.

Mr. S. Smith: All you do is give away money.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that if he and the federal government are embarked on giving the pulp and paper industry millions and millions of dollars to upgrade their machinery or put new machines in, there should be some kind of commitment on their part to involve themselves with the government and spend it in Canada and buy equipment here, even if the government has to provide some incentive to some company to make that machinery in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I do agree wholeheartedly. In fact, in our early discussions—some of them are quite far down the road—it appears that in one of the major early pulp and paper propositions that will likely be approved by the board, I think the figure—I stand to be corrected—when I last inquired was that about 80 per cent of the machinery could and would be sourced in Canada, in accordance with a commitment they would give to us. That is, in fact, a commitment we seek to extract.

When a company says to us that is the maximum it can purchase in Canada, what we do is take the entire list of machinery it will be purchasing. We then go out and scour the market in Canada among potential suppliers and, if we locate someone who can make that particular machinery, we insist that as part of our grant it undertake to purchase that machinery as well.

The second part of the question was, would we give some money to some other firms if they needed that incentive to build those machines to supply that?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Not exactly.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I want my friend to have asked that.

I can safely say the answer to that question is yes—if the member had asked it in that way.

RADIATION IN FOOD

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. It relates more to his ministerial responsibility for food.

Has his ministry or any other ministry of the government of which he is aware, any study of food which might have been imported from the area of Three Mile Island, in the state of Pennsylvania, to evaluate the effect of the escape of radiation on the food in the area?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, we have not directly, ourselves; although we would co-operate with the government of Canada, which is responsible for all imported produce. I will be glad to check with them and get back to the member.

Mr. Bradley: Even if there is not a considerable amount of food imported—indeed, perhaps there is not any food imported from that specific area; I understand it's largely dairy products, which would not be imported—would the minister feel that the information that could be derived from American authorities would prove to be useful to his ministry and the government in the light of the fact that, with our nuclear industry here, there is always the possibility we could have a similar accident, and we would have ahead of time the information that would be useful to the people of Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: We do have ongoing discussions on all sorts of research and testing, not only at the provincial level and the federal level but also with our US counterpart on research; this sort of thing would be discussed at those conferences, which they have once a year.

MINISTRY AMALGAMATION

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Education. In view of the fact that her government has decided to stall the passage of Bill 19—the bill providing for the amalgamation of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education—by refusing to establish a select committee or standing committee on education that has the power to report recommendations to this Legislature, and in view of the fact that all the briefs presented so far have called upon the government to establish such a committee on education, could the minister give us the benefit of her opinion as to whether the amalgamation—which I understand is almost complete right now—is legal, given the fact that there has not been legislative approval for that amalgamation?

Secondly, could the minister explain why it is that she and her government are so afraid of public input on educational concerns across this province?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible for this area and a representative of the government, I can assure the honourable member that we have had a great deal of public input. I am delighted that the public input is being shared with the members of the opposition at this point. However, I have not as yet made any statement to the committee because, unfortunately, I have not been able to attend the committee hearings at a time when I would be able to tell them what the decision was regarding Bill 19.

It would not be entirely correct to suggest that the government is holding up passage of Bill 19. I would suggest that the chairman and the members of the standing committee on justice are those who have made the decision that they will go through an exercise which will delay the implementation of the bill.

Mr. Cooke: It's the only way we can get public input.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: At the present time, the ministry is functioning in a new and better-organized way. But I would remind the honourable members that both the deputy minister and the minister have responsibility for both portfolios, and we are continuing to function in that way. It is also my understanding—and I hope the honourable member will correct me if I am wrong—that that bill was passed in principle by this House with no recorded vote at all. Indeed, every one in the House at the time was supportive of the integration bill. The interesting exercise we're going through is going to be beneficial to the members.

[3:15]

Mr. Cooke: They were in support of the bill but not of the minister.

Mr. Grande: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a brief supplementary? The member's original was a five-part question. If he has a brief supplementary, I'll hear it.

Mr. Grande: I have a brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Are the minister and the Ministry of Education afraid her educational priorities are so totally wrong that she would not want the people of this province to bring reports to a committee of this Legislature on education?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no such fear.

FOREIGN PURCHASES OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Apparently, last week he revealed to the news media the results of his investigation into the foreign ownership of agricultural land in Huron-Kent and parts of Bruce county. He apparently indicated it was so minimal he was dismissing it as a dead issue. Perhaps he could enlighten this Legislature about his sources of information, on his survey. Why does this information not correspond to the many reports my colleagues and I are getting of the large tracts of land being purchased by foreign investors?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in fairness the figures I gave last week were, except for Huron township and Bruce county, given to the member in the estimates. We had those figures and we wanted to see he had them in the estimates.

We did a 1976 report on Kent county and we updated that Kent county report to 1978. That was up until three weeks ago. We did a report on Huron county in 1976 and compared it to Huron county in 1978 and there has been a slight increase in there. We also did Huron township in Bruce county. We haven't gone back prior to 1976 as far as figures are concerned but from 1976 to 1978 the increase in the member's county was some 1,500 acres. I wouldn't want to guess at the figures, but it's less than half of one per cent of all the land in Huron county.

How did we get these figures? We first went to the computerized farm tax reduction rolls and if anyone had a resident address outside Ontario, a non-resident address, we considered that foreign ownership. In many cases that could be Canadian-owned. It could be, for instance, someone who was living in Florida but still owned a farm back here, or was living in England and had a farm back here. They could still be Canadian-owned, but we accepted that as foreign-owned.

Second, we went to the registry office and checked with the registrar of the various registry offices in Huron county and in Kent county to get transfers. We also looked up numbered companies. In Huron county, there are a lot of numbered companies owned by fathers and sons. We took the numbered companies and checked them out. As I said the other day, all the numbered companies had Canadian directors except one from Alberta and one from Germany.

We did a random sample of about 10 per cent of all of Huron county of all registered partnerships. These were father and son partnerships and so forth. We didn't find any that were owned directly by non-resident people. That's not to say there are none.

I know what the member is coming to, but those were our sources of information. We also used the agricultural representatives in our particular areas.

I do know there has been foreign ownership of land in some areas and that is one of the reasons for the land transfer tax which makes it 20 per cent and which, I think, has had a great deal of bearing on the ownership of land by foreign buyers.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I always understood that if you have a point to make, you get up in this Legislature and make a point.

Mr. Speaker: A point of what?

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a point.

Mr. Speaker: We're not accepting points of view today, not at this point anyway. If the member feels it's a point of order or a point of privilege, I'll hear it.

Mr. Grande: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm dissatisfied with the answer the Minister of Education gave regarding the heritage language program and I wish to debate it at the proper time. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member knows he has to give reasons for his disenchantment in writing.

PETITION

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from 2,000 people, and I quote:

"Dear Miss Stephenson:

"We are shocked and dismayed by your recent proposal to reduce funding of the heritage languages program. This program was instituted after long years of struggle on the part of several community groups and has become a valid and important part of our children's education.

"Therefore, we most vigorously protest the proposed budget cuts for this program and strongly urge you to reconsider and rescind them."

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Just because they're not going to make a million dollars out of it, they call it a budget cut.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's just loss of profit.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Loss of profit, that's all.

MOTION

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing resources development committee be authorized to travel to Dryden on Wednesday, June 6, 1979, to visit the facilities of the Reed paper company and that the provisions of section 66 of the Legislative Assembly Act be not applicable.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

HALTON MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved first reading of Bill 119, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Halton.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this bill dissolves the five existing commissions in the region of Halton and establishes new hydro-electric commissions for the municipalities of Burlington, Halton Hills, Milton and Oakville. The bill is based on the principles of the Hogg committee as tabled in the Legislature in February 1975 and is substantially similar to previous restructuring acts in Waterloo, Peel, York and Niagara regions and Oxford county.

No later than January 1, 1980, all customers within each of the four municipalities will be supplied by the new commissions. There is a provision, however, for earlier implementation as a result of agreement between a new commission and Ontario Hydro.

This legislation has been reviewed by Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Energy in consultation with members of the local study team, the Association of Major Power Consumers of Ontario and the Ontario Municipal Electric Association. Discussions have also been held with the MPPs representing ridings in that region. On behalf of the government, I wish to express appreciation to the Halton local study team for its work.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 194 and 195 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2534.)

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Although notice hasn't been served previously, I wonder if the House would agree that we might call the three private bills that appear on the order paper; that is, orders 42, 43 and 44. If there are no objections, I will proceed to call them.

Perhaps while I'm on my feet I will remind members that the House is in session this evening and tonight we are taking into consideration orders 35 and 36.

If there is no objection, could we proceed with the private bills?

Mr. Speaker: Do we have agreement?

Agreed.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TOWN OF NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE ACT

Mr. Ruston, on behalf of Mr. Kerrio, moved second reading of Bill Pr1, An Act respecting the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

DELILA CONSTRUCTION LIMITED ACT, 1979

Mr. Kennedy, on behalf of Mr. Jones, moved second reading of Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Delila Construction Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

BOROUGH OF EAST YORK ACT, 1979

Mr. J. Johnson moved second reading of Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Borough of East York.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

House in committee of supply.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to continue with the comments I wish to make leading into discussion of the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

On Friday last, I emphasized to the minister the great responsibility and the great opportunity he and his government have, in conjunction with the federal government, to promote a joint economic strategy for this nation and for this province. If they took the right measures they could go a long way to alleviate the serious unemployment situation, provide a program of import replacement, introduce new environmental measures and so on.

I also pointed out that this government, both on its own and through its relationships with the municipalities and the federal government, had brought about a widening of the gap between the poor and the affluent in this province and they should take the necessary steps to reverse that trend so that when we are in a period of rather hard times the brunt of that should not be borne by those in the lower income but there should be some greater equality in our society.

I agree generally with the minister's comments with regard to the constitution and our relationship with our sister province of Quebec, but I warn him about getting trapped in terminology such as "sovereignty association," which may not have an exact meaning. I guess the convention of the PQ over the past weekend emphasizes that danger. Sovereignty association has a different meaning now than it had just a few short days ago. I suggest it can change perhaps half a dozen times in interpretation between now and the time the actual vote takes place. All I am saying to the minister, really, is let's make it clear that we'll never be party to negotiating any breakup of this nation, but I think we should stay away from hard stands on elusive terminology.

When the debate concluded on Friday, I was talking about the need for a legislated revenue-sharing act dealing with the sharing of revenues between the province and the municipalities. I suggested it's desirable to provide adequate revenue for the municipalities, and I pointed out that the share of their expenditures they are having to raise from property taxation has increased rather substantially over the last five years. We should have the revenue-sharing legislation to assure municipalities that that kind of decrease is not going to take place, and in addition to that to provide some orderly planning for the future.

All I can say today is that there is another reason it's desperately needed in this province. They have legislated revenue-sharing in BC and in Saskatchewan. The reason we need it here is to re-establish the credibility of this government with the municipalities of this province. The minister's predecessor—and I'm not blaming the present minister for it, though he does represent that government—reinterpreted the Edmonton commitment some two or three times before finally abolishing it. I could take the time here, and perhaps should take the time although I won't do it at this time, to read the critical comments of the provincial-municipal liaison committee when those changes were made, when the government unilaterally made those changes in the Edmonton commitment and when it abandoned that commitment.

I should read through those now for members, although I won't take the time as they have been read into the record before in this House, those critical comments of the provincial-municipal liaison committee when the government over there abandoned market value assessment after having spent something like $100 million to $150 million of taxpayers' money on the reassessment program.

I could read the comments of the provincial-municipal liaison committee and others from this year. The government broke its commitment to the municipalities when it promised them that it would increase transfers this year in an amount equal to the expenditure of the government, then when it came time to actually apply that the government left out its own capital expenditure, which had increased by something like 12 per cent, and transferred to them only five per cent instead of the six per cent which they had every right to expect under the commitment which the government had given them.

The minister has indicated in a statement in the House that the transfer now will be in the neighbourhood of 5.4 per cent instead of six per cent, but it is still below the commitment he gave to the municipalities. I can just say that in my more than 30 years of being involved one way or another in municipal government, most of it in an elected position, and during my service in this House, I have never seen municipal associations have less faith in the words of a government than they have in this government.

Apart from the merits of legislated revenue-sharing, the government desperately needs it to establish its own credibility. I suggest if it isn't done it's going to take years to re-establish that credibility. I suggest the government is not just going to have the time, it is not going to have those years to re-establish it.

I point out again that it does not necessarily cost the government anything to have a legislated revenue-sharing policy or a legislated revenue-sharing act. You can write anything into it that you wish. If you feel you are so short of money now that you can't possibly increase the amount the government is giving them, at least they would be able to have the guarantee to know that it would not go below that next year. The minister says he wants flexibility; I suggest it is the kind of flexibility to reduce it again further next year that the minister should not have.

There is another matter I want to mention. I disagree very strongly with this government's policy—and I guess it is the minister's policy too—to leave the municipal finance branch and the intergovernmental finance and grants policy branch in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. I do not see how the minister can possibly have the stature in dealing with the municipalities and municipal associations in this province if he does not even have a budget within his own ministry; if he has to go cap in hand, any time he wants additional funds, to the Treasurer of this province.

I think it was Baron Rothschild who once said something to the effect, "If I can have control of the money in a country I don't care who makes its laws." That applies to the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs; if some other ministry has control of this ministry's money—of course, it is all in the same government—it does not give the minister the direct application of policies and the right to change and reinterpret policies, if you will, that he would have if he had the budget as, incidentally, practically all other ministries have in his government. I intend to pursue this a bit further.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Were you quoting Rothschild?

Mr. Swart: Yes, I was quoting Rothschild.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'd better stay and listen. This could be an enlightening experience. He is turning over in his grave now.

Mr. Swart: Within this context, if the Minister of Industry and Tourism had been listening, he would realize it would not do anything to enhance his own government.

There is one further suggestion I want to make to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and I hope he will consider this suggestion seriously. If I could, I would also like to have his attention for a moment.

It is my view, and I think I hold it with some validity, that the planning branch of the Ministry of Housing should now be transferred to his ministry and that he should become responsible for all land-use planning in this province. I think it is understood that planning is a very fundamental responsibility of municipalities; practically all other aspects of municipal operation—the provision of other services—are tied in with the whole issue of planning.

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is much closer to local government in this province than is the Minister of Housing. The decisions that are made with regard to planning, the approvals which the government has to give, I believe should be made by the minister who is closest to municipal government, who has the most dealings with municipal government, and who has the greatest understanding of the problems of municipal government. That certainly is not the Minister of Housing, because, apart from planning—and even including planning—the majority of municipalities in this province do not have any contact whatsoever with the Minister of Housing.

Therefore, I would very much like to see that branch brought under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, because—if I dare say this—I believe the minister has the qualities and is the type of person who could administer the Planning Act—which is always difficult to administer—in a fair and yet perhaps a firm manner, as is certainly required with planning in this province.

In conclusion, let me say that whether it is a case of credibility, whether it is a case of adequate transfers to municipalities, whether it is using the government's clout to improve the economic situation, or whether it is fairness in taxation and the provision of services, the record of this ministry—which, of course, previously was a combined ministry for the last three years—is a dismal one. I say it is a long road back. I say to the new minister that I urge him to pick up the suggestions from this party, start on that road towards a better relationship and a more adequate funding and more adequate direction for local government.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We will proceed with vote 601, item 1.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a personal point? The two opposition parties have two different critics for this ministry. For instance, the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) has the interprovincial and the federal-provincial affairs, while I have municipal affairs. The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) has the federal-provincial affairs and the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) has the municipal affairs. So I am wondering whether it is permissible to have four speakers make opening statements with respect to this, rather than only two?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I think so. I had overlooked that point. That seems reasonable. I would, however, draw the member's attention to vote 602, which is the intergovernmental affairs program. That is the one in which we would hope the members could keep most of their debate and questions concerning federal relationships. But in view of the reminder from the member for Waterloo North of the split personality of this ministry, I would then presume the member for Ottawa East wishes to proceed at this point.

Mr. Roy: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your indulgence.

I would remind you of the reason for needing this: the minister also, in making his opening statement, divided his remarks into two parts. He talked about local government and then he talked about federal-provincial relations.

The critics in the Liberal Party at least are divided on logical lines; I cannot speak for my colleagues to my left, but it makes sense to us that federal-provincial relations, the unity of Canada and that sort of thing, would require the full-time work of a minister. We feel there should be another minister taking care of relations with local governments.

I have read the minister's speech and there are a lot of good things in it. I read especially the part dealing with national unity, federal-provincial conferences, the minister's approach to the Quebec referendum, sovereignty association. I would agree with most of what the minister said in his speech. In my opinion, Canada is approaching a crisis situation, and I suggest the unity issue is more important than ever now after the recent federal election. The main support for one of the major parties is in the province of Quebec but they happen to be in opposition, whereas the party in government has very little support in that province. I suggest that is going to be a very serious problem.

The new Prime Minister has tried to correct this problem by appointing—I haven't had the official word on this, but I understand there has been one appointment from the Senate. That doesn't really change very much in the sense that one has always had a Senate appointment anyway. I don't know what portfolio this senator was given. I don't know if he is a leader in the Senate—

Hon. Mr. Wells: He is Minister of Justice.

Mr. Roy: Flynn?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Your colleague, Bob de Cotret, is closely involved within the Senate now as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Roy: The minister has got to be kidding; oh my God.

Mr. Epp: You never know who's going to come out on top in these things.

Mr. Roy: He thought he had lost the election, Mr. Chairman. Can you imagine that, having a political career? Only Joe Clark has had a career that—

[3:45]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will refrain from comment.

Mr. Roy: Only Joe Clark has had a career that has risen on a sharper scale than Bob de Cotret. A few years ago he was just a speech writer in Richard Nixon's office—that's the other Nixon, the one in the US. Now, as I understand from the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, he has been sent to the Senate and is a cabinet minister as well.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He was called to the Senate.

Mr. Roy: Getting back to my point, you can understand that even with these appointments there will be far fewer ministers from the province of Quebec or French-speaking ministers who will be able on a consistent basis to go to the province of Quebec and carry the federal flag, as has been the case under Prime Minister Trudeau. I'm not making any value judgement about the respective qualities of Trudeau or of a Conservative government as opposed to a Liberal government. I'm just saying I perceive that to be a major problem; and it is a problem that is clearly going to be exploited by Rene Levesque, we see him doing it right now.

Not long ago, as you will recall, the conflict seemed to be constantly between Levesque and Trudeau. Levesque couldn't stand Trudeau and was knocking him down at every opportunity. Now he is going to take the approach that, "My good pal, Pierre Trudeau, has been rejected by English Canada." Hopefully that is not going to wash, but there is going to be a serious attempt by the Parti Quebecois to say that the last federal election was basically a rejection by English Canada of "one of ours." In other words, "My chum, Trudeau, was rejected by English Canada; therefore the federal election confirms what we have been talking about all this time, that there are two Canadas and that French Canada voted one way and English Canada voted the other way."

That is a facile explanation and I don't perceive the election in those terms, but certainly it is going to be exploited by Levesque. I mention this because I think this minister—and I don't like to throw flowers in too easy a fashion—would make an excellent minister in charge of intergovernmental affairs. I consider that to be an important portfolio at this time. At this juncture in Canada's history we could use a minister taking care of federal-provincial relations on a full-time basis; taking care of the constitution and putting forward Ontario's position, because Ontario's position is going to be the most important one at this point.

I suspect Ontario is going to be the key province in all of this. When Levesque talks about sovereignty association in Quebec, obviously he is talking about association with Ontario. I don't think association with the other provinces would matter very much to him, he is talking about Ontario. The major trade exchanges are between Ontario and Quebec, so Ontario's position becomes extremely important.

I am somewhat saddened in these circumstances that when Ontario's position is extremely important and when it must give leadership this minister, who is in charge of what I consider to be as important a ministry as any existing now in government at this juncture of our history, is caught up with the day-to-day affairs of local municipalities. I don't want in any way to denigrate relationships with municipalities, as I think they are very important. The fact remains, however, that it requires a full-time minister to take care of that.

In looking at the estimates for this ministry I see the amount of money going to local municipalities. I understand there is more money on that side because of transfer payments, et cetera, but the fact remains that this is a very important ministry. I would suggest that most of the minister's work is caught up in dealing with municipalities and not in giving leadership in the area of constitutional reform, relationships with other provinces, and finally on the relationship with the federal government.

I say this, and I don't think I can say it often enough, I think it's patently unfair when I look at the split of different ministries existing presently in this cabinet and consider the relationships. For instance, just behind you is the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) who claims he doesn't have very much to do and his ministry should be phased out. There's a fellow who is doing that, and meanwhile here is a minister who has to take care of municipalities, federal-provincial relations, interprovincial relations and so on; I don't understand that.

I look at these policy secretariats as well—and I don't want to offend my friend, the minister of the north, Mr. Brunelle—but I really do think, when I consider the allocation of responsibilities between various ministries, somehow I come to the conclusion the Davis government has not fully realized the importance of constitutional reform and the leadership Ontario can give at this juncture in the history of Canada. I think it's sad.

I would trust, in spite of the fact the establishment has been built up and the ministry has been built up, it is not too late to say we have one minister who's in charge of looking after federal-provincial relations, one minister who can be the voice of Ontario giving leadership in the unity debate. I think the present minister, Mr. Wells, would be an excellent minister to do that, but unfortunately I suspect most of his time is caught up. I can only come to the conclusion that somehow the Premier (Mr. Davis) has not given the ministry, or this area at this time, the importance it deserves. I'm saddened by that.

The other thing of concern to me is what is happening now on federal-provincial conferences. We have heard just recently that Claude Morin, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in the Parti Quebecois government, has said there should be no further federal-provincial conferences until the referendum. I consider that to be idiocy. He's saying he doesn't want to have federal-provincial conferences because it might muddy the waters as far as the referendum is concerned. If you don't have federal-provincial conferences the main thing you're going to be saying to the province of Quebec is: "There have been no results. Since the election of Joe Clark there have been no federal-provincial conferences; and obviously the reason we didn't have any is because we wouldn't accomplish anything anyway." He's asking for one thing; he's going to be reinforcing his own argument when he's asking the people of Quebec to vote for sovereignty association.

I think Ontario should take the lead, and if possible we should take advantage of a new momentum now that there has been a change of government federally. I say this with a certain amount of concern, because I'm not that optimistic, personally, about Joe Clark, I really am not; but the fact remains the man should be given an opportunity to see what he can do. Given these circumstances possibly he could work with some of the provincial premiers. I suspect nobody can work with Levesque, because as long as he talks about sovereignty association it's going to be awfully difficult to arrive at some unanimity before he has his referendum.

Nevertheless, I think leadership should be provided by Ontario to see we have a federal-provincial conference as soon as possible now that we have a new Prime Minister. I think the Premier, through the minister—or possibly the minister wants to do it—should advise his national leader of Ontario's approach to constitutional reform.

First of all, he has to brief Joe Clark on Ontario's exact position. It was obvious during the television debate that Joe just didn't know what Bill Davis had said at the federal-provincial conference in February, he just didn't know. The Premier or this minister should advise the new Prime Minister of Canada that repatriating the constitution should be done unilaterally if you have to do it. That's what Bill Davis said. Joe didn't seem to be aware of that. In other words, hopefully the position taken by Ontario will be supported by your national leader.

This is an important step. The approach taken or suggested by the previous Prime Minister was something that was positive, without attaching it to any amending formula. Let's not muddy the waters there. I think on that basis we should make sure that Bill Davis and Joe Clark are on side on that issue.

We should make sure, as well, that the new Prime Minister is aware of the Ontario government's position in relation to enshrining fundamental rights, because I don't think the approach taken by Ontario is something that Joe Clark agrees with at this point. As I understand Joe Clark's position, he sort of agrees basically with the Pepin-Robarts report that if there's any enshrining of rights, especially language rights, in the constitution it should be done on the provincial level, with only provincial consent that they can opt in.

I really think the new Prime Minister's position has been somewhat vague and somewhat uncertain in that area. I think it's an opportunity for this minister, possibly for the Premier, to get him on side on this, to see that the new Prime Minister agrees with Ontario's position. As I understand it—and the minister can correct me—I think it was Ontario's position that they wanted to enshrine fundamental rights in the constitution, including language rights, at least in the area of education. That's how I interpret Ontario's position.

By the way, I think you could go a step further; your enthusiasm should not be so moderate. You should move in, maybe, in the area of justice as well, or government services. You could go a step further; it would be an important step.

I'm not sure that the new Prime Minister is really on side on this point and I think it would be important for Ontario to advise him of what our position is.

Ontario's approach to the constitution—I don't intend to embarrass you and go through the whole history of it. I would just remind you that if the people of Quebec have some difficulty in perceiving what Ontario's position is, it's with some reason.

I can recall after the election of Rene Levesque, back in November 1976, that Bill Davis really didn't know what was up. He said: "It's business as usual. There's nothing to worry about." I can recall his trips to the Quebec Carnival, not really being too sure of which side to go on. I guess he didn't think that Rene Levesque and the Parti Quebecois were serious about their approach or about their policies, or that they were coming forward with a referendum.

It took basically two years. It's only in the last year, at the end of 1978 that the Premier has come down hard on the fact that sovereignty association, or at least association with sovereignty, is not something that's negotiable by Ontario.

I think the minister says it well. I've read his comments in his speech and I agree with most of the things he says. I agree that it's somewhat misleading the public of Quebec for Levesque to think he can have all the benefits of independence along with the benefits of association. I think with association comes the responsibility of federalism. You can't have it both ways. I think it's important that Ontario's position come down clear on that point.

I was pleased to see as well—because I've heard the Premier basically talk in a negative sense on that issue, saying sovereignty association is not negotiable, period. But we should talk about something that is positive. We should help the federal troops in Quebec.

I think it should be very clear and I think the minister makes it clear—he refers to Ryan in his speech—we should make it clear to the people of Quebec that we are for something positive as well, that we in Ontario believe in constitutional reform. We believe, for instance, in Quebec's right or in giving them the tools to protect their language and their culture, and so on. There are changes that are needed in this constitution that's 112 years of age.

I think it's important that the message doesn't get across to Quebec—and I'm afraid that happens very often—that Ontario is only for the status quo, that we're prepared to continue with the situation that has existed for so long. I think it's clear that the message go to the people of Quebec, go to the majority of Quebecers who still believe in federalism, that we are prepared to negotiate, that we are prepared to participate in changing and reviving, in having a constitution which would represent the society of the 1980s and not only that of 100 years ago. The only fundamental principle we think must be continued is that we start from a premise of federalism. That's where Levesque's position becomes untenable and that's where we fail to accept it. His premise is based on independence and he cannot have it both ways.

Some people like to think that Ryan's position is somewhat that of sovereignty or independentiste by just another word. It really is not. His basic, fundamental premise is that of federalism, but he believes in fundamental and basic changes.

That's the message that Ontario should be sending to Quebec. We should emphasize that we not only say that sovereignty association is not negotiable, but we should say it is not negotiable on those terms. We should say that amending the constitution by making it responsive to the Canada of the 1980s and to the needs and requirements of the people of Quebec and other provinces is something that Ontario believes in, as long as the basic premise is that of federalism.

The other area where I'm critical of Ontario, is that of late the Premier has been quick to condemn Mr. Levesque about so many of his approaches. I don't disagree with that stand, but when I view the other federal-provincial conferences and I see the positions the other Premiers take, I find the fact that the other Premiers are of the same political stripe, or at least under the title of Conservative, seems to be somewhat of an impediment for Ontario to take an approach and to condemn some of the approaches taken by some of the other Premiers.

It's all right to call Rene Levesque a separatist and that sort of thing. He comes up front and doesn't mince words, he says that is his position. But I sometimes wonder about the approach Premier Lougheed in Alberta has taken. If we were to accept what Premier Lougheed is asking for, as I understand it he wants absolute or darn near full control or jurisdiction over natural resources, and even international trade and international relations with other countries. It's important that Ontario re-emphasize federalism not only on behalf of the province of Quebec or on behalf of Rene Levesque, but on behalf of some of our western colleagues.

I have never been so disappointed as I was after attending the last two federal-provincial conferences, not only because very little progress was made but because I sometimes sat there and thought there were 10 different countries talking to each other. We were not talking about the same country. The spirit of federalism was not only lacking from Rene Levesque, I thought it was lacking from certain other Premiers. I name Lougheed, but Lyon in Manitoba does not inspire confidence for federalism either.

It's important, if Ontario is to give leadership and if Ontario is to show the way, that our approach should not look in just one direction, to the east. We should be looking to the west and we should state that with respect to some of the approaches taken by people who profess to be for federalism, if we were to accept what they're suggesting in practice we might as well forget about the country, because this country will not stay together if there is serious disparity from one province to the next province. I'm afraid that is what would happen if we were to accept all of the requirements or to accept all the demands, of some of the provincial premiers.

There is another thing I want to be a bit critical about. I've said this many times to the minister and I've certainly said it many times to the Premier. It's important, if Ontario is to have credibility with the people of Quebec, that this government be seen as doing something.

One of the fundamental suggestions Ontario made at the last federal-provincial conference was for the preservation of the unity of a Canada wherein our bilingual and multi-cultural heritage can flourish.

But that's not the picture of Ontario. I know great progress has been made here; and a lot of the credit has to go to this minister and to some of his colleagues. Many of the things that have happened have gone unnoticed at times. I come back to the overall strategy, the strategy of the Premier of this province, who keeps insisting, as he gives rights to the French minority in this province, that he does it in a very subtle way; but when he refuses them, he does it with a lot of flair and a lot of publicity and so on.

The perception of Bill Davis in the province of Quebec is more of the guy who denied, for instance, requests by the Franco-Ontarian Association about, let's say making French an official language. That's not a stand I particularly agree with, but there was an awful lot of publicity about that stand last year. The denial of the Premier was not one of, "Look, we can have problems; there are practical implications;" the denial of it was brutal and it was harsh.

Just like his approach a year ago, last June, in relation to a bill I presented in the House, a bill that was extremely moderate. There were 100 options for the Premier and the government to take; but no, he did it with flair and pizzazz and as brutally as possible; to the point where he in fact distorted what the bill represented. That was the message that went back to the province of Quebec.

If one is asked by one's friends in Quebec: "What progress have you made? [We hear that Davis has done this and that"; and one says, "Do you realize that just a few weeks before the rejection of Bill 89"—the bill I presented—"there was an amendment to the Judicature Act which was passed in the House, possibly the single most important piece of legislation for minorities in Ontario since the Education Act back in 1967-68." They haven't heard about it. They didn't hear about this amendment that would guarantee rights to the minorities in our courts; they haven't heard about it.

If you were to say to me those are the circumstances of political life; I will say to you that's not the case, I consider it to be part of an approach.

I come back to this point: It may be good politics in Ontario—God knows after 37-some years in power you people seem to know something about staying in power and getting votes in Ontario—but the fact remains that if it's good politics in Ontario sometimes it's not very good politics on the national level; sometimes, when forces are working towards the division of the country, it's important that the national scope take some precedence.

That's why I am critical of the approach and I think this minister has a role to play in this. I will give you another example. I think it's going to be important in the referendum debate, extremely important, that we have the French minority in this province as an ally in the debate for federalism.

Look what has happened, again recently. As far back as the Mayo report, that was two or three years ago, it was suggested that in Ottawa-Carleton there should be a homogeneous French-language school board. That was accepted unanimously by the school boards, by the councils of various municipalities in the Ottawa area, by various leaders. It was accepted by almost everyone. Of all these suggestions from Mayo, it was probably the one that had the most unanimity.

Do you know what? This government, in a green paper, rejected it. Professing to send out a green paper to try to get some consensus in the Ottawa-Carleton area, they said, "We want a consensus, we want people to make up their minds." There was a consensus on the issue, yet that was the only issue that was rejected by the government.

That issue is going to come back; that issue is not going to die. Again, just last week, the Carleton school board, the Ottawa public school board, stated they considered "the suggestion in the green paper on education in Ottawa-Carleton is not workable"; that what they call the "French component" in the schools is not going to be a working proposition. In fact the Carleton school board has set out which schools should be divided. It has done the work of the ministry; yet I suspect it's going to be rejected again.

There is a lot of publicity about this in the province of Quebec, and these are the things that chip away at the credibility of this Premier and this government. I don't take any particular delight in saying that. All I am saying is it is extremely important that not only your words have credibility but your actions as well. Your words will have far more credibility if they are backed up by action. This approach, when giving something you do it suddenly and when you refuse it you do it with a lot of pizzazz, is not something that is very beneficial in the overall debate about national unity.

I think just last week in the Toronto Star there was some talk about the proposal in the throne speech about debating a resolution on national unity in this Legislature. It is something we could have expected sooner, since 1976 in fact. In case anyone has doubts about the approach of this party or the approach of this member about such a debate, we have always looked forward to it. A lot of things have been debated in this House which we think have had far less importance than a debate such as this.

Our approach throughout has been that if we are going to have that sort of debate we can have substantial unanimity. We can have much positive input by a variety of members on such a debate; but for God's sake let's have it at a time when it can have maximum impact. Having waited three years for the debate, why not have it at a time when it can have maximum impact.

The time for that, of course, is as close to the referendum as possible. Having waited this long, I don't see what the hurry is in proceeding with it. If anyone has any doubts about whether we are in favour of stalling it, it is not a matter of stalling it, it is a matter of having Ontario's position clearly and forcefully set forward and giving it maximum impact.

Throughout this referendum debate in Quebec, and we have just seen it over the weekend, it is obvious the approach is a very simple one. The Parti Quebecois is proceeding in steps on their move towards independence. They are watering down. It is obvious that it is most important to them to have a "yes." In other words, the answer is far more important than the question to the Parti Quebecois, so they are going to water the question right down.

There is one thing they are obviously going to have to be saying in connection with sovereignty association. Parizeau has said this and Levesque has said it repeatedly; that there is no way Ontario will not bargain, because it is in the province's best economic interest. It should be very clear, as the minister said in his speech, they just can't have it both ways. We should say that as close as possible to the referendum; and it would be most forcefully put if it were said in a debate and it received unanimous support.

This has been our approach. If there has been some delay in bringing on this resolution, so be it. We have waited three years for it, let's have it at a time when we can have maximum impact. That is the approach I feel should be taken.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your courtesy in letting us proceed in this fashion; hopefully we will have something further to say as the estimates proceed.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure and a privilege for me to participate in discussion of these estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs as the municipal affairs critic for this party.

The minister is well aware that when his ministry was set up almost a year ago the spokesmen for this party were saying to the government that we need a separate ministry for municipal affairs. The minister is also well aware that municipal organizations and leaders of those organizations have been saying that for a long time.

[4:15]

I think the record of the ministry during its first nine and a half months, with the number of problems that are facing the two sides of the ministry as they have been described by the previous speaker, suggests that the idea that we need a separate ministry for the municipal area is still very valid. I feel that it's in recognition of that that my party has stuck with a separate critic for municipal affairs and I am very privileged to have been appointed to that position.

As the minister is aware, it's only seven weeks since I left the municipal arena myself, and while the municipality that I left may not be as great, or should I say gargantuan, as that from which the parliamentary assistant came, the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, I think that the town of Stoney Creek is an auspicious municipality in its own way.

Certainly in terms of its involvement and its leadership, I have to say that I have a great deal of respect for its mayor, Gordon Dean, who has provided leadership to the council of Stoney Creek. He and I differ on a great number of issues, just as I differ with the positions that are taken by members of the other side of the House, but nevertheless I have a great deal of respect for him and I hope that over the past two and a half years when I served on his council he at least learned from me that members of this party do not have horns and can make a useful contribution.

I also want to associate myself with the praise that was heaped upon the officials of the new ministry by my colleague, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart). He makes those comments so much better than I do that I will keep my remarks to associating myself with them. I think the ministry has certainly made some steps forward.

When the minister came to speak to the Association of Municipalities of Ontario at their annual meeting last summer he had only been in office literally a matter of hours. I remember he talked to that conference about what he saw as the three Cs. As I recall they were communication, co-operation and something else that temporarily slips my mind. I think the minister is making a very real effort in those areas, but I think the minister is also aware that there is a quagmire ahead and that unless the direction of the government takes some very serious changes then that kind of co-operation, that kind of communication cannot continue simply because the morass of problems facing our municipalities are going to overwhelm him and overwhelm his ministry. I think that would be unfortunate.

The problem of money is always the problem that's put first, and I regard that as somewhat sad, because I don't think money is everything, and I don't think money will buy everything. But unfortunately, with the abandonment of the Edmonton commitment, with the plaything that municipalities appear to have become in the eyes of the government, I think we really are heading into some problems that do depend on dollars.

It seems to me that property taxes have become in the eyes of the government just another form of provincial government revenue. They have joined sales tax, gasoline tax, liquor tax, tobacco tax, corporation tax, land transfer tax and all the other kinds of taxation that we have in this province as a mechanism for the provincial government to raise revenue. They are no longer related to the cost of services in a municipality.

They no longer help to provide residents with those local improvements, with those local facilities and with those local services that residents believe property taxes provide them with. The whole grant structure, the whole game that we are now playing since the government got out of the commitment it had made to municipalities, means that we really are seeing property taxes as just another way for the provincial government to aim towards balancing the books.

I think that policy is wrong and I hope that the minister in the years to come will consult with his colleague, the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), and with the others in the cabinet who are concerned about this area and come to grips with it. Of course I hope property taxes and grants to municipalities will become enshrined in legislation, as my colleague has suggested. If that is not possible, I urge the minister to look at making a new commitment to municipalities, so they know where the province stands, so they know what sort of money they can expect next year and the year after, and so property taxpayers can judge the government on the basis of a commitment it is making rather than on a policy that changes from year to year. It is only by means of that kind of organized commitment that municipalities can conduct the planning necessary for their future.

I very seriously believe municipal government is the most important form of government for the property taxpayers of this province. Municipal government provides people with services that are very visible to them and very close to them. After consultation with many of my colleagues, and I am sure it is exactly the same on the other benches, I know a lot of the problems, probably the majority of problems that are coming to the members from their constituents, are based in some way on services to which the municipal level of government has input.

I would like to see the province enshrine in legislation a constitution, if you like, for the municipalities of this province, with terms of reference that state generally, but clearly and concisely, what the relationships between municipal government and provincial government, and between municipal government and people, are to be for now and for the future. I think if that approach were taken many of the hassles we get into in municipal government and with regard to municipal government could be avoided.

If I can just take the example of annexation, which is one that is very close to the hearts of many who live in close proximity to our larger urban centres, and which in a sense is the heart of the problem many regional municipalities are facing at the present time—except within a regional municipality it is not called annexation, it is part of the regional review process; but it still involves shifting municipal boundaries in order to move people from one municipality to another without physically moving their homes.

The government has been unable to come to grips on how to deal with municipal boundaries, with annexation, because there is no philosophy lying behind it. If we understood there was one sort of municipal government for urban areas and another sort of municipal government for rural areas, then rural municipalities would know if they permitted urban development within their municipality the boundaries would be shifted in order to move the new urban growth from a rural municipality to an urban municipality; but we don't know that.

If we knew annexation was to be decided by a vote of the people who lived in the municipality from which land is being annexed, then we could set up our procedures; but that is not what is happening. If we knew decisions were to be based on the majority view in the whole of the area concerned, then people in rural municipalities would know whenever a request for annexation came up they would lose because their voice would be outweighed by the voice of those who live in the city; but we don't know that either, though that appears to be what is happening at the present time.

We can play around with procedures, we can play around with the Ontario Municipal Board and with hearings, and with public participation and everything else, but unless we have the guidelines under which these things are to happen, then the battles are going to continue. The incredible expense to taxpayers of hearings and lawyers and everything else is going to continue and we are not going to make any progress in dealing with the fundamental questions.

In the minister's opening statement he made reference to the regional review that is being considered at present in one municipality in southern Ontario, but he conveniently forgot the fact that there have been regional reviews in several others and that there are other regions now waiting for a review. I am thinking in particular of Haldimand-Norfolk, which is the subject of some legislation on the order paper.

We have a problem in regional municipalities right now in that neither the people in the urban part of those municipalities nor the people in the rural part are satisfied with the structure that exists. I commend the minister for his comments about the review that is being considered now, because at least we are talking about public participation. But the world did not start on the day the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs was created, nor did government policy change dramatically on that day—at least as far as I am able to determine.

I want to suggest to the minister that he has to accept some responsibility for his government's policy over the past seven years since regional governments were first touted in a big way in this province. He also has to answer to the people who live in every regional municipality we have now as to what the future holds and as to how the problems they are facing are going to be solved.

Literally millions of dollars have been spent on reviews for the regions I am concerned about. Those reviews have been the subject of a tremendous amount of public discussion, and they now appear to be lying on the shelf, with one or two very small points having been implemented. The overwhelming majority of concerns—the important concerns of boundaries and representation and tax base and those kinds of things —have been swept aside. Municipal councils in the regions have been told to sort it out by themselves and come back with recommendations. The minister knows full well those things are not going to happen, because battle lines are going to be drawn between the various sides within every single region.

The minister introduced recently some relatively minor amendments to the Municipal Act and to the acts affecting certain regional municipalities. I do not want to get into debating those now, but they too illustrate my concern about the lack of philosophy and the lack of guiding direction on the government side with regard to municipal government.

The bills that have been introduced do not deal with every request that has been made by a regional or other municipality. They deal with some of them; they deal with the less controversial ones. But other requests for changes to legislation have been left aside. I would like to know why. I would like to know on what criteria the minister decides whether or not to proceed with a request from a municipality for a change in legislation.

I am going to take one as an example, and that is the request from the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth for transfer to the region of the power to set store hours within the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth rather than leaving that item at the lower tier as it is at the present time. While I think the position that has been taken by some members of that regional council is not a responsible one, I have to say to the minister that, when looked at objectively, the request makes sense. Store hours, when municipalities are in close proximity, when suburban municipalities surround a large urban municipality, might well be considered as a regional matter.

There are other things being dealt with regionally that probably should be dealt with at the lower tier. Requests for those have not been forthcoming because of the battles that are going on at the present time. I really ask the minister how he decides which proposals to accept, which ones to reject and how the future of every region in this province is to be decided. If we leave it to the feuds among local councils, among citizens' groups, among the residents of the various municipalities, all we are going to do is breed bitterness; we are not going to come up with any solutions.

The matter of property tax reform is another area that is causing great grief to municipalities at the present time. Year after year since 1969 we have had promises from the government that changes are to be made. It now appears that if changes are to be made they won't be made for some time in the future and those changes may not be like anything that is presently under discussion.

If that is the case, then fair enough. But again I suggest to the minister the solution won't be found until a decision is made as to what property taxes should be doing, what they should be paying for and what role of the municipality vis-à-vis its property taxes is to be. While we look at assessment as something separate from the role of local government, and while we look at the revenue raised from assessment as just another provincial government revenue, then the problems will never be solved to the satisfaction of people right across this great province.

Many other areas have been the subject of expressions of concern from municipal organizations over the past few years. The whole problem being faced now with regard to conflict of interest of local councillors and of school board officials seem to me to be based in the government's lack of trust of municipal politicians and of municipal councils. It seems to me that the government thinks of municipal government as something to which it can pass the blame when things go wrong, as something to which it can pass the responsibility for decisions that the provincial government doesn't want to take, and as a buffer between people with problems and the provincial government with the authority to solve them.

We only have to go through the Municipal Act to see the tremendous detail in which the role of municipalities is defined to realize that something isn't as it should be. I believe municipal councils must be given a position of trust, they must be given the power of ultimate decision-making in a certain group of areas and that the members of those councils must be treated exactly the same as the members of this House.

I must say I find it very strange indeed that the guidelines for conflict of interest for municipal elected officials are so very strict they prohibit input from an alderman or councillor or school trustee on the matter of negotiating a contract in which his or her spouse is a member of the bargaining unit, yet members of this House, particularly on the government side, are involved on a day-to-day basis in having input into decisions that affect everybody, including their families.

I really believe we have to put local councils into a position of responsibility. The planning area that has already been mentioned is, in my view, a prime role for local government, but at the moment planning is proceeding almost in a vacuum. Local councils are passing their responsibility for the ultimate decision to the Ontario Municipal Board. The municipal board is there as a quasi-judicial body which terrifies many of the population who wish to appeal, on humanitarian grounds, planning decisions that affect their immediate neighbourhood and their municipality. In the end, when it comes to the crunch, some of the really crucial decisions are being made by the cabinet. In that regard, the white paper introduced the other day by the minister's colleague the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) is a step in the right direction, although it is certainly full of problems that we will be talking about some future day.

If the province would define the role of municipalities in the planning area, and if it would define its own goals for the development of Ontario, many of our problems could be solved. In addition, Ontario Municipal Board hearings such as the one going on today in the regional municipality of Niagara with regard to the preservation of fruitland could be avoided, and the tremendous expenses associated with those hearings could be avoided.

Local councils at the moment are chasing the dollar. They have the notion that growth means assessment, which means lower taxes for everybody. It can be demonstrated that is not true in the majority of cases, but it is still a myth held by many local councillors and a myth that this minister could do much to dispel and help to make Ontario a better place for everybody, to make sure that our land is used in the best possible way for everybody, rather than having the battles we are engaged in at the present time.

There are many other areas that have been the cause of concern of municipalities. Just the other day my colleague from Welland-Thorold and I were pleased to meet a delegation concerned about amendments to the Fire Departments and Police acts. I do not know why the government has not seen fit to move on those changes. Many of them seem very reasonable. If the minister intends to keep up with his commitment to communication, then I suggest to him that where municipal functions interact with other ministries, as they do most of the time, it is incumbent upon him to inform municipalities as to what is going on and why changes that seem very reasonable cannot be introduced.

I understand the response of the minister's colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) to be that legislation cannot be introduced at the moment since the government will not be able to get it through the House because of the minority situation we have. I want to suggest to the minister that is just not good enough. The minister should not be prejudging the members on this side as to the action we will take on legislation. If he really wants to know what we think, I challenge the minister to get the legislation introduced, and we will then tell him what we think.

Many of my other concerns will be dealt with as we move through the estimates, but I want to reiterate that, until we have a direction from the minister and until we know where local government is headed and what local government is supposed to be doing, we are going to continue to be heading into problems. We have a responsibility to make sure that municipal government is good government, to ensure that it is responsible government, and to ensure that people know that when they elect a municipal council they are electing a group of people who have certain responsibilities, certain duties and certain functions; that group of people—their municipal council—will be there to do the job, and if the voters at the next municipal election do not like it, then they are to change their local council.

But the present setup, where we have appeals from municipal to OMB to cabinet, where we have the cabinet passing the responsibility for its decisions to municipal councils whenever it feels uncomfortable enough about making a decision that it would prefer to opt out, in those circumstances we are not going to have good municipal government and we are not going to have good relations between municipal and provincial governments in this province.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, is this an appropriate time for you to reply to the lead speeches? You don't seem very anxious to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh, yes, I am, Mr. Chairman. Actually I was expecting there were going to be a couple of other lead speeches. But I guess they will come under the general vote.

I would like to thank all the members who have participated so far. The contributions have been very good. They have certainly pointed up some of the problems we have. They have been critical to some degree, and we always welcome a little criticism over here. I will deal with that in a minute.

I would like to welcome the new member for Wentworth. While it may not be quite his maiden speech, certainly it is his maiden participation in the estimates. I welcome him and compliment him on his presentation.

I would like first of all to answer some of the things he said. He posed some good questions, one of them being: Where is local government going? Are we giving direction to local government? I think we are.

While we can all dwell upon the gloomy side from time to time, and it becomes very effective to do so when we are criticizing someone else about what has not been done, I think my friend would agree that basically we do have a good local government in this province; that we have 837 municipal governments made up of men and women who have been elected and who are doing a good job.

The member asked, where is the direction for them? From our point of view, I think we have tried to give them the kind of direction that we as another order of government can do. My friend will notice I use the term "order of government." Ever since I took over this portfolio we have tried to stay away from this business of referring to senior and junior levels of government, and so forth, because I do not view local government in that light. That is the beginning point in stating what the direction is to local government.

We have different services that have to be performed in this province for the people. Some of those services are performed by what we call local government, some are performed by provincial governments and some are performed by the federal government. The same people elect all of us, the same people pay their taxes to all of us, and the same people expect that all of us will co-operate and provide the services that we were elected and given the responsibility to provide. That does not mean we will not argue and discuss with each other from time to time. But basically it underlines that we have to be co-operating.

The theme I was trying to set at the meeting of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario was that very theme, that we are all working for the same boss, we are all working for the same taxpayers, and we have to sort out how we can each do our jobs best. That takes us, for instance, to the area of property tax. I do not agree with the member. Property tax is another tax, just like income tax, corporation tax, sales tax, the tax on liquor, and so forth. It is another one of the taxes that is collected from people in this country. It is collected by one order of government. It is collected for them to fulfil their services. It is a tax that is exclusively for that order of government, local government in this province. But it is a tax, just like income tax, corporation tax and all the others.

Mr. Swart: Only it's more regressive.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is not necessarily more regressive. My friends always talk about it being more regressive. We have tried to do things to make it less regressive. But the fact is that it is the most convenient tax for local government. It has always been the tax that has been reserved especially for local government, along with other things, such as licensing fees and so forth.

But if that is the case, then it has to be viewed in the context with all the other taxes, because it is a tax that comes out of my friend's pocket and mine. Therefore, we cannot separate it and put it away as something special. If it is regressive, we have to attack that regressivity. That doesn't necessarily mean it's a bad tax. I suppose if we were all to get right down to it and ask the people of this province they would say all taxes are bad. They would love to get rid of them all. They would love to have no taxes and yet they'd love to have many more services provided for them, which is a situation that it is not possible to have.

We're living in a day and age where governments have been asked to provide more and more services. Those services have to be paid for, therefore we have taxes and we have to sort out what governments have various taxing powers. We discuss and negotiate with the federal government over their tax sharing because they have very broad tax collecting powers by which they can collect money, again from the same people. We have powers to collect other moneys and the local government basically has property tax.

As I said, you have to look at them all together. I do not have all the figures in front of me and I can't pull them out of my head at the minute, but I recall that some of the figures used here over the past few years were to the extent that the property tax had not risen in the early part of the 1970s to the same degree that other taxing sources had. At one point in time property tax had held rather level while other taxes had increased to a greater extent, therefore perhaps we had a kind of false imbalance. Then when it came the turn of property tax to increase at a little greater rate than some of the other taxes, there was a great outcry because property tax was increasing.

As I recall, and I apologize because I don't have the figures here, this was somewhat the situation. In this business of trying to keep all taxes in proper proportion, it became obvious that property tax could stand to increase slightly because other taxes had carried the brunt in holding property taxes level for part of the 1970s.

As I said, we'd all like to hold all taxes level at all times, but with the increased need for services, and inflation on the amount we pay in labour and for goods and services, that becomes an impossibility for governments. Then we have superimposed on that the whole principle we're now trying to achieve of the government's taking less of the provincial product for public spending to try to balance our budget and so forth, so we have financial pressures.

The fact remains that property tax is a concern. It's another tax, like all taxes, and we try to make it less regressive through the property tax credit. Perhaps when we get into my estimates a little more we'll cover this, and I'm sure you will discuss it also in the estimates of the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck). Property tax credit provides the vehicle to take the regressivity out of the property tax, to make it more equitable and, in a way, to help level things out; to help take the burden of property tax off our senior citizens particularly, as well as other groups in the community who find it difficult to pay that tax; in fact that is what is done.

I was asked a question in the House the other day and my answer to it was that the property tax credit means that about 60 per cent of the senior citizens of this province pay no education tax. In other words, they receive the equivalent or more, in their tax credit return, of the amount of their education tax. That's a rather significant thing when we think about it. That's part of the direction we try to give to municipalities.

I think the point is very valid that we have to sit down together and try to decide how we're going to share our revenue. My friends have made the point that we should have some form of legislated revenue-sharing, as they have in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba I believe. We do have legislated revenue-sharing of a sort in the Municipal Unconditional Grants Act. We have some legislation in this province which sets out, albeit different from the others, an attempt in legislation passed by this House to say that certain moneys will be given to the municipalities. In fact those legislated revenue-sharing arrangements in other provinces are another way of doing that. Perhaps it's a more modern way of saying that you can have a certain percentage of this tax and that tax.

Mr. Swart: It's more complete.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I want to tell you that I've looked into them. I will perhaps discuss them a little later when we get to the third vote and talk about transfers, because I haven't got all the figures here yet. I have looked into them and they don't create the Utopian situation they might lead you to believe. British Columbia, as I recall, even with its legislated revenue-sharing arrangements, shares much less than Ontario does with its municipalities. It's still open to some rather unilateral decisions on the part of the provincial government which can change the situation. British Columbia puts a great deal of stock in direct payments to its taxpayers. In other words, it shares so much revenue through revenue sharing, but it also pays a portion of the local government's property taxes by direct payments to people. They count that money in the municipal transfers when they make up their total amount transferred.

You and I—or at least I, I don't know about you—would see the business of direct payments to people to offset the property tax they are paying as a very good vehicle. We can take great credit for that and say, "You were assessed this much in property tax and now you're getting a cheque for $200 from your provincial government." The municipal people who are elected don't see that as a very viable way of handling the money. They would rather have it transferred under some kind of transfer arrangements—unconditional grants being the first choice, and that not being attainable conditional grants—rather than direct payments to taxpayers.

In British Columbia they do it the other way. They get up to about 50 per cent of the costs of municipal or local government paid by the province, but at least 12 per cent of that comes from direct payments, as I recall.

Anyway, I think we can get into a larger discussion of that particular facet of local government-provincial government relationship when we get to the vote on actual transfers. What I've been trying to say here is that we think we have to have co-ordination and co-operation with local government on financial matters. I don't think we should constantly be at war with them over this. We may not always be able to agree, but we should work together to find out if there aren't ways we can co-operate and ways we can work out arrangements to share revenues.

To that end, through the Municipal Liaison Committee and the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee we now have a long-term fiscal arrangements committee, as I said, that is meeting. They realize our problems; we realize their problems. We are trying to come up with some kind of arrangement that might benefit both of us for the short term.

I want to emphasize that. We started out calling this the long-term fiscal arrangements program, looking at things like legislated revenue sharing, but we decided the most practical thing was to come up with something for the short term. If we could put that into effect for the short term we would then have more time to look at the long term.

I think one of the realities we had to point out to the local government people on the committee was that this government is committed to a policy of balancing its budget a few years down the road and that would have to be built into any kind of arrangement we arrived at. That being one of the parameters within which we are working, it is perhaps better to work out some arrangement that lives within that parameter for the short term; then when we arrive at that point, the long-term fiscal arrangement for sharing between municipalities and the province will perhaps be ready to be put into place. We can look at it when we arrive at that point.

That is the kind of thinking we have gone through: A short-term arrangement for the next three or four years; and then time, first to look in greater depth at a long-term fiscal arrangement, and then the time to put it in after we have arrived at our position of balancing the provincial budget.

In keeping with this philosophy about municipal government I have been talking about, this kind of direction, we really believe—I know it's sometimes hard to put this into practice, because as soon as I say this someone comes back with something we're doing that is in a way taking away from the autonomy of the municipalities; but basically our philosophy is that the local government segment of the municipal government should be autonomous and we should provide for them as much autonomy as possible.

That cuts both ways. It has been indicated in the Municipal Conflict of Interest Act we are trying to take away that autonomy and lay down set guidelines that are much too rigid. I would point out to my friend that the Municipal Conflict of Interest Act has come about because people in this House and others in this province have said we have to have some kind of conflict of interest act for the local government segment of this province. We have a conflict of interest set of rules for all of us here; we have a conflict of interest set for this House. They may be a little different from that of local government, but that is because our roles are perhaps a little different. There are some pretty rigid conflict of interest rules you and I have to live by. We have been asked to bring those rules into effect at the local level and that we have done.

It is interesting that we have at the present time the other situation where we have put in permissive legislation for local governments to do something and they are saying: "We don't want you just to do that; we want you to actually put in the rules." I am referring to the whole area of conducting municipal election campaigns and campaign expenditures and so forth. We have made it possible for municipalities to be opposite to the conflict of interest situation. We have made it possible for them to put in their own by-laws to govern campaign contributions, publication of campaign expenses and so forth. We have said: "We believe in the autonomy of municipalities; there is the enabling legislation, you carry it out."

On the other hand, we are getting criticism for doing that. People in the municipalities are writing us and saying: "We don't want you just to do that; we want you to actually pass a whole set of rules and regulations and legislation that will apply to every municipality."

I prefer the idea of putting in enabling legislation. Perhaps as the conflict of interest situation is looked at and reviewed over the next few months somebody is going to arrive at the point of saying perhaps municipalities should have some of that autonomy back to set their own rules, but I rather doubt it in the conflict of interest situation.

That can even be carried forward to the regional reviews. It has been suggested in both regional reviews, and amalgamations and annexations and so forth, that somehow there is great bitterness and great hardship created when we leave this to the local people to settle and that we should be able to settle it here. Well this is no Valhalla here. We can't come up with the magical answers here and the hardships will not be alleviated. If we attempt to come in and override the local people it will only be directed, probably, at you and I who sit here.

That is why I have said, for instance, we are not now prepared to engage in any provincially-appointed local government review in Durham or Haldimand-Norfolk. Let's do something different. We have had local government reviews that have gained high profile and are now sitting on the shelf, such as Hamilton-Wentworth. I have said to them: "You come back and tell us what you want to do. We are not magical judges of what you want to do. You come back and tell us what you would like to have us do."

I agree with my friend. Sometimes they ask us to do things and we don't do them. I can't recall why we didn't put into legislation the licensing situation, but I will find out when we get further into the estimates. Basically, I would like them to come back and say to us, "This is how we would like to see our area rearranged"; and then we will do that. That is far better than us trying to decide unilaterally, without the kind of advice and input, without the kind of first-hand knowledge of those people who live in an area and who are elected from that area.

My friend the member for Welland-Thorold talked about us having the money in our budget. We do have the money in this budget, that is precisely what we are voting here today. We have the $538 million that goes into unconditional grants to the municipalities, that is the same as any other ministry. He said: "We should have money, the same as any other ministry." We do have the money; that is exactly what these estimates are all about, they are about the unconditional grants to the municipalities.

We do not have the money in these estimates that goes to municipalities for roads from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, for sewer and water projects from the Ministry of the Environment, or to the boards of health from the Ministry of Health and so forth. That is because those are specific conditional grants related to the responsibilities of those municipalities. I do not think my friend is suggesting that we should have within this ministry, even if it were a single ministry of municipal affairs, all the money for all the grants in those other ministries where the conditions of the ministry are concerned with the transfer of the money.

That, of course, brings us to the larger question that we talked about in our opening statement of conditional grants versus unconditional grants. The municipalities would like to see more unconditional grants and fewer conditional grants. I would say to my friend that, as that occurs, more money will indeed come into the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and be dispensed, on whatever formula is arrived at, through the unconditional grant procedures. But at the moment we have here the roughly $538 million in transfer payments and the rest of the money that goes to municipalities—up to nearly $3.8 billion—through the whole variety of mechanisms which, as he knows, are spelled out in great detail in Ontario Assistance to Local Governments. On page two those are spelled out in detail and represent, as I said in my opening remarks, a 5.4 per cent increase over last year.

We all co-ordinate the parts of the budgets of other ministries that go to municipalities, but I think my friend can see that those ministers are very concerned about their programs; they make up a big part of the operation of their ministry. There is no way that money could be in any other ministry such as this one. It must be in the ministry that is connected with the program. But we do have the money for unconditional grants here, and that is what we are talking about; in the third vote we are going to have plenty of time to discuss that.

Let me say a few words about the contribution of the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy). I very much appreciated his comments. He always brings to this House some very excellent comments in this kind of debate. He and I agree on a lot of things; we do not agree on everything. But his comments are excellent, and I thought he made a very fine contribution in his opening remarks today.

I would like to pick up on one thing which I particularly noted and which indicates the dilemma we face today. When he was referring to the Premier of Alberta, and Alberta's position on natural resources, he said he believed we should state that we believe in federalism, in a federal state, as the beginning. That is where I begin; that is where he begins; that is where everyone begins. That points up the dilemma we are in.

We believe in federalism; we believe in a federal state. We then believe that within that position we should develop—not just continue the status quo—the kind of federal state that will allow Quebec to maintain its cultural and linguistic heritage and to prosper within this federal state in the future. The status quo will not do; I agree with that. Most people agree with that today. Only those with blinkers on would not agree with that.

However, that is where we have differing opinions between two provincial Premiers. The Premier of Quebec, Rene Levesque, does not accept that. He says: "No, within a federal state we cannot have the kind of future we want for Quebec. We must have"—as he calls it now—"sovereignty-association." Which I think is basically sovereignty with a little sugar coating to try to convince the rest of us that we should all go along with it because it will not be all that bad. Plus he wants to be sure he has all the good things that are going now as part of a federal state without being part of it and without having the responsibilities.

The difference is that although we have differences of opinion with Premier Lougheed about natural resources, he starts from the premise of believing in a federal state. He believes we should stay part of a federal state and he believes we should have a united Canada. From there, he then fights very hard for the position that he feels is what he should have within a federal state for natural resources.

We all don't agree completely with what he has in mind. We don't agree with some of his premises. But the fact is that he does believe in a federal state and he is not saying, "We want to make Alberta a sovereign state and keep everything to ourselves."

Interjection.

Mr. Roy: That's the difference.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Wait a minute, though. Now, what I am showing you—this is the dilemma—is that as soon as you take that position and translate it into Quebec, and if you get a person in Quebec who says, "Yes, I am for a federal state"—now the present Premier won't do that but if you get a person in there, a federalist who says, "Yes, I am for a federal state"—and then you get down to the nitty-gritty business of deciding on a new constitution and some other things, believe me you are going to have some of them saying the same thing about some of the powers they want as Premier Lougheed is saying about natural resources. They are going to say, "We want communications to be a completely provincial responsibility. We don't believe in a CBC or a national communications policy. It should be completely provincial." You may not agree with that and people out west may not agree with it and a lot of the rest of us won't.

That is why the job of negotiating a new constitution is very difficult, because within the kind of federal state we are all going to be looking at, some of the kinds of demands of provinces within a federal state are going to be very difficult. The Alberta situation, I think, has brought that right to a head for us in the last year. That as I say is the dilemma we face. That is why it is not going to be an easy job.

For instance, a negative vote in the referendum, a defeat of the Parti Quebecois in Quebec, is not—and I emphasize this—going to get us back to the status quo. It is going to bring us to negotiating that new constitution for a revitalized federal state in Canada. It is going to be a tough job and there is going to be an awful lot of hard bargaining that will have to go on and an awful lot of considering of positions. I think the situation that is always brought up about the west shows that very clearly, because I am firmly convinced the kind of things the west wants are new deals under a federal state, certainly not separation, as Rene Levesque wants, and we see how hard the negotiations are when we come to facing those particular situations.

As I said in my opening remarks, I hope we will get down to business right away. The new Prime Minister of Canada has been sworn in, the new Minister for Federal-Provincial Relations has been appointed—

Mr. Roy: Who is that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Bill Jarvis, the member for Perth, from southwestern Ontario, from—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: From Stratford.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Stratford, yes. So he will be now handling that, along with my friend Senator Flynn, who is the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Canada. They will be the two federal ministers, I hope, who will carry on and make up the steering committee of the continuing committee of ministers that will be working on the constitution.

Mr. Roy: It takes some getting used to, calling a senator a minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You will get used to it, Albert. You will get used to it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh, Albert will never get used to it.

Mr. Havrot: He'll live with it. He'll thrive on it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: There are many other things I could comment on, Mr. Chairman, but I think we will get plenty of opportunity as we go through the various votes, to deal with those. I will limit myself to what I have just said.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Now, if we can keep our discussion to item 1 of vote 601.

On vote 601, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Swart: There are three points here I would like the minister to deal with. I have mentioned at least two of them previously, and I would like to hear the minister's comments on them.

The first is some further discussion on the retention of the municipal finance branch and the grants policy branch in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. Either he misunderstood me or I did not explain myself properly with regard to the budget which he has. My real concern is that the municipal finance branch, it seems to me, should be within his ministry.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I wonder if I may interrupt and ask if that is not under local government and grants to governments.

Mr. Swart: Subject to your ruling, I really believe this is under ministry administration. It is really the administration, I think, rather than the details of the program.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. I am not going to argue because as far as main office is concerned, one can work just about anything under that heading. I am admitting that, but at the same time the hope was we could perhaps discuss more of these items under their proper vote. But you may proceed.

Mr. Swart: I humbly submit this is a principle under the administration of the main office. It simply seems to me there would be much closer liaison with the municipal finance branch if it was directly under the ministry. Granted, the unconditional grants, which don't lend themselves to much administration in any event, now come under his ministry. The whole detail of the transfer system to municipalities, it seems to me, should be within his ministry. Any changes that are made, not just in the amount of the unconditional grants but the whole principle of whether grants are unconditional or whether they are on the basis of a percentage, the whole detail of municipal grants, it seems to me, gets prime direction from his ministry.

I think it can be done better if that municipal finance and grants branch does come under his ministry rather than under the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. If those senior officials are accountable to the minister over them, and they certainly are, then I would prefer to have them accountable to a minister of municipal affairs, if I may use that term in this context rather than to any other minister in the government. I would like the minister to comment further on that.

Secondly, I would like him to comment a bit further on the matter of the transfer of funds from the federal to the provincial ministry. This comes to some degree under the Treasurer, nevertheless this minister is the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Again it seems to me that the grants which were allotted from the federal government this year for the purposes of OHIP, medicare and post-secondary education were substantially greater than the increase in the estimates of those ministries for those purposes.

Although these may now be to some extent unconditional grants that this government is getting from the federal government, nevertheless these grants were in lieu of those grants which were conditional grants. Was this money used in other areas? Is it not true that the provincial government is putting in less of its own money this year into OHIP and medicare than it did the previous year, and is the same not true of post-secondary education?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No.

Mr. Swart: The third item I would like the minister to comment on—and once again, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this does come under his administration—is whether the community planning department of the Ministry of Housing could not function better in his ministry than it functions presently in the Ministry of Housing.

[5:15]

I realize he is not going to criticize the Ministry of Housing. It is not my intent either to criticize the Ministry of Housing. It just seems to me it is more logical to come under this minister. For instance, this minister has introduced a bill to restructure government to some extent in the Parry Sound district.

This will be dealt with—I am not sure—perhaps even later this week. It seems to me one of the major considerations in any restructuring should be consideration of planning principles, yet if that comes under another ministry it's much more difficult to have the full and co-ordinated input into those decisions you have to make than if it came directly under your ministry.

In my introductory comments I did put forth some reasons on why I think planning generally is more appropriately under your ministry than it is under the Ministry of Housing. I don't intend to repeat them at this time—I think the minister will probably remember the arguments I put up. But I think it's such an integral part of municipal operation that it should be your responsibility rather than the responsibility of the Ministry of Housing.

I feel the same about the Niagara Escarpment Commission because that is really planning too. The amount of co-ordination necessary between the escarpment commission and municipal planning is considerable. It seems to me there should be a transfer ultimately of responsibility from the escarpment commission. That plan should become part of the municipal plan, because municipal planning, as I have already stated, is a very important part of municipal operations. It seems to me the whole thing should be under the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs rather than being left in the Ministry of Housing, where certainly the ministry is one, two, three or four steps further removed from local government.

I would like to have the comments of the minister on these three items.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, first of all I will comment on the remarks my friend has made about the municipal finance branches that were left in Treasury.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, there naturally was some discussion last summer, when the ministry was broken off from Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, as to what branches should and should not become part of this new ministry. It was quite obvious some should come to this ministry and others should stay in Treasury.

The two financial branches we're talking about—and I believe we talked about those in the bill to establish this ministry last fall—have functions that involve this ministry and municipal finance and backup information on municipal finance. They also are tied into the general fiscal planning and economic planning of the Ministry of Economics and the Treasurer's operation.

They are part of a ministry that had been developed and built up over the last five years or so as an integrated ministry and they were integrated branches. They weren't branches that could automatically be taken off in total; they would have had to have been split up to some degree.

The decision was made at the time that we could leave them in Treasury and through liaison with them—particularly through Mr. Clasky's operation and Eric Fleming's local government operation—use the resources and expertise of those branches to do the kind of financial work we needed. They would be there to do the financial planning that Treasury needed as part of their overall planning—that is the municipal financial planning that has to be a big part of Treasury's total economic fiscal planning. This is all part of this business I was talking about of the property tax being part of, for instance, general taxation. There has to be integration of effects and future happenings in the property tax field, in the total looks at all the financial tax planning of the province.

So, we decided we could leave those branches there intact and use the expertise there for our purposes. As I indicated in my opening remarks, it is working not too badly. We agreed that we would review it, probably after a year or a year and a half of operation, and if we can work out a better system, we will work it out.

The important thing from the member's point of view, and from the point of view of the municipalities, is first of all that that group does not set the ground rules for the grants. There is a misunderstanding there. We get the financial information—statistics, backup, projections, et cetera—from the financial groups in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. They collect information from around the province and from municipalities, but we make the decisions and the recommendations to cabinet on the unconditional grant parameters and programs.

I suppose I could quote back to the member his words of Rothschild. The House is voting the money to us here; we make up the ground rules and the parameters as to how that money will be distributed to the municipalities, living within the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act and other parameters of this government.

But, just as in any other ministry in this government, we do not have the sole say. It all has to go back through the process—to cabinet, through Policy and Priorities Board, budget planning sessions and so forth. But we make the presentations on that money, the $538 million that is in our budget. We make the decisions as to how we will recommend that that be put into the unconditional grants to the municipalities.

It is not a case of us not having the authority to do that in our ministry. We do. The only thing we do not have is a group of people who collect the information and provide us with all the background—the parameters, the projections, the computer runs and so forth.

This is, I suppose, to some degree a test of whether governments can do what they say everyone else should do; that is, cooperate and co-ordinate and not duplicate services. In other words, here we have two ministries. We are in the same government; we are all working together. Just because we happen to be split off under two ministers and deputy ministers, does that mean we have to duplicate all the services? Can we not use those services there?

We are going to go ahead and see if we cannot do that over the next little while. If the municipalities of this province find that the process is not working, we want to hear from them; and I am sure the municipal liaison committee will tell us. Internally, we want to be sure that our staff is able to get the information they want and to serve the municipalities. We will assess that ourselves, believe me and, if it is not working, we will come up with recommendations to make some changes.

The second area of concern raised by my friend was the federal transfer payments. I would love to discuss that with the member in great detail for the next 15 hours or so, but I feel that is the prerogative of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). He is the one who does the negotiating in that particular area. We, as the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, are present for the technical parts of intergovernmental liaison. But in this particular and very important area, where we have a Ministry of Treasury and Economics, and a whole staff that is geared to the federal-provincial financial planning section, it does the negotiations. I do not feel it would be fitting in this ministry to discuss that item, which is one of the primary items for the Treasurer to discuss in his estimates.

Mr. Bradley: That one is going to be a dry well now, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would not count on that.

Mr. Bradley: And they're your friends.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Does my friend mean he is not counting on that opening up now? We will have to see.

The third area of concern raised by the member was in regard to the community planning branch, which is now in the Ministry of Housing. It was at one time in the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. The first Comay report, if I recall correctly, suggested that it probably should not be there and that it should be more closely connected with the Ministry of Housing, or the Ministry of Housing should be more closely connected with planning, the net impact of all that to be to make it easier for housing to be built in this province and to be co-ordinated with the total planning process.

In the reorganizations and in the development of Treasury and Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs as a ministry, after their beginning, they started to streamline and look at functions within their ministry, vis-à-vis the other ministries, they transferred community planning out to Housing.

Whether it should come into this ministry or not, I really haven't thought about at this point in time. I think that is something you should put to the Premier (Mr. Davis), or to my colleague, the Minister of Housing, or others who are looking at the whole matter of where particular functions belong.

As you know, under the new Planning Act a big thrust of the presentation in the white paper is to have more planning decisions made locally. This is something I think is a good thing and which, perhaps, will change the character of the community planning branch in the Ministry of Housing. Then there will be some rethinking of it, but I really hadn't thought about the particular idea and so I don't feel I can comment on it one way or another at this point. I certainly can't say I agree with it, but I am not saying I disagree with it either. It may be that at some point in time down the road, it will be a logical thing to happen.

Mr. G. I. Miller: There is one thing I am concerned about in item 1 of vote 601. It is the increase in cost of administration from $635,000 to $909,000 in the estimated budget for 1979-80. The minister has pointed out we are committed to a balanced budget, yet our projections to the municipalities are 4.5 per cent. When you look at the increase for administration, it's something like 40 per cent. If there is an explanation for it, I would like to hear it at this point in time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm sure my friend has the book we supplied. The problem may be there aren't enough copies of it for all the members of the opposition, but certainly your critics have the book.

On page 11, we outline the detail of the increases and decreases in the main office vote which, indeed, is 41.8 per cent over the $658,000 voted in last year's estimates. It's now $933,000. I'll just go quickly over the differences.

Salary awards, of course, amount to $19,000. The next item is the transfer of the minister's office staff from the Ministry of Education. This is really a technical matter but it does change the percentage here.

The new ministry was created out of TEIGA. In other words, one ministry was split off for two. As you know, the estimates of TEIGA were before the House last year and in preparing for two sets of estimates, one already being tabled in the House, all that was done was for those estimates to be cut in half. That meant in the main office vote, because the minister stayed in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics, most of the main office, minister's office, vote was left in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. There was hardly anything in the vote for the minister's office in this new ministry.

That is corrected this year. It's corrected by one of the minister's office votes from the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, that ministry being compacted into one and, therefore, only needing one minister-deputy minister's operation. That money is now coming over into our ministry to account and give us money for a minister's operation here. That's $153,000 which, if the estimates hadn't already been tabled last year, would have shown in last year's estimates also.

[5:30]

What I'm saying is that to some degree we are seeing a large increase percentage-wise, but a false one, because in last year's estimates there was no extensive amount of money for the operation of the minister's office, and it should have been there.

There then was a $40,000 minus item, again resulting from the transfer of staff from Treasury and Economics to the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. There was a $40,000 reduction. Then there were some small items. The $80,000 increase is due to the numerous federal-provincial and interprovincial conferences which were held last year. I guess we set some kind of record. Since this ministry was created in August 1978 there have been three federal-provincial conferences and three conferences of ministers on the constitution, which is a very heavy load and probably as many as we had in the three or four years before that.

There was an additional item of $45,000 connected with the services of the co-ordinator of French-language services, $11,000 for additional supplies and then several other minor items, all of them adding up to $275,000, which accounts for the 41 per cent increase in that particular vote.

Mr. Roy: Just to follow what my friend has said—I thought it was an excellent question—I take it that on the Ministry of Education side we should see a decrease of some $153,000. We'll look closely at those estimates to see whether it corresponds. If there is an increase from what you said on the one hand, we should see a decrease on the other.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You won't have any Minister of Colleges and Universities to talk with.

Mr. Roy: Yes, but we should see a decrease of money some place.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's right. You will.

Mr. Roy: Considering that the co-ordinator of French-language services is in the main office, as I understand it, it's not something I will be able to discuss under vote 602. I would like to ask the minister a question on this, although I don't know if it's fair in the absence of Mr. Stevenson, the deputy minister. In any event, one thing that has puzzled me is that in the co-ordination of French-language services last year, as I mentioned in my opening statement, we passed an amendment to the Judicature Act. Once something like this passes and the Legislature grants authority, I take it that the co-ordinator must be involved in the implementation of this legislation.

I'm starting to get troubled about this. I guess one of these days I'll have to start talking more enthusiastically to your colleague the Attorney General.

Can the co-ordinator of French-language services advise us as to what is the delay in the implementation of the provisions of the Judicature Act? We realize that it has to be phased in and that you just couldn't do this thing overnight. We in the opposition were quite reasonable about it. We understood this.

In an area like Ottawa-Carleton, the personnel exists to provide French-language courts. As you know, we have French-language service at the provincial level for summary conviction offences and we have it at the family courts to a limited extent as well. I understand we have it now in the small claims court. What is the delay in providing it for the whole realm of services in the courts in the criminal field, for instance? We have the judges and we have the personnel. What has been the delay there? What has been the delay in the county court, especially in Ottawa where we have three or four judges who are bilingual? What has been the hold-up?

One of the provisions we have in the Judicature Act is that the pleadings would be in English, so actually it is the hearing that would be bilingual. We have the staff there. What has been the delay? I would like to know from the minister, through his co-ordinator of French-language services, what has been the holdup; why we are not proceeding faster?

I am becoming awfully suspicious there is not much reason for the delay. I understand it takes forms and it takes certain other things, but to me the delay is not justified here and I would like to get some explanation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am sorry, I am going to have to tell my friend I shall have to find that out because I don't know. My deputy minister might have had the answer. That act hasn't been proclaimed yet, is that right? Has it been proclaimed?

Mr. Roy: I hope it has. It happened about a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will get the answer for that. I am sure the co-ordinator would have had the answer, or at least given me some indication about it if he had been here—although I suspect he would have had to go back and try and find out too—because he keeps very close tabs on what is going on. We believe that is moving ahead. I don't think there is any problem in it. There may be some technical problems, but I will find out for you.

I am sorry the deputy minister is not here, incidentally. He had to go to a French-language seminar in Kapuskasing tonight, as part of the program he has been conducting as the co-ordinator of French-language services, along with the other people in the civil service. They have had eight seminars across the province where all the regional people in all our different ministries who are providing services in French have been coming together. They have been excellent meetings and it has helped immensely for all those people to know who is working in that area in other ministries. One is being held in Kapuskasing tonight and he is off to that.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I can understand that the information is not readily available, but I trust you will take this further through the co-ordinator or through yourself to your colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry)—I have not had occasion to speak to him about it. I have been patient and, God knows, if Franco-Ontarians have one thing, it's patience. You know that.

I would convey to the Attorney General that I really think it is getting to the point where the delay is unjustified. I would hate to think the legislation we passed last year has yet to be proclaimed. That concerns me.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It may be that I was wrong.

Mr. Roy: Yes. I would hope that someone comes back with something to justify the delay of a year, because I really don't see it. Take an area like Prescott-Russell, for example, where 80 to 85 per cent of the people are French-speaking—your judges, everyone down there is bilingual. What has been the delay in having indictable offence trials in the criminal court before Judge Cecile? Judge Cecile speaks French. You know him as one of your colleagues.

The county court judge is Judge Cusson, who is French-speaking as well. What is the problem, especially when we drafted the legislation specifically to have it brought in in stages in various areas of the province?

I trust you will convey to your colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry), our concern because we are obviously going to have to start getting more high profile about this.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will be happy to get you that information. When we continue with the estimates on Friday I will have that for you. I can tell you the Attorney General is concerned about this. Knowing him and knowing his concern and his real feeling for this piece of legislation, the only thing that would hold it up as far as he is concerned is some technical detail. He certainly wouldn't be stalling on it. I can guarantee you that.

Mr. Roy: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I can guarantee you that. I will find out for you.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions on the main office vote; one of them relates to comments which have already been made concerning the planning process.

As the minister has said, the white paper on planning that was introduced by his colleague recently suggests that more of the responsibility be passed to municipalities. On the assumption that that white paper is going to turn into legislation some time within the next few months and on the assumption of that basic precept that municipal government should exercise more responsibility in the planning area, I wonder what the minister sees as being his role and his ministry's role in planning, given that planning is much more than housing. It's also commercial and industrial development. It's also parks. It's also waterfront development. It's also lifestyle and social services and all of these things.

I wonder whether the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs is going to be playing a role in that—and if so, what kind of role—and whether we can expect that municipal government will be given complete autonomy. That's a nice buzz-word these days, but I find it strange if the minister and the government are really suggesting that they are going to allow municipalities to do what they want, given that there are provincial guidelines in certain areas; given that municipalities already bicker among themselves for assessment dollars. Are we really going to see that kind of all-out petty war for development that goes on? Or is this ministry going to play a part in providing guidance in terms of the things that individual municipalities and particular areas of the province should be setting as development priorities and in terms of putting development restrictions on certain other areas that this government and more especially I hope, this House sees as being appropriate for the overall good of Ontario.

My second point relates to the whole matter of interaction with local government. I applaud the minister's comments with regard to asking the municipalities to make proposals as to how to solve the problems. The difficulty with that approach—and again it comes up with autonomy as the buzzword—is who are the “they” we are asking to solve the problems? Are they the incumbents in municipal government as it is structured at present? Are they the majority of people in a particular area, and if so what area? In other words, who is it that the minister listens to when he says he asks the people in the municipalities for advice and for comments about the problems that are facing them?

In that regard I would draw to the minister's attention the bill he introduced very recently into this House with regard to a quorum problem in the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk, which request for change was not initiated by the council for the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk, was not initiated by a majority of the councils, but was initiated by the chairman of that regional municipality and a few of the people with whom he associates.

Is this what the minister means by asking the municipalities to come forward with proposals—that he listens to certain people and not to other people? Or are we to see a situation where change can only be made by incumbent councils? I suggest to the minister that is fraught with problems too and what we need is an approach that takes into account the aspirations of the people who live in the municipalities we have now and in certain areas that perhaps should be municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'd like to comment on the last point first. We could get into a very interesting philosophical discussion on the points the honourable member has raised, “Who do you listen to?”

Do I listen to him and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere when I want to know what's happening in those ridings? Or do I go out and listen to the president of the local Tory organization? Or do I go out and listen to the—

Mr. Warner: I shouldn't do that. You can listen to me; you can listen to the people.

[5:45]

Hon. Mr. Wells: I won't answer that. Do I go out and listen to various ratepayers groups? I think it's very difficult, as I say, to be able to draw some hard and fast guidelines, but I think that basically, operating particularly in this ministry interfacing with local government, we have to listen to the people who have been elected at the local level—in other words, the mayors and the Reeves and the councillors. We have to believe if they put forward positions that are wrong they are going to have to account for them to the people who elected them, and those of us down here will have to account for the decision. I guess that is how our democratic system of government works.

We all, of course, solicit opinions from other people in the area. If I get an opinion here from a local council it is no secret. I very often will talk to the member of this Legislature who comes from that area—that doesn't just mean if he is a member of my party, but your party or the official opposition—and we will have a word about what is happening. The member may be the first person to talk to me about a particular situation and may alert me the municipality is going to be writing or asking for something. Basically I would say we listen to the people who have been elected in that area.

You have raised a very interesting example of this situation and I must say that was exactly what went through my mind when I thought about legislation for the Haldimand-Norfolk situation. Was I, in fact, being asked to do what one person wanted, or was I doing what the majority of the council wanted? You have indicated today I wasn't doing what the majority of the council wanted; I believe I was.

I don't know whether you have seen the letter—did I send you a copy of the letter with the resolution? I believe Mr. Richardson, the chairman of Haldimand-Norfolk, wrote me and said at an informal caucus attended by, as I recall it, at least 14 or 16 people, the majority had asked and instructed him to write and ask for legislation in this regard. Quite obviously they were in a situation where they could not hold a formal, regularly-constituted meeting of the Haldimand-Norfolk council because they could not legally get the quorum. That was a problem they were facing, but it was my belief in that case that a majority of the council had asked for it. Therefore, I felt it was a situation on which we should introduce a bill into this Legislature.

Did I send you a copy of the letter with the bill when we brought it in?

Mr. Isaacs: No.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will be glad to supply you with a copy of the letter from the chairman, which was the letter I acted upon. I am going from memory, but I believe that letter indicated an informal caucus would be meeting, and I certainly took from the letter and from any conversations I had there were more than two or three people at that informal caucus.

To answer your question, first and foremost we listen to the people who are elected and believe they are the ones who have the antennae out to sense the wishes of the people in their area. That goes all the way through talking to people about specific local legislation or problems right up to the Municipal Liaison Committee where the local people are elected to their provincial associations, provincial associations are represented on the Municipal Liaison Committee, and the Municipal Liaison Committee discusses legislation with us.

In this last round of legislation we have adopted a new policy where practically all the municipal legislation is looked at in detail by the Municipal Liaison Committee. They get a chance to look it over, to comment on it, to have their solicitors look at it, to raise problems with us, to tell us where there may be things we didn't see, and there are things they disagree with. We may still put the legislation in, but at least they know where we stand and we know where they stand on particular sections.

The next question you asked was about our role in planning. Answered very simply, our ministry does have a role in planning, yes. In so far as overall planning policies are decided here, because we represent that ministry which is interfacing with local government and which has responsibility for about 55 acts that impinge upon local government, we, along with all the other ministries concerned, sit down together and talk about those things that have to do with local planning. As I said earlier, if the white paper is adopted and if the proposals suggested in the white paper, are implemented, planning is going to become more of a local process.

I know what the member is getting at. We don't want to get back to the days of out-and-out competition between each area, which really is no planning at all. My friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere knows what that is all about and I know what it is all about, because we have to live with it on Eglinton Avenue, on Lawrence Avenue and all through the borough of Scarborough. I am not sure anything we could ever do down here could ever seem to stop that.

Mr. Warner: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No matter where we go we find that same kind of planning. I suppose the more disastrous thing is where there is such out-and-out competition for certain kinds of development that we find municipalities doing things they probably shouldn't do and getting into financial problems they shouldn't. We have to guard against that. It is a very fine line about local autonomy and where one starts to guard against that.

We had here overall provincial planning policies, growth centres, et cetera that were all mapped out. One would go out and talk to municipalities and their associations and they would say, "Are you telling us that all the growth should go here and we are never really to look for any growth or any development?" That kind of thing really depresses and stagnates a community.

I don't think one can leave any community with that feeling in this province today. One has to give them some hope that in some way they are going to be able to keep moving ahead. I like to tell them they all should be looking for the kind of thing that will be indigenous to what is in the cards for them, but that is not always easy to do either.

I think the role the province still has to play is to set some general planning parameters, but to allow more at the local level without imposing a very rigid straitjacket from the province. That doesn't give the member a complete answer because, until the discussion on the white paper is finished and we get all that back in, I don't think we will be able to set the whole parameters as to how we are going to operate in the future. We as the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will be involved as part of the planning process and in committees of other ministries here.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's comments about involvement in the planning area. I have just one quick response to his comments about listening to the majority votes of local councils or regional councils or county councils or whatever the group might be that is making a presentation.

One major problem that concerns me is that through that mechanism the legitimate concerns of minorities within those municipalities can very easily be forgotten. Let's take as an example a regional municipality—and it doesn't matter which one it is—in which one or two of the lower-tier municipalities share a concern that is of no concern to the majority of the municipalities. The electorate in the one or two municipalities that are affected has no direct or indirect way of influencing the regional councillors they do elect. It may or may not be the situation in Haldimand-Norfolk. It is my sense that it is the situation in Hamilton-Wentworth at the present time. There is a little bit of that in Metropolitan Toronto at the moment. There are suggestions of it in Ottawa-Carleton.

This problem of one municipality wanting to do something, or even more likely not wanting to do something, that the other municipalities want to do is obscured when one listens to the majority votes of a regional council. I am really concerned as to how the minister makes a decision and comes to a conclusion on some of these fundamental problems facing regions and facing areas that may at some time become regions, when it is a small part of the total geographic area that is expressing a concern.

Does one override the wishes of the minority in order to satisfy the majority? Does one allow annexations by cities because the majorities always live in the cities and only a very few people live in the suburban or rural areas surrounding those cities? Or does one somehow weigh the votes over the people or councillors from an area in order to give the minority some strong voice in the overall direction of their community?

Hon. Mr. Wells: As my friend was speaking, I was just thinking to some degree that's probably the reason we don't enact some of the requests officially sent in by regions for amendments to their legislation. When we look at the various material that comes in to us, we realize to do what you said, protect one or two of the municipalities in the minority, that kind of request wouldn't be appropriate.

I would be very interested in getting the background from that licensing situation you alluded to in Hamilton-Wentworth. I can't remember the details of it, but perhaps that's the kind of thing that is present there. Either the minority wants something the majority doesn't want, or the majority wants something the minority doesn't want.

I am sure that's one of the reasons we don't always immediately enact into legislation all the requests a region sends in to us and asks for.

Mr. G. I. Miller: To follow up on the minister's statement regarding Bill 95, which was introduced a few weeks ago—I don't know whether the date is on the bill or not, but I can't see it—it does affect the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, particularly my riding. There was serious concern at that time, but now the councils have returned to work and seem to be proceeding with their regular business, I wonder if the minister is going to continue bringing this bill forward?

It is my understanding the council would like to make some further changes and recommendations. As has been pointed out by my colleague from Wentworth, it wasn't brought forth by the council as a whole but was done by a recommendation of a majority.

In this connection, I agree with the minister's comments. I wonder if he would reconsider and let the council deal with it and make the recommendations they feel would be most satisfactory for that particular area?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would be most happy to do that, if my friend, as the local member, will find out the changes they would like, or get the council to let me know. I think there is perhaps need to bring forward some kind of bill, but certainly if there are some changes they would like, I would like to hear from them about those changes.

I think I had a further letter from the chairman saying the problem which caused us to consider bringing forward the bill had now been alleviated and overcome, but they still felt there was merit in bringing the bill forward.

I would like to have council write us officially and tell us some of the changes they would like so we can proceed. I would like to hear what the member for the area would like to recommend on that bill.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I will certainly try to get that information for you. Thank you for the opportunity.

Mr. Cunningham: The minister would be aware, I am sure, that at least the regional aspect of municipal taxes in Hamilton-Wentworth will be increasing by roughly 28 per cent. That, of course, will be added to the education aspect and whatever levy will come from the local municipalities.

I think that increase in itself, will spark some renewed interest on the part of people within the Hamilton-Wentworth region to see some re-evaluation at the very minimum of that current structural setup. As the new member for Wentworth expressed, there are some concerns, especially in the smaller municipalities, with the continuing inequities that exist within that system. Some areas are being subjected to things they don't particularly want. Glanbrook dump, in a micro-cosmic sense, is the best example of the structural difficulties that exist in that area.

There are many more examples I can offer to you, Mr. Minister. There are the difficulties we are having in the township of Flamboro, where I reside, in seeing we get water up to Clappisons Corners at the junction of highways 5 and 6, which would be a natural area for some industrial expansion. We dearly need some industrial assessment in that township. The imbalance is unhealthy, to say the least.

I would like to ask the minister what kind of consideration he has been giving to see that some restructuring is done with a view to returning powers to local municipalities. I think this problem, created by your government, cannot be allowed to fester much more.

Hon. Mr. Wells: In regard to what my friend is saying—he is talking about restructuring in the Hamilton-Wentworth area—we had a very extensive study in that area. He has seen the results of the study.

Mr. Cunningham: Not particularly good.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I agree, it probably hasn't been—I don't know, I'm not going to say whether it's been particularly good or whether it hasn't been particularly good, but it hasn't prompted us to come forward with any restructuring and I'm not thinking of any restructuring in the area.

The problem of financing, I would suggest, is another one. I would hope maybe the local government could take a look at that. We always feel that somehow restructuring is a cause for increased cost, but I just want to read you something. It says here, "Contrary to the opinions held by many residents of the region of Waterloo, the cost of local government has not increased substantially faster than it would have under the former system. Second, it is no more expensive in comparison with similar areas inside or outside regional governments. Third, after four years of regional government the average per household property tax is lower in real dollars than it was four years prior to regional government."

That's in the Palmer report. I'm not as familiar with some of the other reports but I know in the Palmer report they developed, at a great deal of expense, systems and criteria for measuring the costs so they could come up with some statements like that. That material is all there. We have access to it in our ministry. If the people in Hamilton-Wentworth would like to take some of that material and use it to see if the costs would have been greater if they had not been part of the restructured municipality, I think it would be a very good exercise. We would be happy to co-operate with them to make that material available. They would have to take the initiative if they want to do it.

Item 1 agreed to.

Item 2 agreed to.

Vote 601 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

CUSTODY OF PAQUETTE CHILDREN

194. Mr. McClellan: Why were the four surviving Paquette children removed from foster homes in September 1978 and placed in the Ottawa Children's Aid Society assessment home? Why have they been kept there from that time until the present? [Tabled May 23, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am advised by the Ottawa-Carleton Children's Aid Society that the Paquette children had an adjustment problem in the foster homes. The children required psychological assessment and the society was attempting to limit their number of placements and replacements.

The four children are together and have adjusted well in the assessment home.

WORK INCENTIVES FOR FBA RECIPIENTS

195. Mr. McClellan: What are the details of the proposals to provide employment incentives to recipients of family benefits allowances which the ministry submitted to the federal government for cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan? [Tabled May 23, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In response to the above question, I would advise that we approached the federal government in March of this year with a three-point proposal for cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan of employment incentives for recipients of family benefits allowances.

The first proposal addressed the problems experienced by many recipients of long-term social assistance (that is, single mothers and the disabled), who would like to enter the full-time labour force but who are unable to do so because the only employment available to them is at extremely low wages. That is, there is a financial disincentive for some FBA mothers and disabled GAINS(D) recipients to undertake full time work.

Consequently, we approached the federal government to ascertain whether they were prepared to cost-share a "rehabilitation program" which would assist such recipients return to full-time work. The Ontario proposal had two basic components: income-tested financial assistance for FBA/GAINS(D) recipients who undertake full-time employment; and continuation of the regular social assistance fringe benefits during the transitional period.

An additional feature of our proposal would not have been affected by cost sharing considerations. That is, should the former recipient find that for some legitimate reason, continued full employment was impossible, expedited re-entry to the FBA/GAINS(D) program would be guaranteed.

The second proposal would have provided increased incentives for GAINS(D) recipients to undertake part-time employment. Features of this proposal included more generous earnings exemptions for single recipients, and a conditional exemption to take into account the work expenses of certain recipients who incur higher costs in this regard.

The final proposal suggested that the federal government should reconsider all employment related criteria under the Canada Assistance Plan. These criteria were established in May 1974 and are long overdue for a revision which would take into account changes in prices, the labour market, and society at large which have occurred in the interim.

The federal response to our specific work incentive proposals was negative. It was argued that under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan, a program which was neither needs-tested nor tied directly to existing social assistance benefit levels could not be eligible for cost-sharing. On the other hand, the federal government did agree to review the general employment-related criteria under the Canada Assistance Plan. No action, however, has been taken in this regard to date.

We are now working on an improved version of the rehabilitation proposal (which also will be ineligible for federal cost-sharing). However, we believe that this is an important issue and I would hope to be able to discuss the details of our latest proposal more fully in the near future.

REPORTS

STANDING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the interim report of the standing public accounts committee, dated March 31, 1979, respecting the Royal Ontario Museum.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Speaker, to make some of the members who weren't here last Thursday aware of the circumstances, the standing public accounts committee at its meeting on Thursday morning passed a motion, moved by the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson). The motion has been read. I don't know that it's necessary to read it again, but I'll be happy to do so. It reads as follows:

"The committee recommends that the Royal Ontario Museum furnish the committee with the most current monthly financial statements and current budget of the Royal Ontario Museum for analysis by the provincial auditor, such statement analysis to be returned to the committee within three weeks and preferably two weeks.

"The committee further recommends that the Minister of Culture and Recreation, the Deputy Minister of Culture and Recreation, together with the chairman of the board of the Royal Ontario Museum and the director of the Royal Ontario Museum, attend the committee's deliberations of the matter."

The purpose of the interim report was to provide authority for the provincial auditor to look at the current year's material. At this time, he is charged with the responsibility for the period 1977-78. Under the present legislation, the provincial auditor does not personally audit the books of the Royal Ontario Museum. The committee felt that it would be in the best interests of everyone if we could explain this and get some answers to arrive at a full understanding of the current dialogue that is taking place with regard to the museum.

Without going into some of the confusion that arose last Thursday, the intent was to merely obtain clearance for the auditor to do his work and give the public accounts committee the benefit of his advice.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Doesn't he have authority under the Audit Act now?

Mr. Hall: Under the new act he will have the authority in the 1979 year, but not in the year that is involved.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to support this motion and make a few very brief comments on it.

In the first place, the matters which were of concern to the public accounts committee were the payment to consultants of about $300 a day or $500 a day, in the sort of open-ended contracts under which nobody seemed to know what they were doing, what would be the total amount of money spent and what we would have received in return.

What bothered me about that motion was that when it was introduced last Thursday, this Legislature wasn't asking the Liberal Party, the NDP or the Tory party to investigate the books of the Royal Ontario Museum. It was asking the auditor of the province of Ontario to investigate the books of the Royal Ontario Museum, and the Tories over there, that collection over there, balked at it.

Mr. Nixon: That's not much of a collection of them here tonight.

Mr. Makarchuk: They had an opportunity on Thursday to introduce a motion so that the auditor could start working on it immediately and they refused to do it until today. That bothers me, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Welch: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable House leader.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the member for Brantford knows very well why this matter has not been debated until now. Rule 30(c) provides that when reports come in from standing committees containing recommendations with substantive matters the person bringing in the report moves the adjournment of the debate. The adjournment of the debate was, in fact, moved. The order has been called. I think it's very unfair to suggest the government has opposed this particular matter. How does the member come to that conclusion until such time as the question is put tonight?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I should remind honourable members, of course, that was the opinion given by the acting House leader (Mr. Grossman) while he had that responsibility, and it is one with which we in fact concur.

Mr. Makarchuk: In speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned the acting House leader had the opportunity to enter that same motion which would have been acted on at that time in the House. He had the option but refused to do it. I think that has to be made clear as well. The government has the power to introduce motions.

Mr. Kennedy: That's not so. You don't have an option in standing orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The procedure we are following is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The procedural aspect of this question has really been dealt with, I hope, to the satisfaction of all members who were present last Thursday. We're dealing with the substance of this report and I hope members will confine their remarks to that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, to conclude my remarks: the concern, of course, is that up to $4 million has been spent to this time by the Royal Ontario Museum on various groups, bodies, consultants, fund raisers and so on, including members of the Tory party, and I would like to know exactly what we have got. What does the public of Ontario have in return for this funding? I hope the auditor will enlighten us on that point.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the motion?

Mr. Peterson: If I may, at the outset I would like to address my remarks a little bit to the procedural aspects of what transpired—

Mr. Speaker: No, I've ruled that it has been dealt with.

Mr. Peterson: —and how it got to this House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: As long as you're dealing with the substance of the report.

Mr. Peterson: After you hear them I'm sure that you will agree with me that they are totally in order.

I, personally, am one who would like to thank the acting House leader of the time, and the House leader now for calling this order so quickly recognizing that we did have a difference in which we were all as members of this House, involved. Legitimately, the government did not have to bring this matter forward for some longer period of time than has in fact transpired. I am one, although I participated in that particular procedural debate, who recognizes that in the circumstances the government has acted very fairly and I appreciate that very much. I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that time is of the essence, and I think the government recognizes that.

We are not here tonight by virtue of this particular motion to cast aspersions or point fingers. Nevertheless, we all know the situation through press reports and through a great deal of controversy about this particular issue. As legislators we are responsible for this particular venerable institution. I hasten to point out that I am one who has a great respect for this institution. I believe it has to survive and it has to survive well. Personally, coming from London, Ontario, my first memories of Toronto are of visiting the dinosaurs and the mummies, some of whom now sit on the Tory benches.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Now you just visit the mummies.

Mr. Peterson: Those are some of the first and most glorious memories I have.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That was when there were more Tories.

Mr. Peterson: I'm a little disappointed that they're now running the government in this province.

But let me say that I don't think any of us are here by virtue of this motion to cast aspersions or to look for blame. What has transpired is that this matter has come before the social development committee. To the best of my knowledge, and I may be wrong, there has been no resolution of the problem. I think there are enough unanswered questions that this modest and unassuming motion coming from the public accounts committee is a good one.

Mr. Nixon: Authored by the member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: I say in some modesty that it was my motion, but I say also that it was voted for unanimously.

I am concerned about this. Again, I thank the House leader. Time is of the essence for several reasons. They are in the middle of a very important fund-raising project, as I understand. They have raised about $6.7 million of a target of about $10 million; that means about $3.3 million is still to come. As legislators we don't want in any way to jeopardize that money.

We also recognize that the books of the Royal Ontario Museum have been fully audited, as I understand it, with an unqualified opinion from their auditors, Clarkson Gordon and Company. We are not suggesting there are surreptitious or untoward things going on in the books of the ROM. What we are suggesting is that with the new concept of value for money perhaps there are certain things and certain legislative input we could provide, and hopefully once and for all, on a non-partisan basis, clear up some of the questions we are facing.

Obviously it was a matter of some concern to some of my colleagues on the committee that the director of the ROM was not there and that the minister was not there. One of the matters this motion deals with is bringing the responsible people, such as the chairman of the board, before the committee. If there are problems, then obviously a lot of responsibility rests with the executive director as well as with the minister and the deputy minister.

What has happened is that we have had sort of half-answers—I wouldn't use the word "half-truths"—and shaded kinds of opinions coming out of the ministry on what is going to transpire. Is it going to close; is it not going to close? What is the minister's opinion? One has the clear impression that the minister didn't know until recently that the museum may close. We have had a myriad of opinions on that. It won't close or it will close for one year; for 16 months or possibly for four years. I think all the press attention to this has been a little bit damaging to the museum.

I say on behalf of my colleagues that we have a strong commitment to this organization. It is a world-class institution of which we are justifiably proud on our side of the House. But there are enough questions that the matter has to be dealt with on a non-partisan basis. My colleagues feel this is best done before the public accounts committee and it is best done as quickly as possible.

As I said earlier, this is not an internal audit. What this will do is deal with the latest financial statements and the budget and make sure they are relatively on track. We are concerned about the fact that there have been press reports and some evidence to indicate there will be a very substantial deficit over the next year because of a potential closing while the renovations are going on. We are also concerned about the fact there have been deficits for the past three years. They have eaten into the general reserves of that particular institution. One only has to look at the budgetary practices of this government, and transpose those on to an organization like the museum to realize it is headed for trouble in that not-too-distant future unless we address our minds collectively to that problem and do something about it.

There is no question that over the past three or four years the government has been very parsimonious with this great institution, but no more parsimonious than it has been with various other institutions and we may have to look at the whole method of funding; we may have to look at the whole structure of how the Royal Ontario Museum is funded. [8:15]

When I look at some of the details—and I do not want to go into great detail—I see, for instance, a grant of $124,000 from Wintario last year to the ROM to build up audience, an audience development grant. When I see such a $124,000 matching grant given to the museum, which obviously has to come up with an equivalent amount of money at the same time as it is running a deficit of $300,000 or $400,000, I have to ask, where are the priorities? Should we be putting that money into an advertising and publicity campaign when we are about to face a closing?

There are a lot of things, albeit we are facing one of the most confused accounting systems I have ever seen in my life—which may be somewhat justified, because there are general accounts as well as trust accounts and expansion accounts. It seems to be very much a matter of judgement which particular item is put into which particular account. It needs a great deal of explaining. I am not suggesting it is in any way dishonest, but there are certain judgements brought to bear on this matter that need a great deal of explanation and probably subject themselves to a great deal of second-guessing.

Because of grants such as the audience development grant and because of this kind of handling of the situation, the matter has to come before a legislative committee once and for all so that we can look at it collectively and apply our judgement.

I think I speak with frankness when I say my colleagues from the New Democratic Party probably share the same kind of view I have; we share the same respect for this organization. My friend from Brantford has some very serious reservations about the $4 million or so that has already been spent on consulting fees, particularly in view of the fact that it is a $44-million project, for which we have never had a commitment from the federal government for the last $15 million or so. That is a little bit scary.

We would like to know a little bit more about the psychology of a board—let us not forget that 15 members of that board are appointed by this government; there has been a lot of controversy about that—which has made some judgements that cause serious people to say, “We need, and we are obliged to have, an explanation.” Let us not forget that out of the $44 million for the expansion program, all but $10 million—presumably raised by the private sector—is public money, administered entirely by a board, 15 of whose members are appointed by the government and three of whom are appointed by the membership. That in itself is cause for alarm.

If we did not present this report to the Legislature, we would be less than responsible in my judgement. That is why I am asking all members for their support. We have asked the provincial auditor to move as quickly as he possibly can. If he is not satisfied with certain things, this may drag out longer than we would ideally like. In any event, we have an obligation to move quickly and to put this matter to rest, if at all possible, or to solve the matter as it stands.

I have two other thoughts I would like to share with you, Mr. Speaker. I was very unhappy with the board structure at the ROM—and this will be debated later, I assume—and I compliment my friend from Dovercourt, who presented a bill to change the board structure. I might argue with some of the numbers, but I think it is a progressive move and something I look forward to. I hope it is debated in this Legislature later. I think the board structure is archaic. I am a little harsh when I say it is a repository for political hacks, but I am not very far off when I say it could be brought into far more responsibility and accountability than it has at present.

There is one other thing that has to be addressed, and I hope the public accounts committee can have a major influence on this. Through the press and through anonymous letters, we are all aware of what we at least perceive, without being able to prove, as deteriorating morale among the curators and the curatorial staff of that museum. That disturbs me very much, because we do not like to see that in any institution. On the other hand, the board of directors and the director were faced with an anonymous letter from the curatorial staff, which I regard as a cowardly and snivelling act. If they have anything to contribute to this debate, they should be called before the public accounts committee. If we knew who they were, or if they had the courage—I assume they will probably read Hansard, because they have an interest—I would hope those people, whoever they are, would come forward, come before our committee and present their point of view, because this seems to be the forum of last resort. All of my colleagues, from all three parties I say with pride, are quite prepared to deal with this fairly and dispassionately. This hopefully will put to rest any of the false rumours and let officials at the ROM get on with the great job they have ahead of them of providing the kinds of services they do for the people and for the children of this province.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to prolong this debate here tonight at all.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you just resign?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I look forward to saying what I will want to say at the time we appear before the public accounts committee. As I indicated in the statement this afternoon to the House, I welcome, and I know that Mr. Hermant the chairman of the Royal Ontario Museum board and Dr. Cruise the director of ROM welcome, the opportunity of appearing before the public accounts committee and having the provincial auditor take a very good hard, detailed look at the financing, financial arrangements and financial administration of ROM. We do this, really, essentially because of the feelings we have that this is the only way to help dispel a great deal of the cloud of suspicion I feel has unfortunately and artificially been built up around ROM and its management. We do this to get to the bottom of the kind of aspersions that have been cast repeatedly. We've just heard again tonight from the honourable member for Brantford what I think are irresponsible aspersions.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are irresponsible when you waste public funds and you've been doing that all along.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will find out when the provincial auditor takes a good look at it. I would only like to say that I too feel very much as the representative for London Centre has indicated, for heaven's sake, let's keep our approach to ROM on a non-partisan basis, because ROM is far too big, far too important an institution for Toronto, for Ontario, for Canada, and for the world to—

Mr. Makarchuk: Every time you get caught with your fingers in the pot you say “Let's be non-partisan.” Baloney

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —be playing the kind of cheap politics the honourable member for Brantford has been playing. His groundless aspersions, I am sure, are going to make him look a bit silly in about two weeks time; I can guarantee him that.

Mr. McClellan: What is going to happen in two weeks? You are going to be stuffed and mounted in two weeks.

Mr. Grande: You brought it to this point.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Anyway, without getting into the argument here any further, we are delighted, we welcome the full and open investigation to which the provincial auditor is going to submit ROM.

Mr. Warner: I am sure they have a place for you in that building, underneath the totem pole.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want to address myself briefly to this matter. Due to circumstances beyond my control, I was not able to be at public accounts last Thursday when this matter arose.

However, I have gone over the Hansard for that time dealing with the matters in regard to the Royal Ontario Museum. There were certainly more questions raised in the committee than answered. The exercise we are going through will be a very healthy one indeed, as the minister amongst others has pointed out.

I think it's important the point be made that in fact, this is a de facto expression of the new Audit Act we passed in December 1977. That particular act provides that the auditor of the province could look at the expenditures of the government in terms of value for money, a concept that is relatively new in Canada, in regard to ensuring the taxpayer's dollar is spent with due regard for economy and efficiency. In very basic terms what that means is that the auditor can follow the dollar of taxpayer's money—whether it be by grant, subsidy, transfer payment, whatever—to the donee and its ultimate disposition to ensure the taxpayers are getting their money's worth.

I think probably this is the first opportunity the public accounts committee will have had to put that principle in the act to a very practical purpose. I think we will find the powers under the Audit Act, in section 9 and in section 12 particularly, will be to the benefit of the people of this province.

I gather from the minister's remarks in the House tonight and in a statement earlier the government is prepared to accept the motion of the public accounts committee and so direct the auditor to do this investigation into wrong. This is an occasion of the very first importance and I hope the government will be as amenable when the public accounts committee comes up with others.

Mr. Grande: I thought maybe I would never be recognized, but thank you, Mr. Speaker; I rise to support the recommendation from the public accounts committee. I think it is the very least that needs to be done, and it needs to be done very fast. Of course, let us not forget that the person responsible for bringing the situation to this point, bringing about the loss of credibility the museum might suffer, is the Minister of Culture and Recreation; it results from his inaction.

Back at the beginning of April, there was evidence presented by the director that was given to the social development committee. The committee accepted that evidence in good faith and two weeks later we find that all of those facts and figures were wrong, in essence. At that time the minister was flippant with the press, saying: "I am going to go to the bottom of this," et cetera, et cetera, ad infinitum.

But in effect the minister sat and did nothing until the whole thing exploded into the press. Then the minister and the government really had no option. Giving it to the public accounts committee is the very least that should have been done. What the minister should have done at the end of April, when he found the museum was not giving him, as he claimed, the facts and figures as they existed, is call for an inquiry into the museum, both in terms of finances and in terms of the low morale that existed. We don't need 15 or 20 unknown curators sending a letter to the Legislature because they do not want to go through the existing structures for fear of losing their jobs. That's exactly the way the situation is. I know the minister does not like to hear these things but that's exactly the way it stands.

I certainly don't know, to this point, whether or not there's mismanagement of the museum. I certainly don't know whether there is overspending, or whether there is, as some people allege, feather-bedding. I certainly don't know whether the freeze on hiring that was supposed to be established in 1975 was established or whether in the years 1976-1977-1978 we added 40 to 50 more people at the museum. I don't know if these things exist, but I suppose the provincial auditor will take a look at that and at whether there's been mismanagement of the finances.

What I do know is that the morale at the museum has been at the lowest point in its history. What I do know is that the minister and the ministry did not take this problem sooner and do something about it and I think the minister should accept full responsibility for that, for having come to this particular point without action.

I do know for a fact there were meetings supposedly between the administration of the museum and the minister. I do know for a fact the minister said that he would keep the people in the social development committee updated in terms of what is happening in those meetings. And I do know for a fact I did not receive any information about those meetings.

If the minister wanted to heal the problem at the museum in some kind of a backroom fashion, well, that is fine; if that is his style, that is his style. However, once the social development committee, a committee of this Legislature, received financial information that was not correct; once the layoffs that were supposed to have occurred were no longer going to occur; once the minister had a meeting with Dr. Cruise at the museum and the minister supposedly promised funds to go to the museum, and then we find out from Dr. Wright, your deputy minister, that no such agreement was reached, then something is wrong.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, just to keep the members of the Legislature updated in these kinds of things, there was a statement that the director of the museum made to the staff which said: "I am personally delighted to report that our board of trustees, particularly through the finance committee and the Minister of Culture and Recreation, the Honourable Reuben C. Baetz, have become convinced of the absolute necessity of avoiding layoffs of the Royal Ontario Museum staff numbers as a result of the current fiscal stringencies. Consequently, extraordinary arrangements will be made by both our board and the minister to assist us in our efforts to retain the fullest possible staff complement throughout the 1979-80 fiscal year. Mr. Baetz will issue a press release on this subject before the end of the week."

That is when the minister was supposed to act. The date of this memorandum is Friday, April 27; in other words, two and a half weeks after the social development committee hearing. That clearly was the time at which the minister could have acted, but the minister allowed the credibility of the museum, of the staff, of the administration of the museum, really to go downhill from that point on. That is the reason why, if the museum has suffered any loss of credibility, the Minister of Culture and Recreation should accept full responsibility for that. The least—I repeat, the least—that the minister and the government should do is to allow the provincial auditor to audit the financial statements of the museum.

I hope that the minister, some time within the next two to three weeks, will take a look at the private member's bill I presented in this Legislature. I think it makes a lot of sense. I think the day is gone when boards that work on behalf of the public and make public decisions should remain virtually closed with no public access to them, and the board at the museum is one of these many boards.

I just leave the minister with this thought. I hope he takes a look at the private member's bill and I hope he will introduce legislation to make sure that that becomes a reality. With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for your indulgence.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton West.

Mr. S. Smith: Aren't we taking it in rotation? I don't mind if the—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister has already spoken.

Mr. McClellan: Read the Order Paper, Reuben. This wouldn't have happened to your friend.

Mr. S. Smith: It is interesting that the Royal Ontario Museum is now before us for discussion. It is a very great institution and one to which I am sure all of us are very dedicated, one whose health we all wish to preserve and whose future we wish to flourish.

But it is interesting as well that it is one of those places to which this government over the last 36 years has been appointing its friends to operate. I point out they have this at Ontario Place, at the Ontario Science Centre—at Ontario Hydro, believe it or not, which is after all larger than most governments in North America. They have this basic situation after 36 years where partisans and friends of one party have been settling into sinecures in various posts in Ontario.

At the Royal Ontario Museum we have almost the archetype of that particular type of sinecure. We have a situation, perfectly obvious now to the population of Ontario, where the finances, although no one is suggesting irregularities or wrong-doing of any kind—certainly there is no one in this House who would suggest such a thing—where the finances appear to be, to put it mildly, in a shambles; where this House can be told one day in one of its committees anticipated receipts that the museum may expect, and be told two weeks later those figures are out by several hundred per cent.

We have a situation where among members of the staff, both the maintenance and curatorial staff, there is very real fear that because of the expansion certain expenses are being incurred—either expenses due to certain movements within the museum or certain functions that have to be performed—which would not otherwise have occurred had there not been an expansion. There is a concern, which I know the auditor will look at, that certain expenses which ought properly therefore to be related to the capital expansion are being covered out of operating revenue. And there is a fear among the staff that these moneys might more properly have been used—if in fact it be the case that such moneys have been transferred to capital purposes—in both salaries and other expenses within the museum operating budget. The auditor will undoubtedly be able to help us with regard to that.

But for me, in the opposition, the most fascinating aspect of this is to pass by the museum day after day and to see buses by the dozen lined up there with school children and with adults going to the museum to obtain the kind of experience, the kind of education, the kind of enlightenment which can only come from such a great institution. One sees the tourism component; the great addition which the museum represents to the tourism of the province of Ontario and the city of Toronto.

It is absolutely astonishing to me that any minister who would take on responsibility for a portfolio which involves that museum and who would see the countless thousands of people who depend upon that museum, directly and indirectly, would contemplate that museum might actually be closed to the public for purposes of renovation. In fact, I would have difficulty understanding it being closed for a week or for a month, let alone for years at a time. In the name of improvement of this institution, it would appear that certain planners have taken it upon themselves to consider its closure.

The amazing thing to me—and one never knows in this world what responsibilities might be thrust upon one at some point—

Mr. Foulds: Don't be too hopeful, Stuart.

Mr. S. Smith:—just thinking about the matter of administration of government, one has to ask is it possible, is it conceivable, that a minister would hand out some $17 million or more for purposes of expansion and that no one in his ministry will bother to sit down with the group that is asking for that money in such a vital institution, to look over carefully, possibly with a fine-tooth comb, the planning for which that money is being apportioned. It is absolutely outrageous that when we rise in this House to ask the minister whether he was even told about the contemplated closing of that museum, he was for weeks unable to answer that and was unable to tell the members of this House whether he even knew that such a closing was contemplated, let alone the length of it.

On this day as we stand here now, we heard earlier that government policy is to have a minimum disruption. In the first place, it is interesting that the government has any policy on this particular matter. There has been precious little sign of it up to now during the last three and four months of this debate. The government's policy is one of minimum disruption, whatever that means. We have that word from a minister who couldn't even tell us here a couple of weeks ago whether he knew that the museum would be closed for the purpose of this expansion.

We have heard from certain experts that the closure might be now necessary because it would cost a lot of money to stretch out the process of making these improvements and expansions. Consequently, it might be a situation where the public should be told to expect the closure now or else pay more money for a lengthier expansion procedure later.

That is going about things completely backwards. First, the government should start by saying the museum is not going to be closed. Secondly, it would say: "Here is the amount of money available." Thirdly, it should demand a plan to expand the museum within the budget available. Instead, they did things completely the wrong way round. They first gave out the money without looking at a plan. After that, they were told that it would be closed. Thirdly, they said: "My goodness, if it isn't going to be closed, we won't be able to do as big an expansion as we wanted to do in the first place." What a fine way of painting the people of Ontario and the government of Ontario into a financial box!

It is beyond any dispute that the ministry, and particularly this minister, has failed in its duty to make certain it knew what the plans of expansion were in every detail, with every "t" crossed and every "i" dotted, before it assured anyone of the kinds of millions of dollars of public funds which were assured to the museum for its expansion.

One final word: We are told that the museum board is going to be able to give facts and figures to the auditor and that this cloud which the minister says has artificially been placed over the museum will be dissipated. The cloud is over the museum because of the utter incompetence of the minister. The cloud is over the museum because no one has bothered to make certain that a proper plan was presented before the money was handed over, instead of after the money was handed over.

The cloud should be removed from over the head of the museum, but the best way to do it would be, first of all, with a change of the government of the day. Secondly, until that happens there must surely be some fresh air brought into those cobwebbed halls of those Tory partisans who now consider themselves to be the directors and who over the years have been the directors of that public trust.

Surely the time has come to have the public interest represented on that museum and to have certain elected people, if that be appropriate—and I think it is very appropriate—as part of that board. It is important that the membership, as suggested by the member for Oakwood, have more representation on the board. I would go even farther than he and have some elected people there as well. It is not good enough for someone to be on that board representing the curatorial interests or the maintenance interests or the interests of those who meet at the Ritz-Carleton or outside Holt Renfrew from time to time to discuss these matters.

Mr. Nixon: Sometimes inside.

Mr. S. Smith: It is important that the interests be maintained of the ordinary citizen, the students, the children, the people who go to that museum to learn and the people who depend on tourism. Someone on that board must be protecting the interests of those people. At the moment, there is no one on that board assigned the job basically of protecting the interests of the ordinary citizens of Ontario and it's about time we had some elected representation on that board to do so.

[8:45]

I am pleased that all three parties, and in this I give credit to the government party, have agreed that the provincial auditor should be looking at these matters and I have every confidence that his investigation will be the kind of investigation which, as my colleague from Rainy River has pointed out, will show the value and the benefit of the new Audit Act, and I salute the fact that all three parties have agreed on this. But, lest we forget, I want to make it very plain that the problem lies in the minister, in the ministry, in their procedures, in their appointees on the board, and ultimately with the government of the day.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I thought there was rotation and we have had, since I spoke, one speaker there, one speaker from one opposition party, another speaker from the other opposition party, and no speaker from the government.

Mr. Speaker: Anyone from the government side who wants to speak and has not already spoken may do so. Members only have the opportunity to speak once in a debate. If anybody else wants to participate I would be happy to recognize him.

Do you have a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Do I have permission to speak again sometime in this debate?

Mr. Speaker: No. The minister has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: To respond to some of this drivel that I hear from across the floor.

Mr. Speaker: No. This isn't a government-sponsored bill.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Drivel. That's all it is.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The chair has been very tolerant up to this point in time. I must remind all honourable members that the motion before the House is: "Your committee recommends that the Royal Ontario Museum furnish the committee with the most current monthly financial statement and budget of the Royal Ontario Museum for analysis by the provincial auditor, such statement analysis to be returned to the committee within three weeks, preferably two weeks.

"Your committee further recommends that the Minister of Culture and Recreation, the Deputy Minister of Culture and Recreation, together with the chairman of the board of the Royal Ontario Museum attend at the committee's deliberations of that matter." That is really what is before the House.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hadn't intended to speak, I had actually come into the House to speak on the next agenda item which is the report of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, but because the Liberal Party is obviously wanting to string this debate out to avoid discussing the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital and their health critic is not even in the House, I will deal with this issue.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member going to deal with this issue or the next one?

Mr. McClellan: I'm dealing with this issue.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McClellan: I just wanted to put a couple of concerns on the record in addition to the one that I just did put on the record, and that concern is this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. If there is any situation here that has happened in the last few days that might constitute imputing of motives, that came closest to it.

Mr. McClellan: Far be it from me to impute motives, Mr. Speaker.

The issue before us is important. The issue came before the social development committee on April 11 for the first time. I had thought that I was the person on that committee who would first question Dr. Cruise about the state of the museum's finances but I was wrong. The member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) from the Liberal Party had asked Dr. Cruise a question before I questioned Dr. Cruise about some doctor at the museum who was doing research connected with the Sportsmen's Show. That was their contribution to the discussion.

The thing that concerns me very much is this: when I had the opportunity to question Dr. Cruise in front of the committee he gave information to me and to other members of the committee which turns out not to be accurate, not to be accurate at all. I don't understand that kind of a state of affairs.

I had asked Dr. Cruise, "What's happening at the museum?"—as bluntly as that. I asked him to present us with the financial picture of the museum as of April 11, 1979, and Dr. Cruise came forward with what appeared to be a fairly plausible explanation of the museum's financial affairs and indicated that with the payment of additional revenues in the order of $600,000 all of their problems would be solved. That turns out not to be true. It simply turns out not to be true.

I don't know what the minister thought when he discovered that non-factual information had been given to the committee. I don't know why the minister chose to treat it as flippantly as he did, as though it was some kind of minor peccadillo that could be shrugged off, when officials under his jurisdiction give fallacious information to a committee of the Legislature.

The minister isn't even listening. I call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the minister even now isn't paying the slightest bit of attention. I'm sure he hasn't heard a word I've said.

Mr. Nixon: He's desperately perusing the rules.

Mr. McClellan: He may well be reading the rules of order.

Mr. Roy: That's not fair. He's just trying to learn procedure now.

Mr. McClellan: He may well be reading the rules of order to try to figure out how to behave in the House. He's certainly not listening to the debate.

I welcome the resolution that's in front of us because it will give an opportunity for a thorough scrutiny of the museum's affairs as well as of the transparently phony information that was given to the committee.

The minister still isn't listening.

This minister is a rare specimen. He moves into the ministry and within a matter of weeks the multicultural program is in a state of shambles; his officials are—

Mr. Peterson: Put your hands in your pockets, will you?

Mr. McClellan: I'm Italian. What can I do?

The officials seem to be distorting the program for crass political purposes. The next thing we look at under this minister's jurisdiction being the museum, we see such a can of worms that it is indescribable; it is incomprehensible to members of the Legislature.

The minister has a rare genius. He is a walking catastrophe. Everything he touches turns to chaos and discombobulation.

I hope he has found the appropriate page of the standing orders. It's difficult to debate with such a stolid fellow.

At any rate, I support the motion. I hope we can pass it quickly and move on to the next item, which is the closing of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I, too, hope that the motion can be passed quickly. But the member for Bellwoods, having entered the debate, has prompted me just to put forward one or two ideas, particularly since I see the provincial auditor in the gallery. I really welcome his presence because I hope some of the thoughts put forward from all sides will be of some assistance, perhaps small assistance, to him in carrying out the responsibilities that will descend on him following the passage of the motion.

The motion says in its middle paragraph: "The committee recommends that the museum furnish the committee with the most current monthly financial statement and budget of the Royal Ontario Museum for analysis by the provincial auditor."

My colleague, the chairman of the public accounts committee, has properly brought to our attention that that analysis is something more than adding and subtracting the figures to see how the balance comes out. It has to do with an objective judgement as to the quality of the services we are deriving from the expenditure of the money—in fact, the quality of the administration and leadership of the Royal Ontario Museum.

I have always been impressed with the way the provincial auditor, who is a moderate man in all things, has seized on responsibilities such as this that have come to him properly from this House through the public accounts committee. I have felt his advice in this connection could never be identified as anything but moderate, intelligent, incisive and, certainly, very fair-minded. He has this reputation which means that his recommendations through the committee, and through the committee to this House, will be very significant indeed.

But I should also say I'm not nearly as sanguine as the minister in his comments that in two or three weeks from now we will see that all is well at the museum. My leader has pointed out in very strong and vivid terms the concern that all citizens have when we read the projections for the closing of that institution for some undetermined period of time, which will mean the facility will be cut off from the citizens, and particularly the students, of the province. As a matter of fact, in some respects, the Royal Ontario Museum may very well be in some jeopardy because the government, through its expenditure of public funds in building the Ontario Science Centre and Ontario Place and the upgrading of the art gallery, has created many alternatives that vie with the museum for the public dollar and for the students and others who would go there.

It has been described recently as the sort of attic of the province. There is everything there from Queen Victoria's wedding gown to pornographic hieroglyphics on Egyptian vases. And I can assure members that any intelligent 12-year-old can find them.

Mr. Peterson: How do you know?

Mr. Breithaupt: What do they say?

Mr. Nixon: I was 18 at the time.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Which exhibit did you notice?

Mr. Nixon: There has been a recent direct criticism of the museum—and I don't want to stray from the words of the resolution—in Toronto Life. It brought to bear criticism on the minister, particularly for the judgement that has been shown in maintaining the present board—the very deep concern that many people feel. The board kicked off its fund-raising opportunities at Holt Renfrew—my colleague and leader made reference to this—and it was more or less supported by the minister. He said at the opening of Holt Renfrew, the most prestigious and chic store on Bloor Street and many other streets, that through the generosity of his Wintario fund he would match dollar for dollar any money that was raised.

Even in that regard I hope the auditor will look at the efficacy of such a procedure. One cannot fulfil either the leadership of the museum or its clientele from the mansions of Rosedale or the penthouses on the Lakeshore. It's got to appeal to the people of this city and, in fact, the whole province who perhaps do not associate with the first settlers in Waterloo county or even Brant.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Nixon: There are a lot of people who came into this province since the honourable minister's forefathers came here who are maybe not so interested in what the Holt Renfrew set think is chic or where the best parties are given.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'm not interested in that kind of rubbish. If you want to be non-partisan—

Mr. Roy: You've had your chance to speak.

Mr. Nixon: This is a matter that must concern the members of this House. Members will recall on more than one occasion when the government has taken off the gloves and moved into an organization and put some order into it. I simply recall to the minister's mind what the government had to do with the Ontario College of Art.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First Peterson raving on, and now you want to make a big political football of this. Despicable.

Mr. Hennessy: Louder, Nixon, we can't hear you.

Mr. Nixon: Well, the minister is gesturing. At least I've caught his attention. He has apparently decided not to rely on his predecessor, the former Minister of Culture and Recreation, who, I trust, will enter the debate before it concludes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We want to end the debate and get on with the public accounts of the province.

Mr. Nixon: I am very much in support of the motion. It is very cleverly and astutely drawn by the member for London Centre. It calls into play the more modern and effective responsibilities the committee on public accounts can use through the offices of the provincial auditor. We are hoping he will look at the information ancillary to these accounts.

[9:00]

For example, there is no reason at all he should not examine carefully the letter from the curators. The fact it was not signed by individual curators and so in that respect is anonymous should not prompt him or the minister to dismiss it. There is no question it was written by the curators and called for the kind of internal audit which must concern us and I'm sure will concern the provincial auditor.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was condemned by the other professional staff who said they were disgusted at the sending of the letter.

Mr. Nixon: I have no hesitation in supporting this motion. I have the greatest confidence in the auditor.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Then why don't you let him get on with the job instead of standing there pulling off a grandstand?

Mr. Nixon: I must say the present minister, who has used up his proper opportunity to enter into this debate and is now interfering with the debate by interjection, is travelling a very difficult path.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're grandstanding.

Mr. Nixon: I believe his ministry more and more is going to be brought to public attention because of the inefficiencies of the administration and the deep concern people have about the use of the funds collected in this province through Wintario.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Why don't you let the provincial auditor get to the story then?

Mr. Roy: You're embarrassed.

Mr. Nixon: We are very much concerned, for example, about his decision in support of the museum in such a cavalier way. We want the museum to be supported, but we want it to be done in a fair and equitable manner.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're wasting the time of this House.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, under standing order 36, I move that this question be now put.

Mr. Mancini: That's closure.

Mr. S. Smith: Are we not to hear from the member for Brock (Mr. Welch)?

Mr. Speaker: Is the member for Port Arthur moving the previous question? Shall the previous question be put?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why should we cut off debate?

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. S. Smith: Let's hear from the previous minister. The present minister will tell him what to say.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in joining in this debate briefly—

Mr. McClellan: Where is Sean Conway?

Mr. Foulds: You are filibustering.

Mr. McClellan: Where is Sean Conway?

Mr. Foulds: You're too chicken to discuss the Health report.

Mr. McClellan: Too cowardly to discuss Lakeshore.

Mr. Breithaupt: —because it fell to me during my six years as chairman of the public accounts committee to be very concerned with respect to the audits of a variety of operations in the province. I was interested in relating to this motion with respect to the analysis by the provincial auditor that was referred to in the motion.

The chairman of the public accounts committee, my colleague from Rainy River, referred to the Audit Act and referred particularly to section 12 and the opportunity the provincial auditor now has to consider whether funds provided by provincial authorities—

Mr. Lawlor: The more unanimous, the longer the debate.

Mr. Breithaupt: —are expended with due regard to economy and efficiency. This, I think, is a useful attribute of the provincial Audit Act and it's one which I think should commend itself to all the members of this House.

A number of members have now spoken on the background and the operation of the museum. I think if we can put that to one side for now to consider the activities of the provincial auditor with respect to these areas we would indeed be well served in doing so.

The provincial auditor, over the years, has had an Audit Act now substantially different from that in effect in the federal field. I recall that, during the years when I was chairman of the public accounts committee, we had a circumstance whereby we really were not given the opportunity to see value judgements made on funds spent within the province. That, I believe, has changed, fortunately for the better. We have not only an Audit Act which involves itself more strongly in that area, but I believe we also have a provincial auditor who is quite prepared to make these value judgements and to advise the House on a solid and mature opinion as to whether funds have or have not been as well spent as they might have been in the public interest.

In the motion which has been brought before us through the vice-chairman, my colleague from Lincoln, and following the remarks and the motion made by the member for London Centre, it would appear we now have the opportunity for the first real use of the new Audit Act. I believe the circumstances have been clearly set out, and all members of the House are quite clearly of a view that there have been no irregularities or any miscreant involvement of the spending of public funds in this matter.

What we are looking at here is possibly a matter of some judgement, possibly a matter of the use of funds in one area when they might have been somewhat more peculiarly relevant to another area in the expansion of the museum, compared with the use of current day-to-day operating funds.

A number of members have referred on occasion to the letter which has been received from a group, apparently, of the curatorial staff in the museum. I do not necessarily share the view that these persons must necessarily reveal their names and make themselves immediately apparent to the investigating committee. I believe it would be a much better thing if they did so. However, if it is their wish to remain anonymous, they of course have that opportunity.

In that letter they have set forward a series of deeply held beliefs and concerns about the future of the museum and the future of the organization of which they are a part. To share those concerns with the House and with the general public is a most important decision. I think we have now the chance to review the statistical and accounting matters within the Royal Ontario Museum, one would hope in the best interest of all concerned. That interest includes those who have sent in that letter. It includes, of course, the many busloads of visitors and school children to whom my leader referred earlier. It also includes, of course, not only the general public of the province, but also all of us more particularly as members of the Legislature.

I am quite of a view that the minister who is responsible in this area is every bit as concerned about the operation of the museum as is any one of us. I do not for the moment view his involvement as being anything less than a general interest in the operation of the museum as he sees it. But we on this side of the House have been concerned about this whole circumstance; we have been concerned about the press comments and the involvement we have seen. Therefore, we welcome the opportunity for an independent and impartial audit of the current operating procedures within the museum.

Much has been said about the operation of the board of governors of the museum and the web and framework that exists across the province, with government appointees in this and many other branches, boards, commissions and agencies which involve and almost infect every aspect of life within the province. However, that has been referred to and I need not develop it further here.

Suffice it to say that I welcome this opportunity to see the use of the Audit Act and the value judgements involved, which the provincial auditor may make in this circumstance if he believes it worthwhile. I believe the analysis by the provincial auditor will be a most worthwhile one, and I certainly look forward to supporting this motion.

Mr. Sargent: A very brief observation, Mr. Speaker: We feel the Royal Ontario Museum belongs to the people of Ontario but, in my years in business, I cannot think of any business in the world with such a great potential for our people that could close for four years, or 17 months—or any time at all—for renovations. It is unbelievable.

The incredible situation here is that all through this debate the minister has been talking to the government House leader, trying to find out what the hell was going on and why he could not speak again. Most of us here know that one in the first week. The minister has been here a long time.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I wasn't up to your tricks. You are filibustering. Why don't you get on with the next piece of business? You're a coward to get on with it.

Mr. Sargent: I say to the minister, please hear these two things. In all my years here, he is the only minister I ever saw who won't answer his mail. He won't answer his mail at all.

Mr. Peterson: You have got to be able to read to do that.

Mr. Sargent: Second, here, before the public accounts committee, we have the shocking, incredible situation. The minister's deputy minister said he didn't know if the museum was going to be closed for a year or four years or whatever. He said the minister didn't know either.

Mr. Roy: Of course, that is no surprise.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That shouldn't come as a surprise.

Mr. Sargent: What I am concerned about is this thing spreads through the whole situation of the government. We have the deputy ministers trying to run the show when the ministers can't give them any guidance. Here we have the minister in charge of the most flagrant political slush fund in all Canada, with his ability to run a business. From all I can see in this whole pattern, he has never yet proven any business ability in Hydro or anything, to divulge millions of dollars of our funds, unless it's politically motivated. I say that's my great concern in a thing like the ROM. The minister is playing politics with it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Did the member for Etobicoke wish to speak? All right. The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I move this question now be put.

Mr. S. Smith: We want to hear from the House leader. We have no more speakers.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I'm sorry, the motion is out of order.

Mr. Nixon: No business has intervened.

Mr. Foulds: Two speakers have intervened.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Well, that's not any business of the House.

Mr. Foulds: That is true, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: That came out a little differently than I expected it to.

Mr. Foulds: It came out right on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we have no more speakers; I think the House leader of the government wishes to speak now.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Does the House leader of the government wish to speak?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The matter before us this evening is a consideration of two recommendations from the standing public accounts committee, in case that has eluded the attention of honourable members. There are two recommendations to which we have been asked to give some consideration. Perhaps we could start with the second.

The committee recommended the Royal Ontario Museum furnish the committee, the committee being the public accounts committee, with the most current monthly financial statements and budget of the Royal Ontario Museum for analysis by the provincial auditor. Such statements, analyses and so on, were to be returned to the committee within three weeks, and preferably within two weeks.

Second, there was a recommendation that the Minister of Culture and Recreation, the Deputy Minister of Culture and Recreation together with the chairman of the board of the Royal Ontario Museum and the director of the Royal Ontario Museum, attend at the committee's deliberations of the matter.

The Minister of Culture and Recreation made it quite clear earlier today that he concurred with both of those recommendations. Indeed, it seemed to me to be quite in order that we would simply call this and agree to this and get on with the rest of the business that has been scheduled for this evening.

The member for London Centre, I think, set the very proper tone for this debate when he said he didn't wish to see this reduced to any partisan issue. He made quite clear the great respect he and his colleagues had for the museum, and the wonderful program at the museum. It was echoed by the Leader of the Opposition, who made reference to the long lines of school buses in front of the museum and the tremendous world-wide reputation which this institution holds. He expanded on this whole theme in an effort to impress this House through Hansard and through the media, with the very high respect in which the official opposition held the institution and all who laboured therein. That particular theme was expanded by speaker after speaker as the official opposition was avoiding—

[9:15]

Mr. T. P. Reid: You are a little rusty, but you are not doing badly.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—the second report which is soon to come before the House.

Mr. Peterson: How can you say all this with tongue in cheek and keep a straight face?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There were two matters, however, which the Leader of the Opposition made reference to which I do not feel can go unchallenged. I would hope that the Leader of the Opposition in all seriousness would not call into question the sincerity and the very high motivation of many public-spirited citizens who have accepted appointment to the board of trustees of the museum.

Mr. Peterson: It is your sincerity and your motivation.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Indeed I would think that we should record—

Mr. S. Smith: It's not their sincerity or interest, it's your partisanship.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Some of them speak very highly of the Leader of the Opposition, to tell the truth.

An hon. member: Name one.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The point is that they do have a respect for preservation in all its forms.

Mr. Kennedy: Including the Liberals.

Mr. Peterson: Self-preservation in your case.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would point out that we have men and women who have accepted the nomination to be members of this board who have the interests of the museum very close to their heart and hold it in the same high esteem—

Mr. Roy: Nobody denies that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Your leader does.

Mr. Roy: It's you people who are trying to make politics out of it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —as members of the opposition, I think it's unfortunate that that sincerity and that motivation would be called into question or that any of those people would be questioned with respect to their judgement and their interest in and their concern for this institution. I simply felt compelled to stand and speak very solidly in favour of the devotion and the high sense of public service with—

Mr. Sargent: That's a crock of nonsense and you know it. Talk about the points involved.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —which the members of the board of trustees discharged their responsibility.

Mr. Makarchuk: They are the same kind of bunch we had running Ontario Place when they cleaned it out of half a million bucks.

Mr. S. Smith: What about their political affiliation?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Actually, I am glad the Leader of the Opposition raised that question. We don't ask people what their political affiliation is.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You don't have to. You already know. They just all happen to be Tories.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you call me some time?

An hon. member: You are jealous.

Mr. S. Smith: The CNE and the Science Centre too.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We just don't ask that particular question. Because of the fact that such a high percentage of the people of this province happen to be supporters of this government, it would be logical that indeed that would reflect itself in this respect.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is 38 per cent.

Mr. S. Smith: One per cent of your appointees aren't.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The other matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the House, before we call this question, is to remind the members of the statement my colleague, the Minister of Culture and Recreation, made earlier today in the Legislature, copies of which were distributed prior to it being read.

Mr. Nixon: Don't remind us of that.

Mrs. Campbell: No, they weren't.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, they were.

Hon. Mr. Welch: In that my colleague makes some reference to the plans because these were called into question by the Leader of the Opposition as to whether or not there were any plans or some timetable with respect to the expansion and the renovation program—

Mr. S. Smith: I asked that three weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —I would draw attention to the statement made by my colleague earlier today, which will now be recorded in Hansard, where he goes on to make certain points about the museum's expansion and renovation program.

He says in the course of that statement: "The basic feature of the policy is that work should proceed in three distinct phases and that work on any one of these phases will not begin until all the money for that phase is either in hand or committed. This policy enabled the museum to start building the curatorial centre at an estimated cost of $25.6 million in April 1978. The cost of the curatorial centre has been covered by a $12.75 million grant from the government of Ontario; $6.7 million raised to date from voluntary donations," which I think is a credit to the people of this province and some indication of their interest and their support of this great institution, "and a matching $6.7 million" from those who are involved in that great two-weekly game called Wintario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: A game? Is that what it is?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The statement said: Construction of the curatorial centre is the largest of the three phases and will provide the curatorial staff for the first time with their own offices and laboratory facilities. That means there will be more space for the viewing public and a place for the curators to do their work."

The important point, as he said, is that "no decision has been made on which of the next two phases, construction of the terrace galleries or renovation of the main building will proceed first." But he makes it quite clear in his statement that "it is government policy that there will be an absolute minimum of disruption" in so far as the public is concerned.

I felt compelled to remind the House of this statement, notwithstanding the fact it really doesn't speak directly to the recommendations that are here. I think it a bit unfortunate the very high tone established by the member for London Centre slipped slightly when we got into raising questions with respect to the sincerity and the sense of public responsibility of very dedicated men and women who have served on this board of trustees over the years.

Mr. S. Smith: No one questions their interest or sincerity—only their judgement.

Report adopted.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE (concluded)

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the report of the standing social development committee, dated May 25, 1979, respecting Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

Mr. Gaunt: I just wanted to make a few brief comments with respect to this report. As chairman of the committee, I should mention that we had a good many expert witnesses come before our committee. In total, we had some 53 witnesses.

During the period of the hearings we had the administrator and the medical directors of both Queen and Lakeshore, and many of the medical staff; the Ontario Public Service Employees Union made a presentation; we had people from inside the ministry, including the minister himself; we had people in the community in the surrounding area serviced by Lakeshore and beyond, and we had the Ontario fire marshal. In short, we had a host of expert witnesses who came before the committee and offered their views. Some of these views were in conflict, but at least the committee got the benefit of their opinion.

In the end the committee could not come to a complete consensus with respect to its report. As one will see in the standing orders, the Conservative members indicated they felt the closing of Lakeshore was justified, in that the services offered there could adequately be offered at Queen Street.

I suppose the most controversial part of the whole report was the matter having to do with the inpatients in Lakeshore. It was on that point, as well as a number of other points, where the committee did suffer some disagreement.

In terms of the various party positions, I am sure they will be adequately put in the course of the discussion tonight. But in short, in terms of the inpatients, the Conservative Party felt the inpatients could be moved from Lakeshore to Queen and that their care would not suffer in that new facility. The Liberal Party felt they could be moved, provided certain conditions were met. Two of these conditions were that the transfer be accomplished in a well-planned fashion and that the state of the transfer be indicated to the committee when the minister had a final plan for doing so, and that the minister report back to the committee no later than November 30 this year.

As far as the New Democratic Party was concerned, their position was unequivocal from the outset. They opposed the closing of Lakeshore Hospital. They expressed a concern on a number of occasions having to do with the employees and the impact the closing would have on the employees. The dissenting opinion, therefore, of the New Democratic Party is listed in the report and goes on for several pages.

In terms of setting the stage for the debate, Mr. Speaker, I want to say we did have a good hearing. I think it was a good process in terms of finding out the facts and getting all of the information which the committee found to be very helpful in its deliberations. At this time I want to pay tribute to all of the witnesses who appeared before the committee and who co-operated so fully.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, that was fairly set out as to the positions taken by the various people on the matter. Let me say fairly objectively, I trust, that the McKinsey report was the nub upon which everything turned. Here was a major report, made in a scientific way and at arm's length by the government, as to what the disposition of these psychiatric hospitals is and should be as things stand.

McKinsey was perfectly cognizant of Queen Street, of its capacity or lack of capacity and what that capacity was. It had surveyed that. Certain witnesses before the committee tried to knock McKinsey down somewhat by saying it was not an overall system survey of the mental health needs in all its dimensions in the metropolitan area and in the province itself. To a point that is true.

Nevertheless, with respect to the very hospitals involved, in which McKinsey did an in-depth analysis, it came down squarely in the proposition that these three hospitals—Queen Street, Lakeshore and Whitby—were critically necessary into the unresolved future in this regard.

Even in the face of that, on what still seems to me to be one ground, the ground of capitalization—on money—the government saw fit to jettison that out of hand without consultation and quite unilaterally, and with bad advice given to the minister, I may say, by his subordinate staff.

Pace to you, Mr. Jappy. And Tom Campbell, I hope we do not meet again in the paths of Glencoe; my ancestors were Macdonalds, and you may have undone us a little bit on that particular occasion. The strong positions being taken internally there strike me as very questionable indeed.

The McKinsey report said this hospital was a vital, ongoing necessity. He surveyed, as was brought forward in the sixth chapter, pages three and four, what the Queen Street situation was. The basic position is stated thus: "Our analysis indicates that of 284 additional beds that are theoretically available, about 125 to 150 could actually be made available for use." They have extended it away beyond that, using former conference rooms, dining rooms, crowding people in at every angle. Is that the way to treat mentally ill people, in a box-like and concentrated way, loading that hospital when the other one may be maintained?

During the course of the hearings, and before, I offered an alternative proposition to the minister which, with respect, was never considered and never discussed at any point in the hearing; that was a phasing concept. Why did not the ministry in its wisdom, if it were prepared to spend $25 million on new facilities, consider dividing that sum as between Lakeshore on one hand and Whitby on the other? Why could it not set up buildings to meet immediate needs in both respects and then gradually, over the next decade, phase in new operations and new buildings?

If the ministry is right about the retrenchment and about the fact that there will not be increasing inpatient necessities—and I sincerely question it, but granting for the moment that the ministry is right—then nothing elaborate would have to be located on the grounds at Lakeshore. I have said a 150-bed hospital probably would meet the needs until about the year 1987 or 1985. There is no burden upon the capital picture of the province in that particular regard.

There was no sense of accommodation to that fairly rational proposition; no answers were made at any particular point. We weren't crying for the moon, we were just trying to be sensible about it. But the ministry was intransigent. The ministry sets down its adamant terms and won't budge.

I hope that Windsor proposition of the last 48 hours is not a reflection of the minister's mentality, that he stands firm in the face of all obstacles. Does he want me to launch an application to the Supreme Court of Ontario tomorrow with respect to Lakeshore in order to force his hand with respect to the proposition? He might very well, as in the Windsor situation, find himself hung up and even reversed.

Is the minister going to force all these hospitals—and every one of them is in some degree of turmoil and constriction as a result of the minister's policies—to make application to Supreme Court judges to override his mandate? It was unheard of that a judge should have to move in, in face of doctors' affidavits, in order to foreclose what is an infliction on human beings, placing in severe jeopardy—so the courts must have seen—human lives.

I don't propose to do any such thing. As a matter of fact, I am going to relent just for a moment and give the minister an ounce of credit over against a pound of punishment. The ounce of credit is that I understand in the last day or two he has agreed to keep all the outpatient facilities on the grounds; that he is retaining immediately at least 50 members of the staff who had got their notices; that he is meeting very shortly again in order to make accommodation for the other 60 people who are being laid off. In other words, he is extending some kind of clemency and sense of proportion in this particular regard. These things he should be given credit for.

As things stand, I would ask the minister to go slow with Lakeshore, very slow indeed. He is going to find—like it, lump it or blast it—that he is going to need the facility in two years. At the present time it is taking in more patients all the time; Queen Street can't accommodate them, so patients continue to enter that hospital. The minister's answer, no doubt, is that Queen Street's accommodation is not quite ready to take the load. I put it to him that Queen Street will never be ready to take that load. As the weight comes on the minister is going to have to accommodate.

Let the minister keep those buildings ready; he will have to use them. But, again, I am gratified to have the outpatient facilities there which will keep that volunteer staff occupied to some great degree. It is not what it should be, but it is a small concession and one doesn't look gift horses in the teeth any more, because the teeth are usually bad.

The hearings themselves went on for four weeks. I listed about 25 pieces of major testimony. I don't want to derogate from anybody's testimony, but some came from people the minister called in to bolster the defence. May I put it, Mr. Speaker, that overwhelmingly they said—I would say 22 of the 25—the hospital ought not to be closed, or that it should be closed only under very severe conditions which the minister doesn't hope to meet.

Overwhelmingly the evidence was the hospital ought not to be closed. I don't think this is an unfair statement. It came down through the psychiatric establishment in this city, and people from the Minister of Health's (Mr. Timbrell) own hospital. Their strongest evidence, and it was bloody weak by the time the day ended, came from Ottawa. The minister sent one of his emissaries down. They were talking about how wonderfully they worked in community medicine, except we discovered they sent 250 of their difficult cases off to Brockville. This is a backup facility, precisely the role Lakeshore plays with respect to this whole catchment area.

The sensible thing, and the minister won't deny it, is if the capital funds were at all available or he was willing to make accommodation or adjustment with those capital funds, Lakeshore would not be closed and couldn't be closed. He would have followed the nostrums and the McKinsey not necessarily with respect to the full expenditure that was involved, but with respect to the retention of the facilities themselves at least for the indefinite future. The new catchment areas in order to pick up the slack at Queen Street, would have been designed and put into motion, et cetera.

The two different complexes of mental hospitals that are involved here have quite different approaches to the mentally ill. Lakeshore has a far more informal, accommodating, almost gentle way of dealing with patients, over against the more rigorous, perhaps, as they tout themselves, the more highly professional one which is tied in with the university, et cetera, concerned with research, and concerned with aggravated forms of mental illness upon which teaching facilities arise. They are quite different in their tenor and structure.

It is not even today too late for the minister to back up, retrench, modify, and even change his mind. I doubt if he is prepared to do that. I think he feels his own personal prestige and whole role as a minister is at stake. Nothing would more enhance his position, his designs to be Premier perhaps, in any event the role he plays as a cabinet minister, a man of stature, a man of generosity and vision, than to back up. Some of the inpatients may have to be transferred, but I suggest he retain a substantial number of those people there as this situation is tested out.

I won't inveigh against the Liberals tonight. I was deeply disappointed at the time The member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) made a marvellous—as my friend puts it—Churchillian oration. You should have heard him. I've seldom heard a better speech in this House, but of course, it was in committee. It was a ringing thing. To be honest, the honourable member never committed himself to excluding, except there were certain sentences in there which led to no other conclusion.

I wish, secondly, he hadn't consulted with his leader quite so often. He is sitting in his office like some eminence grise co-ordinating events out there, manipulating for maximum political effect, masquerading the position by setting up opportunistic and qualifying clauses all over the place so we didn't know where the blazes they stood at the end, nor do we really tonight know where they stand. I have seldom seen such a piece of legerdemain performed, but that may be the style. If it is, I think it's self-defeating, politically and otherwise.

Before I sit down I want to make a special appeal to the minister. The child and adolescent care unit of that hospital is in an invidious position, caught between two stools—I use the word in all its implications—between the minister's department and the other. The funds are being taken away from both directions, and they're caught in the middle.

I think the date of their appearance before us was May 9. In the Hansard of May 9 they set forth their whole position and the crunch they find themselves in—which I'm sure the minister doesn't wish them to be in. He would have to speak to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) about how to straighten that out. They happen to be the victims, out on the periphery of the whole thing. If the minister would give some attention to that I would be very pleased.

Finally, I want to say to the minister, he was dead wrong about the fire. I think he's a little chastened about that, at least I trust he is. As a matter of fact, I think out of the fire of the hearings he might have emerged a somewhat more humble man—not humiliated; that's just the opposite—humble, in face of the decisions he will have to make and the quality of the feed-in to those particular decisions.

I want to say a word to the union. They were splendid. Without them we wouldn't have been able to carry on. On two occasions they supplied major briefs; made their appearances and gave us the best—and I think all members of the committee would agree—objective background about the whole thing.

Finally, I want to remind the minister there were over 30,000 petitions submitted to him in the course of the hearings—30,000. They come from the whole area, including the area of the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy), up through Etobicoke. That is not to be easily discounted.

Mr. Acting Chairman: Mr. Lawlor moves that the motion for adoption of the report of the standing social development committee, dated May 25, 1979, regarding Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital be amended by striking out the words "be adopted" and substituting therefor the following words: "be recommitted to the said committee for reconsideration."

Mr. Lawlor: If I may speak a word on that particular point. "Your lordship" will notice that in the report submitted by this committee we were forced to do an end run. The basic propositions are set out, the public ownership aspect. Then, when we come to what I consider the central issue—that is, the inpatient transfers—the party split in three directions. I really don't know if that's according to Hoyle, according to the way in which the orders are read. I'm using the clerk's argument against my own drafting, at the moment.

It remains indefinite, undefined. The crunch point is obscured. There is no central resolution. It is suggested in the Liberal amendment to that "that the committee re-examine and discuss the whole matter no later than November 30 of this year." That's fine. I should be delighted to discuss it again.

On the basis of the evidence we heard from all quarters, including the Mental Health Association, I wish that certain facilities, including housing, nurses' care in homes, a dozen outpatient facilities, et cetera, to which people are going to be relegated, were all in place and this is what was called for. And that's what we're looking forward for them to do. But none of that is resolved, nor did we go into any great definition as to what precisely these facilities might be.

I would think that the committee should reconvene and give this a more thorough scouting, and try to set up better definitions for the minister, guidelines for what should follow. It needs, God knows, to be led by the hand here and there.

The committee performed journeyman's services in this particular regard. We're quite prepared to go on. Therefore, in the light of the indefiniteness in this report and the inconclusive nature of the crucial part of it with respect to inpatients, I would think this House should very well consider sending the committee back, possibly in the summertime, but in any event, in order to give further consideration to this whole issue, so some greater sense can be brought in and the minister be far more informed than he is at present.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Lawlor's amendment will be voted upon on termination of the debate.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased, following our consideration of this issue before the committee, that it had been referred to the committee. It certainly gave those members a very good insight into the whole situation.

Mr. McClellan: It was something of a shocker too.

Mr. Kennedy: We had an excellent group of witnesses and interested parties who came before us and, in some respects, it's too bad that all members of the Legislative Assembly weren't able to be a part of those hearings.

Mr. McClellan: It's too bad the minister wasn't there.

Mr. Kennedy: The nature of committees being what they are, this is the way these things are done.

I do share with the member for Lakeshore that our chairman, the member for Huron-Bruce, set out very succinctly the conclusions and the way we operated.

I can't share the thought with the member for Lakeshore with respect to his motion that the inpatient situation was inconclusive. This was one which indeed was conclusive, as members will see from the report. There was a division. The Liberals shared the same views as the Conservatives that the inpatient phaseout take place. The NDP opposed that, although over the course of the discussions there was the suggestion by the member for Lakeshore, if I recall correctly, and I do recall correctly, that if this was necessary there be a very, very careful phaseout of the facilities at Lakeshore.

Change isn't easy—

Mr. McClellan: This was disruptive change.

Mr. Kennedy: —and I know the members listened very carefully to the briefs presented and the opinions expressed. A conclusion was reached and I see no point whatever in referring the report back to the committee for further consideration.

I wanted to make a few comments to members who, as I said, weren't able to share the discussions we had.

In order to continue to deliver the high quality health-care services that Ontario has enjoyed, we have to adopt and respond to the need for change. I couldn't agree more that planning and co-ordination is needed in this very sensitive and important operation of transferring patients from the accommodation they've grown used to to Queen Street, to Hamilton and perhaps later to Whitby—who knows?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, who does know? That's precisely the question. Who does know?

Mr. Kennedy: From discussion with Dr. Fisher, I understand the movement so far has gone very smoothly and the patients are quite settled into their new accommodation at Queen Street.

Mr. Philip: Irrelevant. They're also contributing to the revenue of the TTC.

Mr. Kennedy: We need inpatient services as part of the component for the total health-care system, but the field of psychiatry, as we heard, has advanced beyond the days of custodial institutional care in favour of community programs and outpatient services.

Mr. Philip: What do you mean by services?

Mr. Kennedy: Over the past 15 years, the number of admissions to psychiatric facilities has increased but the number of beds actually required has decreased significantly. This reinforces the continuing trend towards treatment in the community with the resulting decrease in inpatient admissions.

In line with this trend, all existing community outpatient programs are to remain in the Lakeshore community with no decrease in function—in fact, expansion. This was expressed on several occasions by the minister. There is, of course, the increased funding of some $1.3 million which will further enhance the provision of outpatient programs.

With the opening of the 216 additional beds at Queen Street, the inpatient capacity is 632 beds. There was concern expressed about the size of this, but this is the way it is constructed and it's really not out of line with other psychiatric hospitals in Ontario. London has 544 beds; Whitby has 500, which will be replaced with the same number; and Brockville has 529.

Second, it's important we keep in mind the limitations in the terms of reference of the McKinsey report. It did not include Hamilton where, indeed, we have additional accommodation. The McKinsey report had to be looked at in the light of these broader aspects and in the integration of the mental health care system, which involves both these units and, of course, community services.

They can be accommodated at Queen Street, but this doesn't mean the total catchment area formerly served by Lakeshore now will be served by Queen Street, Hamilton is available and Whitby is also available for some on the eastern edge of the catchment area.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe they have room in Montreal. Maybe there is some room in Fort Erie.

Mr. Kennedy: The concern about the very sensitive issue of the movement of inpatients is being looked after by this interhospital committee, which has on it the chiefs of psychiatry, the chief medical officers and representatives from the hospitals. This is proceeding, and has proceeded, very smoothly.

Mr. McClellan: You are ignoring all of the evidence.

Mr. Kennedy: We just simply wouldn't have it any other way. It is in this area where we parted company with our Liberal friends. In their part of the report, they said they didn't want further movement until there was a full report to the committee on the movement of patients. I think this really is beyond the ability of individual members, to intrude into the activities looked after, and opinions expressed, by the medical authorities. I think that is their job.

All the testimony we heard and my experience in working with the excellent group of volunteers who first brought this situation to my attention is that indeed that staff is very competent, very dedicated and very sensitive to the needs of patients. I have full confidence the medical profession, the union workers and all the employees, do work with a great sensitivity on behalf of the patients.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us about the one big institution, the total institution, 700 beds.

Mr. Kennedy: Having said this, I couldn't agree more with the need for the planning and co-ordination. From what I have heard, if it continues in this fashion, there will be very few problems in the moving of the inpatients as it takes place.

I want to say as well, I attended a union-sponsored meeting, and I join with my friend from Lakeshore in this, in paying tribute to their interest and dedication. They sponsored this meeting at the Port Credit Legion. At the meeting there was a resolution which was presented by Mayor Hazel McCallion, which was unanimously carried. It provided that the closing of Lakeshore be suspended until planning had been completed to ensure once again that this was looked after.

I immediately addressed myself to the problems of the employees of the union, and to the other two issues raised at that meeting. One was the land, the site, be retained in public ownership. I would refer members to the Hansard for that committee of April 23, when the minister made some additional comments which responded to those concerns. One was that the site be retained in public ownership. This will be done. That was a big concern the night of that meeting.

The second was the problem of the outpatient services. This was again addressed by the minister on April 23. Indeed, it was said there would be no sharp close-out of those facilities or movement of them. There is going to be a transition which will ensure not only the retention of these services in the area, but an improved, enriched program.

I know there are others who wish to speak. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to add my appreciation to those who came before us and spoke frankly and forthrightly to the issues, and to the volunteers who work on behalf of the patients and, of course, to the union which presented two briefs, as the member for Lakeshore said.

As I said at the outset, I am sure in the overall health picture, we resist change. It is a 90-year-old facility. Those inpatients are going to be carefully moved. The outpatient services will be expanded and I am sure we can achieve this to the overall betterment of this aspect of health care in Ontario.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in this debate on the report of the committee that looked into the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital closing. I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, it was a very thorough investigation of the proposal to close Lakeshore.

I really was impressed with the people who came before that committee. We had psychiatrists, other doctors, many professional people, volunteers in the community, and neighbours in the community, who came and brought us their views.

There were at times many conflicting views given on the particular question we were concerned with and on which we had to make a decision. But I do want to say that the people who did come before the committee were most helpful and the staff at Lakeshore, in my opinion, were very responsive and dedicated people, people who could really be called people-caring people. They really gave me that impression.

After hearing many delegations the members of the committee had the opportunity of going to the site of the Lakeshore hospital, to those very, very beautiful grounds on the lakeshore, to look at the buildings, which were admittedly old buildings but which to my surprise were very clean and well kept inside. They were very well kept for buildings of their age.

Then of course we went to the other end of the spectrum and went to the Queen Street property where the new Queen Street hospital is located. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, I was pleasantly surprised with what I saw at Queen Street. I had been given to believe by many of the people who appeared before the committee that the Queen Street Mental Health Centre was a hospital that was going to be completely inadequate to take care of the inpatients currently at Lakeshore. The place is most spacious. I have no doubt in my mind that the Queen Street institution will more than adequately handle the needs of the inpatients of this area who are mentally ill.

Another thing that we learned of course was that 25 or 30 years ago a mentally ill person was committed to a psychiatric hospital and almost always stayed there, perhaps for life. Many never did come out. Now that is not the sort of psychiatric treatment that is given in today's world. As I understand it from the people who came to speak before the committee, there are many, many ways of treating many, many different kinds of mental condition.

So now the situation is reversed from what it was 25 or 30 years ago. We now have very few inpatients in the hospital in bed, but we are having more and more patients come for treatment of a great many different kinds of mental illnesses.

The problem with the whole exercise was this. This was just typical of the Ministry of Health and this Minister of Health, who sits down with a little group of his colleagues and decides what is the best for the people of Ontario. Regardless of the views being expressed by the people in the community which is to be served, things are put forth by the ministry such as the closing of beds or, as the minister has stated, "We're not closing beds, we're just giving them another name." Go on out and ask the people in the small communities of Ontario whether he is closing beds or whether he is just giving them another name.

Mr. Bradley: They'll tell you.

Mr. Blundy: They'll give you the answer, "We don't know what he is doing with the beds, but we can't get anybody into the beds in the hospital on many occasions when it is necessary."

Mr. Bradley: Left them lying in the hallways.

Mr. Blundy: Let them lie in emergency all day; let them have to wait six or seven weeks for elective surgery, but we're not closing beds; that's what the minister says, so that's what we have to take for his consideration.

Now, here in the case of the Lakeshore hospital, knowing full well that psychiatric treatment has changed over the years and that the input now is to programs in the community, bringing the people from the community into the institution for short periods of treatment and then returning them to the community again, the minister said that they were going to save $2.6 million in this fiscal year by closing Lakeshore hospital. He said that he would use $1.3 million of that money, as well as other funds that had been earmarked, for community alternatives. But as long as the committee was sitting, we saw very very little evidence of what was being done in the community. As one member of the committee, I was convinced in my own mind that I saw no problem whatsoever with moving the in-bed patients in Lakeshore to Queen Street, but the problem was that we had absolutely no guarantee, and to this day have no guarantee, that the services in the community that are serving the people of Etobicoke and all that catchment area are now sufficiently planned or are in place.

As far as I can say, my position at the time of the hearings of this committee was that I would vote against closing Lakeshore and I would vote against moving those in-bed patients to Queen Street until such time as I didn't just have to take the word of the minister that it is going to be done, but saw in the community actual development to provide the community alternatives of which so many people spoke.

There are many things that are hatched out of the nucleus of Lakeshore in the community. There is the child and adolescent care unit, of which so many people spoke so highly. They are in a building. The day that we visited them, they said: "We don't know where we are going to go from here. No place has been arranged for us. No alternate building in the community has been found that is satisfactory." We were really crushing the aims and the hopes of those people in that child and adolescent care unit. There is the alcoholic treatment unit which is a wonderful facility for that area of the greater Metropolitan Toronto area which is going to be missed very greatly, if it is not set up before Lakeshore is closed.

The retention of the lands in the public domain is wonderful because it is a beautiful site and, whatever the use may be in the future, it must be done. It may be that there would be further psychiatric hospital accommodation placed there. I do not know. One thing that was sure for those who sat and listened to the experts as well as to the volunteers and to the interested people in the community, they had a great regard for Lakeshore and they gave us to understand that because the Lakeshore hospital was there there was going to be help for their people in the community in a variety of ways.

I know that there are other people who wish to speak in this debate and I am going to close now, but I would like to make just two points. The matter of psychiatry and the treatment of the mentally ill are altogether different than they were when Lakeshore was built. We have to have much more contact with the patient in the community and in that way we must have facilities for them in the community. Thus far, we haven't seen them.

Secondly, I believe that the Ministry of Health made a unilateral decision in this matter and wanted to rush into this situation. By having the hearings on the closure of Lakeshore, I believe we have prevented that from happening to a great extent. I personally will vote for a position that the in-bed patients at Lakeshore be not moved to Queen Street until it has been clearly demonstrated to us all that the alternatives that are needed in that catchment area are there or are immediately planned for.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I rise to speak about our committee. It was the first committee I sat on in the Legislature. It was some initiation. It was useful to me because I have had some experience in the community health field and I thought I could play a useful role with our other caucus members. I found the exercise interesting—and I began to think of it as an exercise at the end, rather than something that would come up with a useful conclusion.

The chairman, I thought, chaired very freely and on occasion even allowed us to badger witnesses in order to get extra information from them. I was myself guilty of leading witnesses on occasion.

I was particularly impressed by the participation of the other members of my caucus, the members for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) and Parkdale (Mr. Duksza). I thought they all brought particular expertise to the testimony that was helpful in drawing out the most from the various witnesses.

I think the McKinsey report that came before us and the bulk of the witnesses who appeared before us all led us to inevitable conclusions. The inevitable conclusion is that the hospital should not be closed—at least not until we know what the impact would be on the community.

To me—and I guess it is just learning how partisan politics works—it defied all logical thought that we could come up with a conclusion other than the one we did. I was disappointed with the Tory participation in the committee meetings; I thought a number of Liberals participated well, but I thought the rationale at the end, on the basis that the hospital should only be moved if certain criteria in moving patients could be met, was specious and that we already had seen some patients being moved, we knew the methodology, and we could easily have had that tabled with us. I am afraid that in the political battle in which we were involved in the last days of that committee we may have jeopardized the health of a number of people in this province who should not be affected by our antics.

I would like to proceed by condemning the government for a lack of planning; destruction of a very respected institution for no real reason except money; lack of knowledge about community resources and how they fit into the network of community health needs; the overcrowding of Queen Street, making it unnecessarily large and jeopardizing, as I said, the health of individuals in this community.

I would like, if I could, to get on the record a number of people who spoke before us.

There is a personal indictment I would like to register with the minister, because I think it is with him that the responsibility lies for the lack of planning and the causing of this sort of fait accompli that we are presented with. He ignored the McKinsey report and we have already had that alluded to—how comprehensive a document that was. He told our committee the only other document he had looked at was a set of building improvements for fire and safety which had been provided to him. From that point on, he played catch-up politics, responding to emergency situations as they came along, and tried to maintain his argument throughout.

I think a good argument as to how this decision was actually a Treasury decision and not a Health decision, is the fact that Whitby Psychiatric Hospital is going to be built exactly on the basis that was designed by McKinsey. If the minister can accept McKinsey for one side, I don't see why he can't accept it for the other, and I think that came out well in testimony.

Mr. Wildman: It had something to do with the partisan makeup of the riding.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: It is possible. It could also be said that the minister at least misconstrued—I would not say misled us—but at least the talk about Lakeshore as a firetrap soon was discounted by all on all sides. But, unfortunately, that idea was implanted in the minds of the media. That is why they did not cover us through our hearings and hear the testimony that came forward. That is why they are not here tonight to understand why this decision is wrong. People felt this was an old set of buildings that should be torn down.

I would like to register that Mr. McMullen, the administrator, said the fire and safety conditions were second to none. Mr. Taylor of the Etobicoke fire department and Mr. Bateman of the Ontario fire marshal's office both said it is a safe building. Those are sources the minister did not even go to before he made his statements, which I think caused a lot of uncertainty and concern around the community of Lakeshore.

Even as late as the last day he appeared before us, the minister made the argument that he had asked for the destruction of 13 buildings in Whitby which were in similar condition. Those buildings had not been occupied in years; there was no similarity at all. No one would disagree that those buildings on the Whitby site should have gone down.

I would also like to register that Mr. Anderson of the Southeastern Services at Queen Street indicated there were four fires at Queen Street during the same period that there happened to be one arsonist at Lakeshore.

I think it can now be seen that the minister went overboard in trying to prove his case when he asserted that Dr. Maharaj of the alcoholics unit said it would be fine to break off his detoxification centre from his alcoholics unit. That is something he definitely did not do, and he registered with our committee that he did not agree with that.

It came to us after the fact, after we were told there would be no layoffs, that there were people in the behaviour modification group who were being laid off—something that supposedly the ministry people did not know; an after-the-fact kind of thing.

The child and adolescent group came before our committee and said, "We are caught in a squeeze here"—the squeeze members have heard about already. The next day the ministries suddenly had a meeting with this group which had not been consulted beforehand. Catchup politics.

The Queen Street medical advisory committee sent an open letter, complaining they were not being properly consulted. The same day we had our meeting—the first day they could possibly convene a meeting—they were pulled into the ministry's office and talked to. They came before us in a very chastened and very different form than their letter had indicated.

The dialysis group was going to go to Whitby; it was going to stay onsite at Lakeshore. Goodness knows where it is going to be now. It depended what suited the day.

Hamilton beds were never raised in the initial statement. All of a sudden, to make it easier to fit the bed situation into Queen Street, Hamilton was brought up as having 100 beds available. We also found, in talking to the director of Hamilton, that we could discount that.

The minister also obviously had no idea about the real bed availability at Queen Street. He was coming in with total numbers of beds and was not talking to us in terms of the specifics, such as the fact that there are four towers; that some of those buildings—in fact, this geriatric group was already overcrowded when the first movement of patients was made. Even Don Anderson of South-eastern Services, another witness, said they should not have more than 30 to 34 geriatric people on those wards, and they were having 50.

At the end the minister had nerve enough to blame his ministry. On May 15 he said he was disappointed with the internal communication lines. He turned on them, saying they were doing this catchup politics, when in fact the responsibility lay with the minister.

I would like to say that the loss of Lakeshore as an inpatient facility is important. It is a fulcrum for psychiatric services in Lakeshore. Fifty per cent of the patients lived within a five-mile radius. Lakeshore had the highest inpatient-outpatient ratio of any institution in the province. The need for inpatient backup was listed by Dr. Maharaj, Dr. Bond and Dr. Olson. Continuity of care is the ideal form for mental health care.

I was going to try to list a number of things in community programming to do with the lack of funds put forward, the minuscule amount that the $1.3 million in community services' extra money would provide. There is $156 million going into health and psychiatric institutions in this province, and even with this $1.3 million, only between $5 million and $10 million is going into community care programs. Every witness who came before us told us that would be as expensive, not less expensive, than maintaining people in institutions.

We also knew that there was an 85 per cent occupancy rate now with moving these people into that hospital, 85 per cent being considered full capacity; and it is in the largest growth area in the province.

I would just like to conclude by commenting on the statements by Mr. Richardson, a government witness, so there will be time for at least one other person to speak to this. What we have is a ministry of casualties, a ministry of sickness, rather than a ministry of health. By allowing this to go forward with a lack of planning and a lack of real community involvement, or a 5-to-10-year program of moving things from institutions to community programs as suggested by two witnesses we have jeopardized health care in this province.

One witness even said that the blood of those people would be on our hands. I think it is only reasonable that we should turn back to that committee, and hopefully to a wider committee, before any changes are made, for a full discussion of what is involved in deinstitutionalization.

Mr. Speaker, I support our amendment and say I feel we have only broken the surface of the problems in this whole mental-health field.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, as I rise tonight to join the debate on the closure of the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital I couldn't help but follow some of the comments that incline towards discussion of the physical nature of the premises. I think that is critical to the debate.

I visited the premises, as did other members of the committee; but I visited with a lot of attention to the physical aspect, sensing as I did that we had to make a comparison between the Lakeshore and the new facilities, as have been mentioned in the debate, that were available and had the vacancies to the required extent.

What I discovered in this visit bore out what reporters had said. One notably, an Etobicoke writer, said he found that Lakeshore was dingy, depressing and antiquated. I was struck with the same impression as we looked it over. Indeed, it was very foreboding.

I noted that the member for Lakeshore set about his business in the debate earlier by pointing out that the minister was astray in his comments about the premises being a firetrap. The last speaker made the same comment. In fact, he called into question comments by the minister. As I remember the testimony given to us in the committee by the fire marshal, it was very clear that while he put aside some of the arguments about fire starting in some of the areas, and clarified for us the physical structure of the building, parts of which were built as far back as 1877, he nevertheless did point out rather clearly—

Mr. Lawlor: He also said this was a firetrap. You're standing in a firetrap.

Mr. Jones: To the member for Lakeshore, he also pointed out how many floors were condemned and closed for lack of access. If, when we are talking in the context of the safety of the patients, lack of access is not one of the key concerns I don't know what is, where the life and limb of these patients is concerned.

As we heard the testimony, and as we read the reports, we were mindful that there were immediate recommendations of some $2.5 million being needed to be spent, and, ultimately, something in the neighbourhood—depending on which report—of $22 million to $50 million; the range was that broad. Again, we had to look at the comparison with the other premises that had vacant beds and we had the situation of premises that were very new, very bright and cheerful, known as the Queen Street facility, where there were swimming pools—a bright cheerful facility conducive to patients making their recovery.

The other comment I can't help making as I look at this, Mr. Speaker, is that the Lakeshore premises had all kinds of other problems that struck you on your visit. They had the tunnels that one visited; where the maintenance people, in fact the superintendent of maintenance, talked of the kind of repairs they had tried to effect. You saw the roof leaking, the paint falling; and certainly a lay person or anybody could clearly see the alternative between the two premises.

It is true, as my colleague the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) pointed out, that we heard a lot of emphasis on the need for premises and the change to smaller, community-based facilities; the minister made all the appropriate comments and commitments in that direction. So when we hear in the debate tonight the proposal by the member for Lakeshore that we should maintain the premises, as has again been stated in the debate for chronic-care patients, I can't help thinking of those people I saw huddled on those beds in that very dingy, indeed very dark and very depressing premises that the member tonight stands and proposes should remain open. At the same time he puts out his concern about how these people were unsettled and disturbed as they were moved from Lakeshore to the premises on Queen Street.

Mr. Lawlor: What a government apologist you are.

Mr. Jones: How is this consistent with the member's concern, when those premises were so very clearly in such a situation?

Mr. Lawlor: The place is disintegrating right before our eyes. It's got another 20 years.

Mr. Jones: As a matter of fact, I remember the director of nursing came before us, Miss Latimer. What did she say when we talked about the comparison? She said, rather clearly: "That's like comparing the Royal York Hotel to the YMCA." Does the member recall those comments?

Mr. Lawlor: That's the one witness you have who wasn't a psychiatrist. That was the nursing consultant.

Mr. Jones: Indeed, that was her comment.

Mr. Suttis, who was head of the maintenance, talked about the 40 per cent that had to be spent on maintenance.

Mr. M. Davidson: You're supposed to be a bright light; now you look like a dull bulb.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: What a great lawyer you are; you pick the only piece of evidence you've got.

Mr. Jones: No, no; if time permitted, we have pages of evidence that is pretty clear.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There isn't anything any more basic in this chamber than that everybody have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Turner: Members opposite never could stand the truth.

Mr. Jones: I would just like to conclude by saying that when the member for Lakeshore comments about other shreds of evidence that go to the argument for the closing of this facility, we have to look at the Ontario Hydro comment; we do indeed have to look at the McKinsey report on the kind of dollars that would have to be invested in it; and we have also to look at the fact that this other brand spanking new facility was there, spreading out and spawning into the community, as it is doing, with the commitments of the minister to bring about an advance, of not only the $1.3 million but the other kinds of studies that have to take place to accommodate this transition to a new kind of care.

Mr. McClellan: You learned nothing in a month of hearings.

On motion by Mr. Foulds, the previous question was put.

The House divided on Mr. Lawlor's amendment to the motion that the committee's report be received and adopted, which was agreed to on the following vote:

ORAL QUESTIONS

POLYTECHNIC EDUCATION

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister explain why it would appear that her ministry is not yet aware of and prepared for the trend among Ontario young people to seek places in community colleges and polytechnic programs rather than in universities?

Can she explain the statement by Mr. Williams, the chairman of the council of regents of community colleges, who was somewhat surprised by the fact that 90,000 people are applying for only 40,000 first-year places in the community colleges and that that is a trend identified only within the last month?

Does the minister not realize that the young people of this province for some time now have been indicating they want both a general education and a specific industry-oriented education such as can be provided by community colleges and polytechnic programs? Why is her ministry still surprised by this trend and unable to act in accordance with it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there is no surprise at all in terms of the requirements of the young people of Ontario for various kinds of post-secondary education. In fact it was as a result of this presaging capacity that the community college system was established in this province more than 15 years ago.

The popularity of the community colleges was relatively stable for a period of time but within the last three years has been growing steadily. We have been very much aware of the growth and have assisted the community colleges in finding alternative places to provide greater space for the community college students and for the applicants.

We are aware that this year there were about 140,000 applications for places within the community colleges. As a result of using the computer system which has been developed and which weeds out multiple applications, the number of qualified applicants for community college places will probably be somewhere in the region of 55,000 rather than 90,000, as the original figure was stated to be.

We are assisting the community colleges right now in finding extra space. This is one of the reasons that community colleges have been interested in such buildings as the Toronto Ontario Teacher Education College. We are trying to help them to provide extra places for the students who have made the decision that they wish that kind of technological education, and we shall continue to do so.

Mr. S. Smith: Given that 10,000 or 15,000 young people are going to be refused entrance, and given the fact that universities have declining enrolments and financial difficulties, why does the ministry not have in place now in Ontario a myriad of programs of the polytechnic type, bringing together the universities with the community colleges in their respective areas and using the present facilities, plus industrial equipment and so on that may be made available by industry, to provide across Ontario the polytechnic-like programs that Ryerson gives here in Toronto and to meet the needs of our young people and our industries?

Why does the ministry not fund Ryerson properly, and why does it not fund polytechnic programs generally, combining both the universities and the community colleges into proper polytechnic programs, instead of letting the universities limp along the way they do at present and leaving students shut out of the community college system?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There was a specific allocation to community colleges this year, recognizing the increased enrolment they are experiencing. That will blossom even further next year and in the year following that.

I would like to let the Leader of the Opposition know that there is an increase in applications to universities in this province this year as well. Whether that bears fruit in September is something we shall wait to see, but the young people of this province are becoming very much aware of the need for education and/or training in their post-secondary lives and they are obviously making applications to ensure that happens.

We do have a system of polytechnic education throughout Ontario; it is not confined to Ryerson, as the Leader of the Opposition knows. In fact, it is carried out in many of the community colleges within this province right across the province, and it is excellent polytechnic education.

The funding of Ryerson at the present time is on the basis of a formula which Ryerson requested and which was agreed to in 1974. In January 1979, Ryerson's president, Dr. Pitman, asked me to consider a modification of its funding formula. That was the question he raised. I suggested to him I would be very happy to look at that and to consider it seriously if he would provide me with the presentation which Ryerson would develop to support its application. I am informed by Dr. Pitman now that I shall have that information by the end of June or early July, at which time it will be examined both by the Ontario Council on University Affairs and by the minister.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister mentions the specific allocation of money to community colleges to compensate them for their increases in enrolment relative to the universities, can she explain why that money was promised in 1977 but not paid then, promised in 1978 but not paid then, and why only a portion of the total amount promised for this year is being paid in 1979-80?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I will try to find out whether indeed there was a promise in 1977 and 1978 that was not carried out.

Mr. Cassidy: There certainly was.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am not aware of that, but I shall explore that and report to the House. In fact, a significant portion of it was delivered for the 1979-80 year.

Mr. Sweeney: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: When a community college like Conestoga, in Kitchener, has clearly identified skills needs and has set up the program within its own institution, is there any intent on the government's part to provide any extra funding so that the large number of students—in this case, the metalworkers—who want to move into that program will be able to do so?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from discussions with the president of Conestoga that they are moving vigorously forward with the program which they have suggested is required in their area, with the strong support of the council of regents and with the strong support of the ministry.

At this point in time there has not been a specific request for additional funding. However, knowing the problems which some of the community colleges are facing right at the moment, we are looking very carefully at their needs to determine if there is some way in which we can be of greater assistance.

Mr. Cooke: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister not agree that the present method of funding, whereby a community college or university gets rewarded for its students only after it already has the students, inhibits or slows down the university's or the community college's ability to react to the needs of the community? Why does she not change that method of funding so that community colleges can react immediately to community needs rather than having to wait three or four years, as the system now provides?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is not entirely correct. They do not wait for three or four years. Indeed, there is a response on the basis of the annual report of the college in terms of enrolment. But it is not only affected by the enrolment within the institution.

The slip-year funding program which has been established shields the institutions from the tremendous variations in funding which might occur as a result of changes in enrolment. We are trying very diligently to ensure that the appropriate level of funding is provided on the one hand to universities and on the other hand to community colleges.

Mrs. Campbell: Exactly.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In addition to that, I think we have to consider very seriously the kind of support which is necessary for a skills training program which will have a base neither in community colleges nor universities. This is the area of post-secondary education on which I believe we really should be concentrating.

Mr. S. Smith: It is joint programs you should be funding.

LEARNING-DISABLED CHILDREN

Mr. S. Smith: I have another question of the Minister of Education. Can the minister tell us when she will be keeping the promise she made in December 1978, that during the spring session she would be bringing forward amendments to the Education Act to require the local school boards to provide services for those children with learning disabilities?

In particular, can she tell us whether she will be able to provide for the spotting of these children with learning disabilities as well as for the particular needs in the treatment and the educational remediation of these particular problems? Why have we not seen the amendments by now and when can we expect them?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The early identification program will be instituted by the boards beginning in September 1979, as the result of a memorandum which was delivered to the boards in January. We have total unanimity on the part of school trustees and teachers alike that the early identification program is the important first stage in development of the kind of program which I had proposed.

I can't give the Leader of the Opposition an exact date at this time. I do not know whether it is going to be possible to introduce this before the end of this session or not. Having sent out the proposed legislation and having asked for the responses, I believe most of the responses are now in. The specific concerns which were expressed by school boards, by the teachers' federation, by parents, by the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities and by the Association for the Mentally Retarded are being collated in order to ensure that whatever we produce for this House will take all of those into consideration.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, the minister must surely be aware that once a child is spotted as possibly having a learning disability it is then necessary to do certain medical and psychological tests to properly analyse the nature of the disability. Is she aware that in the private sector such tests are going at approximately $350 per child?

Under the circumstances, will the minister assure that when through the spotting of these children a recognition of these problems occurs in the school system, every school system will have available to it a backup facility of psychologists, doctors and others who are expert in this field, to make sure that whatever further analysis of the child's problem will be required will either be available under OHIP, which it presently is not, or at some other local facility funded by her ministry or some other ministry? What good is recognition without the proper backup facilities?

Mr. Laughren: The Liberals would cut educational spending too.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The sensitivity to problems which young children will probably have within the learning period are fairly well obvious to teachers who have been specifically and conscientiously trained in examining the potential of young children on entering the school system.

I would agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it is absolutely essential in those cases where further investigation is necessary that there be available the kind of consultative assessment program which we have established and which we are expanding at the Hospital for Sick Children, which will be duplicated in Ottawa, and hopefully, will then be duplicated when we know how well it functions and where it should be throughout the rest of the province. That is not going to happen overnight, but it is one of the specific concerns we have in order to ensure that—

Mr. Warner: No, not overnight; the kids will be on the old age pension by the time the government finishes.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —the appropriate assessment is made of those who require further consultation and that the appropriate kind of consultative services are available to the school system, not necessarily within the school system but available to the school system in order to provide the appropriate program.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the minister, since she is considering the provision of backup facilities, is she also considering the provision of backup money for the boards of education which are taking on this new responsibility? How much is she going to be telling them they will have and when will they have the programs they are being asked to bring into effect?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'm sure we'll be telling the boards exactly what the circumstances and conditions are as soon as the information is introduced in the Legislature.

Mr. Warner: No money.

Mr. di Santo: When will that be?

Mr. Warner: That's the answer: no money.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Will the minister guarantee the school boards which seek to implement facilities and programs for children with learning disabilities the continuation of funding for those programs once they have been initiated?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The kind of guarantee which the honourable member is requesting is one which may, in fact, be possible, but on the other hand may not be possible in terms of the circumstances which prevail within the economy of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's quite a guarantee isn't it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: When the economy of the province of Ontario is buoyant, I'm sure we can assure the school boards that indeed this will happen. This is why we are working so diligently to attempt to improve the economic base of this province, because without a good, sound and buoyant economic base—

Mr. Bradley: Is that “yes” or “no?”

Mr. Breithaupt: On the backs of children.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —there is no revenue available for any kind of social service program.

Mr. Warner: You're one of Frank Miller's henchmen.

Mr. Foulds: Is the minister telling us she is not going to bring in special legislation that will make it mandatory? Is she telling us she is going to wait for the general legislative grants to be announced; and is she telling us she is not going to announce the grants until she brings in the legislation, or that she is not going to bring in the legislation until she announces the grants? Could she clarify that?

Mr. Breithaupt: It's called being concerned.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The answers to those three questions are no, no and no.

Mr. Foulds: So you are not going to do anything, are you?

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We have had five questions on this subject.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the member for Ottawa Centre, I'd like to draw to the attention of all honourable members some distinguished visitors in our gallery in the persons of Dr. Helen Graves, assistant professor of political science at the University of Michigan, Acting Chancellor Klein of the University of Michigan, and Vice-Chancellor Arden, all from Dearborn. They are here in connection with the parliamentary internship program. A good many of the interns are sitting under the Speaker's gallery. All of them are associated with one member or another of this assembly. We are awfully pleased to have them as visitors in our gallery today.

FREE TRADE POLICY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this question is appropriate in view of our guests from Michigan. I have a question for the Treasurer about the pressing economic issue of free trade as it affects Ontario. In view of the fact we seem to be drifting into free trade with the United States, I would like to ask the Treasurer what the government's position is on free trade with the United States.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the honourable member knows who negotiates on behalf of Canada in those matters.

Mr. Breithaupt: Robert de Cotret.

Mr. Bradley: Your friends in Ottawa.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Jake Warren, representing the federal government, has been very busy in Geneva.

Mr. Roy: He doesn't represent anybody, he lost the election.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He's a civil servant. He can't lose. Within the next short while, within the next week I believe, we will see the full details of the GATT agreement. I understand during those negotiations the United States and Canada carried on a number of discussions vis-à-vis their very large exchange of products and we will probably have one of the lowest overall barriers to mutual trade in the free world, with many Canadian products and many US products entering totally free.

We have been consulted by the federal government in this process. Our biggest concern has been to protect those Canadian—and particularly the Ontario—manufacturers who could be affected by a move to lower tariffs or no tariffs.

An hon. member: What about the farmers?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact the farm machinery sector has had free trade for 30 years and we have a very heavy deficit in our trade with the United States in that sector; and in view of the fact the machinery comes into this country tariff-free for the most part and we have a deficit of more than $3 billion in that sector; and in view of the fact we have a multi-billion dollar deficit and one that is worsening in auto parts, where there was also free trade with the United States; can the minister say what are the advantages for Ontario of this drift towards free trade as far as our trade policy is concerned; and what is this government prepared to do about it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, Mr. Speaker, our route is to advise the federal government on those matters, and we do that. I would point out to the member that in the automobile industry to which he just referred, while we do have a deficit of about $1.2 billion in total in the overall exchange of parts and assembled vehicles—I think that is roughly it; a $3 billion deficit in parts, a $2 billion surplus in assembled vehicles, if my recollection is correct—if one goes back to pre-1965 days where there were very real protective barriers, I think the member will find we have improved our position rather than making it worse. That is on a percentage basis, not on a dollar basis.

Mr. Laughren: I would like to remind the Treasurer the deteriorating merchandising trade deficit in the first four months of 1979 is an indication that our trade is already too much oriented to the United States. As well, as our leader indicated, where there have been free trade pacts the results have been disastrous in terms of balance of trade.

Would the Treasurer share with us, which he has failed to do despite two requests from my leader, his views on free trade with the United States? Further, does he not agree when the GATT negotiations are complete and we have 80 per cent of our trade duty free with the United States and 90 per cent with five per cent duty or less, that this really does constitute free trade with the United States? Would the Treasurer tell us what his views are on free trade with the United States?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have concerns about free trade with anyone in a nation like ours, but I have to tell members that if one attended the GATT negotiations one would realize the negotiations going on there were going to be applied to the nations in any event. Our big problem will be to adjust to the new rules.

Currently, the latest figure I saw showed the Canadian manufacturing industry running at 89 per cent of capacity at this point. That is virtually full capacity when one allows for plants on strike or for certain weak sectors. One of the great things that is happening is that we are seeing in Canada this year a tremendous decision-making process towards new plant investment. A good deal of that, aided by the kinds of grants we are currently giving, is aimed at export markets and import replacement. We can be satisfied the current effect of the low Canadian dollar and our increased productivity is finally being felt in the manufacturing and export sector.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister explain just how he thinks this policy is being so successful, when in fact in the first quarter of this year our trade surplus shrank from $1.25 billion in 1978 to $426 million this year? If the minister's policy continues, does that mean we are going to go into ever-increasing deficits in our merchandise trades with the United States or other countries; and what policies does the government have in mind in order to ensure that we start to get adequate trade surpluses, rather than shrinking surpluses as is happening right now?

Mr. S. Smith: They are going to drive down the dollar.

Mr. Bradley: All part of the same gang.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Driving down the dollar will not necessarily help. I think the dollar currently is at a level which is perhaps a shade below its true value, but, I would say the advantages of that relatively low level are just being felt. I have to tell the member I have reason to believe, first of all, it takes some time to get a new plant in place. He would agree with that. I also have reason to believe the kinds of missions the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has had abroad lately have really increased our export performance.

By coincidence just last week, while attending an unrelated function, I talked to representatives of one small company located near Toronto. They told me they more or less reluctantly went along on the MIT European mission. On the very first visit they increased their export sales by roughly six per cent of their total Canadian sales, in one trip. That was a very important addition; they now recognize the size of the European market and they are adjusting themselves to compete for it.

NEW PLANNING BILL

Mr. Cassidy: I missed the Minister of Education who seems to have left. I'd like to ask a question of the Minister of Housing. Is he aware of the concern of municipalities across Ontario with the government's proposal to remove from municipalities their power to have architectural control in the proposed Bill 96? Can the minister explain why the government is taking that step and will he undertake to restore that power and give back to the municipalities the autonomy they are now losing?

Mr. S. Smith: It is on the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: This particular bill is listed on the Order Paper for discussion this afternoon. It will be the first item after the question period and that's when the matter would be most appropriately introduced.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister say what consultation took place with municipal representatives concerning Bill 96? Very considerable concern, we understand, has been expressed from as many as 35 municipalities across the province? Specifically, can he explain why it is that when we talked to them, the municipalities of London, Thunder Bay, Ottawa, Hamilton,

Toronto, Sudbury, Stoney Creek and Windsor were all opposed to the deletion of this particular power from the new bill and were very concerned at the fact their views had not been considered, nor had they been adequately consulted?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I will be delighted to respond to that under the item following the question period.

Mr. Breithaupt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I direct your attention to rule 19(d)(5), which states that "a member shall be called to order by the Speaker if he anticipates any matter already on the Order Paper or Notice Paper for consideration." The item being discussed by the leader of the third party is not only on the Order Paper, but it also happens to be on the Notice Paper for discussion today.

Mr. Foulds: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the fact that rule comes under rules of debate. Question period, as you have repeatedly informed us, is not debate but question period.

Mr. Speaker: We have had numerous occasions here in the past where questions have been permitted on things that would be considered of urgent public importance during question period but would not be allowed during the normal course of debate. The honourable minister has indicated he's not prepared to answer any further questions in this regard since there is an ample opportunity to do it after routine proceedings this afternoon.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have given you the initial question and I have given you an opportunity to ask a supplementary. On both occasions, the honourable minister has indicated that he doesn't have anything further to add. You will have an opportunity during the second reading of the bill this afternoon. Anything further than that would be counter-productive.

Mr. Cassidy: I can't question him then. He should withdraw the bill and do some proper consultation.

VANDALISM

Mr. Stong: In the absence of the Attorney General and the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry), the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Welch), I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), who I assume is the House leader this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Attorney General is just outside. In preference to asking me a question, I can get him for the honourable member if he wants. It's his choice.

Mr. Roy: Tell him to come in.

Mr. Stong: My question is of the Attorney General specifically. Perhaps someone else can answer it.

Mr. Conway: Get him away from that disco journalism—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the honourable member should ask a question of a minister who is present in the House.

Mr. Nixon: The assistant acting House leader.

Mr. Stong: In light of the rising incidence of vandalism, particularly in our urban centres, what specific steps is this government taking to curb this blight on our society?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm sorry I missed the first part of the question, which on this one occasion was an important part.

Mr. Stong: In light of the rising incidence of vandalism in our urban centres, what is the government specifically doing to curb that offence?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know my friend and colleague the Attorney General would be doing a great deal about that problem.

Mr. Bradley: Don't you attend cabinet meetings?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suspect he will be here within moments. I'll go out and get him if he's not, but I know he's just outside the door. Perhaps the honourable member would hold that question for a moment or two.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to answer a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's hear it and see. I don't know.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if, when the minister is speaking to the Attorney General, he would investigate with him the feasibility of making it more economical for school boards to hire security guards, even if it means employing the incentive of increasing dramatically the deductible portion of insurance policies? Would he also investigate and encourage provincial judges in our juvenile system to apply more frequently the remedies available under section 33 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, which would require parents or guardians of those judged to be juvenile delinquents to pay the cost of damages incurred by those delinquents?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I would be pleased to canvass those alternatives with the Attorney General, because I know he is very concerned about the very question the member has raised. I will take it up with him, perhaps within a half hour.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Laughren: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. We in this party have been simply awestruck with the use of the words "carefully considered foreign investment," in replies to our questions about this government's open-door policy on foreign ownership. I will wait for the minister to take his seat, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bradley: He is going to get his Santa Claus suit.

Mr. Laughren: This is very strange behaviour on the part of the minister, I must say.

Mr. Roy: He's a very strange minister.

Mr. Laughren: I will remain in my seat while he answers. I will put it to the minister again. We have been simply awestruck by the use of the words "carefully considered foreign investment" in reply to our questions to the minister about the government's open-door policy on foreign ownership in Ontario and in the rest of Canada. How can the minister explain that foreign investment is carefully considered by his government when 92 per cent of all applications considered by the Foreign Investment Review Agency were approved in the first four months of 1979 and when the government's assessment memo, which we obtained from his ministry, is nothing more than a check list of criteria?

When the minister was in Japan on his recent trip, did he take a look at the rather extensive set of guidelines produced in 1977 for multinationals operating in that country, which, among other things, prevents suppression of small enterprises, prevents stifling the efforts of Japanese industries to develop their own technology, prevents closure of plants or mass dismissals and requires a contribution to the improvement of Japan's balance of payments? When will this government bring in a similar set of tough guidelines which must be followed by any foreign firm which is allowed the privilege of operating in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would point out to the honourable member that there are very many firms operating in this province right now, very many multinationals, in ridings represented on all sides of this House, which, in fact, would not meet all of those criteria the member has set out. What we try to do in developing a policy is, quite frankly, to maintain the flexibility to extract those undertakings that we might be able to extract, in conjunction with FIRA, from some firms that are coming here.

I would much prefer to see employment created by a multinational which is given certain undertakings and is able thereby to create some long-term jobs for this country, rather than to have any sort of hard and fast rules which say multinationals are (a), not allowed in this country; or (b), only allowed under such severe and restrictive conditions that Babcock and Wilcox will not go into Cambridge.

That is our flexible approach and, quite frankly we don't apologize for having that flexible approach. We believe that flexible approach makes it possible to get a high degree of investment into this country, which we badly need, and a large number of jobs, many more than would be created if we followed the proposals that the member outlined.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary to that outrageous answer: Has the minister taken a good look at that form, which is the criteria check list, and does he not think it's really a dishonest representation of having any criteria at all, since it's obvious that any applicant who wanted to apply to FIRA could meet all those criteria in the short run? It wouldn't be hard to do that at all—for example, the criteria to create more jobs or the criteria to increase the use of Ontario materials and components. Is the minister not aware that in the long run, foreign ownership has precisely the opposite effect of the criteria they might very well meet in the short run? Does he know that multinationals, over the number of years they have been here have, in fact, been costing us jobs and have been costing us an enormous amount in terms of dividend payments and business payments that go elsewhere and create an enormous trade deficit for the province of Ontario, indeed for all of Canada? Will the minister explain, finally, why there is no time factor at all in the criteria which must be met by these firms that apply to the Foreign Investment Review Agency and which this government invariably approves?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The honourable member suggests it creates a large trade deficit and, in fact, a net loss of jobs. I have to tell him any suggestion that allowing multinationals to invest in this country loses jobs for this country is, with respect, foolishness. The member should look behind himself, beside himself and look over here, and he will see many of us representing ridings in which there are not only a lot of jobs created by multinationals, but a lot of jobs which have been there for a heck of a long time.

Mr. Wildman: What about secondary manufacturing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is an alternative to allowing multinationals into this country, with much of the technology which they do bring in this country.

Mr. S. Smith: You could get it under licence.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition suggests we could get it under licence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That was not a part of the supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Right. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

I would say to the honourable member who asked that question that the clear policy of this government is to say there are a heck of a lot of jobs created by multinationals. Very many of those jobs, if you will analyse them, are long-term jobs. They have been in communities for many years.

Westinghouse, in Hamilton, is an obvious one that comes to mind. While they are currently reducing the number of jobs, or talking about reducing the number of jobs, the fact is enormous wealth has flowed to that community because Westinghouse has been there—for what, 40 or 50 years?

Mr. S. Smith: That is a great example.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Untold wealth and employment were created in that community, which frankly I would rather have in that community than not have in that community.

Mr. Laughren: Look at the jobs they cost us on balance.

Mr. Cassidy: We could do better ourselves.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Any bald policy that would simply say, "You are not welcome here," or, "You can't come in here" would cost thousands and thousands of jobs. We are not prepared to see those jobs go away, simply so the members opposite might be able to wrap themselves in a flag and boast of their nationalism. That is foolishness. The thousands of people who are working for multinationals, happily and with secure homes and families because of their incomes, would frown upon their policy, and they know it very well.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister unaware of the fact the foreign ownership of our economy leads to a chronic drain in the balance of payments, leads to a non-research and development-oriented economy, a non-export-oriented economy? Is he not aware at this stage of the game that the only thing foreign people can bring to this country in terms of opening branches here is capital and technology? Doesn't he know we have the capital in our own country, if he would only give our people a chance to get out of this colonial mentality that makes us dependent upon the rest of the world? Doesn't he know we have the technology; and where we don't have it we could get it under licence and then become expert in that technology and compete with those very multinationals which right now own this economy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to recover from that outrage.

Mr. S. Smith: That is what it is, it is an outrage.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To us, you're an outrage.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition, and I know he knows this very well, that when he talks about all that capital suddenly being available, I suggest to him if we approached all the multinationals in this country and said, "Would you mind selling all your capital investments?" well—

Mr. S. Smith: That is not what we are suggesting.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you want an answer to the question, or not?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, but not a distorted one. [2:45]

Mr. Speaker: Do him the courtesy of allowing him to respond then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He doesn't want an answer; he wants to be outraged.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point of the exercise, of course, is that the member's seat mate, for example, is very concerned about retaining those jobs at Budd in Kitchener.

Mr. Eakins: Let's be careful, now, what we say about working with multinationals.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why doesn't the member listen to the answer?

He isn't saying to us, and can't say to us, that all we have to do is to trot around and we will find some Canadians who can bring the technology to this country that Budd brought to this country. He isn't able to do that. Nor is my colleague, the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor), able to suggest that Canadians would have developed the truck axle assemblies that Hayes Dana is putting into Barrie with our assistance, for which we have no apologies.

If the Leader of the Opposition wants to go out to the people of this province and tell them it's very simple, all we have to do is close the doors to all that investment. I would point out, and I'm sure members have read the Toronto Star today, that some senior people from New York state were in this province encouraging our businessmen to invest in their state because they want investment in their state. They offered incentives and encouragement, and pointed out how important it is for them to encourage this type of investment to keep their state strong and their people working.

Mr. S. Smith: They are not 70 per cent owned outside the country.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: His outrage aside, the Leader of the Opposition would stand up and feign that outrage, but for once with some justification, if we lost employment out of this province; if we wrapped ourselves in the flag, as he wants us to do, and suggested we would rather have a pure system of only Canadians, with lots of unemployment.

Mr. S. Smith: I have faith in this country.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He would stand up and say, "How dare you let this happen? Why don't you let that technology come to this country?"

The Leader of the Opposition knows very well one of the reasons Westinghouse has been able to stay in his riding all these years is that they have had the benefit of a heck of a lot of technology. He and his friends at any university couldn't have developed that technology without that great company working and developing it for his people to have employment.

Mr. Mackenzie: And where are they going now?

Mr. S. Smith: What confidence you have in Ontario.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANTS

Mr. Peterson: A new question to the minister who announces the giveaways, Mr. Speaker:

In response to a question from my colleague from St. Catharines last week, the Minister of Industry and Tourism indicated he had told TRW ahead of the budget they would be getting some government allocation, even though the minister changed the fund from which that money was taken. Could the minister tell this House how many companies received an indication from him, prior to the budget, they would get some kind of grant, giveaway, or whatever he gives away; and how many of those will be taken out of the Employment Development Fund?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One other.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: When is the minister going to table in this House the documents for the companies to which he has given grants?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Very shortly; as indicated last week, we are doing two things. We are looking, with the lawyers, at the extent of the documentation we might be able to make available. I am confident it will be the sum and substance of them. The undertakings we have; the enforceability clauses out of the contracts, they will be no problem. We are working with them on a standard form contract, which I know members might like to have if we can develop one that will work for all companies.

We are also talking to the companies with whom we have already entered into contracts, the four of which members are aware, in an attempt to work out with them just how much of that information we can make available, since that wasn't known to them when they signed the contracts. It shouldn't be too much longer.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate the other company? And what was the exact nature of this prebudget commitment he offered to these two companies? Which was the second company, and what was the exact nature of the commitment the minister entered into?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Negotiations with the second company should be completed in about a week or a week and half. Prior to that time, as in the case with all other applicants to the fund, I can't disclose the name of the company.

Mr. S. Smith: You can leak the budget to them but you can't leak their names to us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Suffice to say that the undertaking we gave them followed almost exactly the framework of the telex I read in the House the other day. It was the same format exactly.

TUITION FEES

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Education: She was widely quoted in the press, from her presentation to the Ontario Federation of Students last weekend, that she felt public opinion was in favour of increasing tuition fees. I would like to ask her if she would table any public opinion polls her ministry has taken to indicate the public is in favour of increased tuition fees. Secondly, I would like to ask her if she is going to increase tuition fees or set tuition fees based on public opinion or based on a strategy to increase accessibility for low-income families in this province.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The information regarding the opinion of the public in terms of the relationship which tuition fees should play to the total cost of education is, I think, available. If it is not I shall make sure that it is available to the members of the House.

I think the honourable member knows the answer to the second question without even asking it. The report which was initiated by my predecessor has been delivered, it has been tabled, it is public. It has been distributed to all groups with any concern at all about post-secondary education and the relationship of tuition fees to post-secondary education. Their responses are almost all in at the present time. They are being collated and they will be going to the Ontario Council on University Affairs and the Council of Regents for Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology for their comments. Then they will be coming back to the ministry because it is on the basis of all of the information we shall have collected that we shall make the decision related to tuition fees.

Mr. Cooke: I should like to remind the minister that the P. S. Ross study has absolutely nothing to do with accessibility. In fact, they only mention it just once in their report.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cooke: I would like to ask the minister what research to study the problem of accessibility her ministry is conducting or what research is being carried on in the province that she is partially funding or aware of. Will she promise the Legislature that no increases in tuition will take place in this province until adequate research is done to find out why children from low-income families do not attend institutions of post-secondary education in this province? Does she not think that it would be a logical approach to find out and develop a strategy before increasing tuition fees strictly based on budgetary considerations?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The information we have at the present time would indicate that in those jurisdictions in which there is a very low or no tuition fee the numbers of students from the lower economic bracket is smaller than it is in the province of Ontario where the student assistance program has been redesigned specifically to assist students from that group within the economic structure of our province.

Information is being developed. I cannot tabulate for the honourable member specific research papers at this time, but I shall make sure that that background information is available to him, if and when we bring in a recommendation in this area.

FRENCH LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. Roy: I have a question to the Minister of Education.

Given that the green paper published for the Ottawa-Carleton school problems back in February 1979 was an attempt to let the local bodies arrive at a consensus, why did the minister reject the one recommendation on which there was unanimity, that is, for a regional, homogeneous, French-language school board, when in fact that would be the one unanimous point among, not only all the school boards, but the city council and all the leaders and newspapers, et cetera, in the Ottawa-Carleton area? Why did she reject that?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We felt we had addressed reasonably well the specific concerns expressed in the Mayo report in the alternatives which were proposed in the green paper. To say there was total unanimity on the part of all groups within Ottawa I think would be probably not correct, since I am aware that there are many groups not in support of that recommendation. Certainly, from the information which has been delivered to me from citizens' groups, rate-payers' associations and others, there has been some concern expressed about this.

What we are attempting to do is find the most appropriate way to meet the concerns of the francophone parents and the francophone students within that area in order to ensure that there is the appropriate kind of supervision of their educational program by francophone individuals.

Mr. Roy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Apart from the opposition by some of the minister's colleagues to this French-language school board, is she going to reject again the recommendations of the Ottawa and Carleton Boards of Education—and she probably has their reports now; they were to be in by June 1—which are going to be suggesting to her the creation of a French-language school board in the Ottawa-Carleton area? Is she going to do that again?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it would be very difficult for me to predict anything of that sort, since at this point I have only a verbal report of the contents of the Ottawa board's recommendations, and I do not think the Carleton board's recommendation has been drafted as yet.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to change her and the government's opposition to the creation of a French-language school board in Ottawa, given the fact that in response to her green paper the school boards in the area have reiterated their original position, which is that they want the creation of the French-language board?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, if and when I receive the responses from the two school boards, I will be very happy to speak to the honourable member's question.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, may I have a supplementary on this?

Mr. Speaker: You have had two already.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Dukszta: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education regarding the building of Brother Edmund Rice school in my riding: In view of the fact that 300 students in this school are now in 14 portables and the Metropolitan Separate School Board of Toronto considers the building of this school the top priority, why has the minister now reversed her original position unilaterally and postponed the building of this school until 1982?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry; I think I gathered the gist of the question but I am not at all sure I heard the question in its entirety. I gather it is about Brother Edmund Rice school. If it is, I shall attempt to gather the information and respond to the honourable member when I have done so.

Mr. Dukszta: The minister made a decision only a couple of weeks ago that the building of the school will not be allowed to proceed until 1982 in spite of the original commitment of the ministry and in spite of the recommendation by the Metropolitan Separate School Board of Toronto. She should know about her own decisions and not tell me she is going to gather the information later on, while there is a need right now to do it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: But I can't hear what the member is saying.

Mr. Dukszta: And she should not keep complaining that she does not understand me. She does not understand much, anyway.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: If there was a deferment in terms of the permission to proceed with a building program, it was based upon the recommendation of the Metropolitan Separate School Board and upon the requirement that our first obligation is to provide places for those pupils who do not have any places at the moment. That is our first priority this year, and that is the priority we are attempting to fulfil.

Mr. Dukszta: Mr. Speaker, there are 14 portables. I am trying to give the information to the minister on that point.

Mr. Speaker: I heard you quite distinctly. That was a part of your original question. I understand the minister has undertaken to get a more complete answer.

ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Treasurer: In his 1979 budget press release he explained the kind of businesses in which a small business development corporation may invest and he said they will have a maximum of 100 employees. I take it that this is his government's definition of a small business. Would the Treasurer explain briefly the definition of small business?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we chose the definition on the basis of the number of employees for eligibility for entrance. The member is quite right: We said mining, tourism, manufacturing and processing are the eligible categories, and that Ontario, Canadian-owned businesses of less than 100 employees qualify.

Mr. Eakins: Since the definition of Prime Minister Charles Joseph Clark is the same definition as used in my private member's bill for a small business act for Ontario, would I be correct in presuming that the minister will be using the same definition as his federal counterpart and his friends in Ottawa?

[3:00]

Hon. F. S. Miller: That was Charles who? I will have to do a little reading and check.

We defined two or three categories. For example, 75 per cent of the payroll must be in Ontario. We chose that number as a matter of convenience. If the member was present the night of the small business development corporations discussion, he will recall there were some arguments as to whether 100 was a wise choice or not.

Mr. Eakins: What is the minister's guess?

Hon. F. S. Miller: For the purposes of this act we chose 100 employees as the most convenient measure of the size of the business. If that proves to be a poor definition, we are able to change it with the support of this House.

OHC TENANTS' INCOMES

Mr. Bounsall: I have a question of the Minister of Housing. Would the minister inform this House of the plans being formulated within Ontario Housing Corporation regarding additional boarding charges for children of families living in OHC housing? Specifically, is it the case that OHC is planning to abolish the present system whereby a child pays an additional $75 per month if they're working, as assessed by the OHC, and in its place is considering charging them at the full rate of 25 per cent of that child's income irrespective of the family situation?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, as I have reported to this House on previous occasions, the whole rent-gear-to-income factor and the way of determining income is under review, not only within my ministry but within Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in relationship to the agreement we have with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, indeed, the municipality in the cost-sharing program related to rent-gear-to-income.

Mr. Bounsall: A supplementary: If the minister is replying it is still under discussion and he is still formulating plans, why are some of the housing authorities, Windsor Housing Authority being one of them, demanding that at lease renewal time all of the income of the children of those families be verified and notarized before the new lease will be signed, even if whatever new plan is contemplated is not yet in effect?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the exact information of which the member speaks. I shall be delighted to look into the situation. Obviously, what the Windsor Housing Authority is doing is trying to determine the full incomes within their particular housing program. If some changes should be made—and I'm not saying there will be any at this particular time—then they're in a position to move in that direction.

Mr. Speaker: A brief supplementary, the member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the minister if it is the policy of his ministry to require tenants in Ontario housing to indicate to the rental officer any jewellery or other valuables they possess?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, Mr. Speaker, that has not been our direction, but we have asked for any income holdings the individuals within public housing might have. If that should be savings bonds or other interest drawn from savings accounts, that must be accounted for in the income qualifying factor.

Mr. Bolan: Why don't you take the gold out of their teeth?

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago—and I'm sorry I can't recall the exact date—the honourable the Leader of the Opposition asked me about the question of exposure in chiropractic X-rays. I've some numbers I'd like to provide to him. These, I'm told, are three of the more common views, as it were, that are taken.

They compare the average exposure in a chiropractor's office, based on the 78 most recent inspections of chiropractic offices, with those in hospitals based on the 195 most recent hospital facility inspections.

There are two types of lumbar spine X-rays used. The first one is referred to as lumbar spine AP. The average for this in a chiropractor's office is 0.78 rems; in a hospital it is 0.70.

The second type of lumbar spine view is known as the lateral view. In a chiropractor's office, it is 2.2 rems; and in a hospital it is 2.8 rems. I don't have the figures from a hospital for a full spine view because it's basically a chiropractic examination, but it's 0.5 rems in a chiropractic office.

FARM WOOD LOTS

Mr. Riddell: I have a question of the government House leader. Seeing that this is the time of year when farm wood lots are being decimated, why is he delaying further proceedings with the Trees Act? Is it because the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) has told him to postpone this as long as he can because the farmers in that member's riding want to cut down the wood lots before this act is passed?

An hon. member: Diabolical.

Mr. Riddell: If that is the reason, when is the government going to accept the fact that that member's weight should be considered only as part of his structure and not as the sole decision-maker in the cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the honourable member to retract that statement. It is not the truth. The member for Lambton is the one who has asked his colleagues in cabinet to proceed with the bill. The opposition is over there.

Mr. Riddell: Well, get it in. What are you holding it up for?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Nixon: Don't withdraw it.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The question was asked of the government House leader, the member for Brock. Do you have a response?

Mrs. Campbell: Answer the question. He's entitled to that.

An hon. member: Don't be so arrogant.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has already anticipated my answer. I say very briefly, no, the member for Lambton has not given me any instructions with respect to that. The member for Lambton would understand that that's the legislation of the Minister for Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), and the Minister of Natural Resources hasn't indicated to me when he wants us to proceed with that particular bill.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a Tory in the woodpile.

Mrs. Campbell: Ha! Ha!

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would still ask the honourable member to withdraw his statement.

Mr. Speaker: It wasn't a statement of fact. It was a question of a minister.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You don't take it then that he directed his statement to me?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Then it is misleading the House.

Some hon. members: Withdraw.

Mrs. Campbell: You were wrong.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Oakwood has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Education concerning the heritage languages program. This matter will be debated at 10:30 tonight.

Mr. Grande: Is the minister going to be here?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have never missed a late show yet.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could we hear the member for Downsview please?

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. di Santo moved first reading of Bill 120, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to change section 22 of the act to render the certificate of a medically qualified practitioner who conducts the examination of the employee conclusive of the matter certified; furthermore, to change section 42(3) to require the board to consider the factors listed in the bill in determining the compensation payable in permanent disability cases; and, finally, to restrict the Workmen's Compensation Board in determining cases falling under section 42(5) of the act for the payment of the supplement.

GAS SERVICE EXTENSION ACT

Mr. Warner moved first reading of Bill 121, An Act respecting the Procedure for the Extension of Gas Service in Metropolitan Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Warner: The purpose of this bill is to provide a means of ensuring the accountability of the Consumers' Gas Company to each neighbourhood and municipality in Metropolitan Toronto into which it proposes to extend gas service. The bill establishes a procedure for holding a neighbourhood plebiscite to determine the wishes of residents concerning the extension of gas service into their neighbourhood.

On the basis of the results of the plebiscite the municipal council having jurisdiction in the neighbourhood may, by bylaw, prohibit the extension of gas service into the community or may, in consultation with any local community association, attach terms and conditions to the extension of the gas service.

The bill prohibits the Consumers' Gas Company from commencing any construction work for the purpose of extending service into a neighbourhood for a period of six months following the giving of notice as required by the act, unless the council of the municipality approves an earlier starting date. This is the first change in 130 years to the present legislation.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PLANNING AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Bennett moved second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: This bill proposes to amend section 35(a) of the Planning Act. Section 35(a) enables municipalities to exercise what is commonly known as site-plan control. That is to require developers to provide additional site-related facilities such as access, landscaping, off-street parking et cetera, that could not normally be obtained through provisions contained in the general zoning bylaws passed under section 35 of the act.

Section 35(a) was introduced into the act by amendment in December 1973. Its introduction was in response to requests by six municipalities for similar private legislation and was based on recommendations made to the government by the Ontario Law Reform Commission. Since its introduction, more than 75 municipalities have begun using the controls in one form or another. In many of these municipalities site-plan control constitutes an essential element in their development control procedures.

The need for this amendment at this time stems primarily from a recent decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada. On January 23, 1979, the Supreme Court declared the city of Toronto's 35(a) bylaw applying to the core area of the city to be ultra vires. The by-law in question substantially repeated the wording of section 35(a) and the court ruled that in its view this was not a proper exercise of the power. It ruled that instead of merely listing the various facilities and matters to be regulated, provided for or prohibited, the bylaw should have specified exact standards relating to all of the matters described in section 35(a)(2).

The Supreme Court decision has caused a number of problems which require immediate attention. First, many other municipalities in Ontario have enacted 35(a) bylaws which are drafted in a manner similar to the city of Toronto's bylaw. The legality of these bylaws is also questionable and nine major municipalities have formally requested me to amend the act to clarify the situation.

Second, the city of Toronto has proceeded to enact a general bylaw which attempts to comply with the Supreme Court ruling. It is clear from this exercise that further problems will result, since it is impossible to develop standards which can take into account variations from site to site. Such bylaws will have to almost always be amended before development can take place, adding significantly both to time and cost. Bylaws themselves are very detailed and complex and administration could be very unsatisfactory.

Third, and most important, the Supreme Court decision removed the flexibility of the operation of the controls which were available previously. It was the initial intent of the Legislature to provide such flexibility when the provisions were first enacted.

In developing this amendment to the section the primary objective has been to clarify the manner in which the powers can be enacted by municipalities and to provide some discretion in the application and administration of the controls by municipalities. The main features of the amendments are, first of all, allow municipalities to apply site-plan controls directly rather than in a zoning bylaw, as was previously the case.

This should overcome the drafting difficulty under which the city of Toronto bylaw was declared ultra vires, allowing municipalities to exercise discretion in applying the controls; extend the facilities to be controlled by ensuring provision of access for emergency vehicles and enabling municipalities to require lower maximum building heights than those established in the zoning bylaw as long as there is no change in density; improve municipal administrative procedures by permitting a council to delegate administration of the controls to a committee of council.

The current provisions which allow municipalities to request submission of prospective drawings and plans showing buildings, elevations and cross sections of industrial and commercial buildings and residential buildings containing 25 or more dwelling units have been deleted because it has been found that only a handful of municipalities are using this power and in these instances it seems to add unduly to the time taken for approval.

These are the main features of Bill 96. They have been discussed in general terms with representatives from the development industry, including the Canadian Institute of Public Real Estate Companies, which was the main proponent of the Supreme Court case on this matter. It has also been discussed with the city of Toronto and with the municipalities on committee. However, we understand as of recent days there are some changes of heart by the municipalities in wanting some portions of the bill to be amended.

I introduce Bill 96 for second reading and would await the comments of the opposition.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, as the minister has indicated, this bill arises from the fact that the city of Toronto bylaw number 419-74 was set aside by a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. This development control bylaw by the city of Toronto was similar to that passed by many other municipalities in this province and was according to section 35a of the Planning Act. The Supreme Court felt, as I understand it, that the Legislature had not given the municipalities such ill-defined power as was included in the Toronto bylaw.

I believe that the decision by the Supreme Court was unfortunate because it has thrown into disarray the planning procedures of municipalities of Ontario. However, because the decision was based on law, the Supreme Court obviously had no other choice but to make the ruling which it did, irrespective of the inconvenience caused to municipalities.

The problem as I see it is that the Minister of Housing has used the opportunity, through Bill 96, to delete paragraph 12 of 35a(2) of the original Planning Act. This is particularly regrettable because municipalities were not informed that this was going to be the case.

Let me just read paragraph 12 of section 35a(2) of the Planning Act. This is one of a number of clauses which interpret what municipalities can and cannot do in development control in the province. Paragraph 12 reads as follows: "Perspective drawings and plans showing building elevations and cross sections of industrial and commercial buildings and residential buildings containing 25 or more dwelling units."

Municipalities have used this particular clause in the act, as well as a number of the others, in order to gain some control on building standards in the province. On average I think municipalities have done a tremendous job in this regard. I think they have been pleased with the province in having included this within the last few years so they could exercise their authority on municipal projects. What the province is now doing—and it's most irregular—is to delete this from the act without consulting municipalities specifically on that particular deletion.

The minister may say they have consulted municipalities in a general sense, but this morning I spoke to a planner of a fairly large municipality and he said he was not aware that this particular clause was being deleted and he was most upset that the minister was going this route in order to, in a sense, try to mislead municipalities or, if not misleading them, certainly trying to put something over on them.

Let me read from the Globe and Mail of this morning what Mr. Sewell, the mayor of the city of Toronto, has said.

According to this reporter, Mr. Sewell was very unhappy with the bill. He says that in effect the minister has tried to sneak in this deletion. He says, "They are trying to sneak in the new law and kick out one of the significant powers we've had in the past." He is obviously referring to paragraph 12 of section 35a(2) of the Planning Act. "We're dealing with really large projects; we should have the ability to ask for plans to see what they look like."

This is asking developers to show what kind of plans they have and to be able to have some impact on the planning. As municipal representatives, people who are closest to the wishes of the public, they should have this opportunity. The minister has deleted this from the bill. What's even worse he hasn't told the municipalities he was going to do it, only that he has done it.

The article goes on: "The mayor noted that Toronto recently passed special site-development bylaws for the $400 million College Park project (formerly T. Eaton Company Limited's College Street store) and Eaton Centre's $150 million Phase Two. In both cases, the city exercised its right to review design features.

"If the bylaws must be changed to comply with what the province has proposed, Mr. Sewell said he doesn't think city council will pass the amendment. 'I think those projects are going to get halted, stopped,' he warned."

I don't disagree with the minister trying to expedite planning procedures. I do disagree with him when he's trying to do it in the way he has proposed. I also disagree when municipal politicians are saying the actual effect will be that projects will be held up.

About the neighbourhood aspect, I have had representations made to me regarding development-control agreements. There are two parties involved in drawing up these agreements—the municipality and the developer. There are those people in this province, particularly neighbourhood associations, who believe they also should be consulted in drawing up these development-control agreements. They feel that often there are important decisions made which relate to them, which are very close at hand, which may be in their backyard in the matter of garbage bins or whatever. They would like very much to have an opportunity to be canvassed on these matters at the juncture where these development-control agreements are drawn up.

I do hope the minister will give some consideration to this matter because citizens are having an increasing amount of influence on these decisions and obviously should have the opportunity to be directly consulted in this matter.

Later on, when this goes to committee, my party will put forth an amendment, which we will circulate very shortly, to have paragraph 12 of section 35a(2) reinstated in Bill 96. We think it's most unfortunate that it was excluded. The municipalities with which I have been in contact would dearly like to see it reinstated. Until we have a good consensus on the matter from planners across the province that they do not need it, I will be of the opinion this bill should be amended to reflect their wishes.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act, is not merely legal and administrative tinkering to replace a section of the Planning Act which has been successfully upset by the Supreme Court decision recently in terms of Toronto bylaw 419-74. It appeared at first that the minister was simply rushing in to provide new legislation to cover at least 45 municipalities whose bylaws under section 35a have suddenly been put under a legal cloud because of the decision by the Supreme Court.

That is what it appeared to be at first. But the bill is a significant change in policy by the minister, since it removes a crucial bargaining tool—the control of architectural design—from the hands of the municipalities, thereby significantly changing the rules of the game in negotiating between major developers and municipalities over site-plan control agreements. It is that point which is most important, as already mentioned by the member for Waterloo North.

The minister has led municipal officials to believe that the bill is merely housekeeping legislation which will restore the legislative basis for section 35a bylaws and make the process more streamlined and less cumbersome. We in the New Democratic Party feel that the legal implications of the bill are the reverse, since the bill makes no provision to protect existing agreements and puts in jeopardy those under negotiation already.

It is interesting that, by this innocuous statement, the minister has moved away from some of his own often stated rhetorical positions; he said that the province must move away from the approval role to one of advising and assisting municipalities, and yet in this very bill the minister actually moves towards seriously limiting municipal autonomy and the rights of the municipalities to deal with development.

In the last couple of days, our research department and myself and my assistant, Penny Bethke, have phoned a number of municipalities. First of all, 10 days ago we sent a letter. Since the bill was suddenly rushed towards discussion here in the House, we decided to phone everyone in the last two days—as many people as we could, I should say; planning departments and some of the aldermen in various municipalities—to discover (1) whether they have been consulted and (2) their opinion of this crucial section, paragraph 12 of 35a(2).

The paragraph, as was clearly indicated by both of our previous speakers, is one which states that—and I quote: “perspective drawings and plans showing building elevations and cross sections of industrial and commercial buildings and residential buildings containing 25 or more dwelling units” must be produced by the developers so that the municipality can make a decision in terms of whether it fits their plans, the development, the needs of the community and a number of other considerations like that.

When we have discussed this with the various elected officials in the cities of Windsor, Sudbury, Hamilton, Ottawa, London, Thunder Bay and Toronto, there has been a general reaction of, first, disbelief that the minister would consciously move towards reducing the power of municipalities and, second, strong objection to having that particular paragraph removed from the act. This was universal in all the places I have mentioned.

It is also interesting that the minister was not prepared to deal with that in the question period. He promised us in the question period he would answer the question from my leader, which I hope he will be able to deal with now, as to why it is that he had not consulted municipalities, even only for political reasons, to check whether there would be a significant objection from them to removal of paragraph 12. I find it very difficult to understand why a minister in charge of a large ministry, who with much fanfare recently introduced discussion papers on the Planning Act, would then rush to sneak in—and I use that word very consciously—to sneak in a new amendment to legislation which, in effect, will limit the right of the municipalities.

Mr. Wildman: We can see it when you are sneaking stuff in. We don't come in afterwards and ask about something that was sneaked in when it was passed.

Mr. Duksza: That is a better way of doing it, and that is why our leader was asking the question.

The minister must be aware that, in places like Toronto, removing that particular paragraph 12 will put into jeopardy, as I have said already, various negotiations going on between the developers and the municipalities and, in fact, causes some problems regarding the Eaton Centre development and the development of the College and Yonge Eaton's building. Of course, if the minister would bother to contact people in the city of Toronto, he would discover that soon enough.

[3:30]

There are a number of points in the bill which need to be changed. One, the definition of the term "development" is much too vague. Two, the bill does not provide the means of exempting classes of projects from development control or means by which a council can delegate authority. Three, legal protection of existing agreements must be taken into consideration. Part of them depend on section 35a(2)(12). Finally there is the question of architectural control.

Until I heard the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp), I would have moved an amendment to restore paragraph 12 to the act, but I will now join him in supporting the amendment to restore it. I do want reassurance from the minister that he is willing to accept the joint amendment from the two opposition parties because unless I hear that he is willing to accept this amendment, I have no option but to vote against the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before hearing any further comments on the bill, I would like to ask if there is a member in the House who sent an anonymous question to the table for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea). If so, would the member give the table his name?

Mr. Haggerty: I want to address myself to Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act. My main concern is the same as that expressed by other members, in particularly relating to section 35a(3)(12)—"Perspective drawings and plans showing building elevations and cross sections of industrial, commercial and residential buildings containing 25 or more dwelling units."

That will have effect, if the bill is passed, not only on the city of Toronto, but on other areas. I am not sure if the minister is aware of the present proposals put forward by the city of Port Colborne in accepting a development control zoning plan relating to the Sherkston Beaches operations. Some 500 acres with an open space concept are at present under the control of the municipality and the regional plan. It consists of almost a mile and a half of lakefront property with beautiful sand beaches. Under the proposals put forward for this area, it is to be developed into commercial, residential and high-density buildings.

The area is about eight miles from the downtown core of Port Colborne and there are no hard services available, such as sewers and water. In addition, the proposal will branch out further into the rural area of that community and no doubt cause serious problems there, in direct contrast to the regional plan and perhaps even the plan of the city of Port Colborne.

I suggest to the minister before the acceptance of his proposal under the new white paper on the Planning Act, a certain section should be included in the amendments put forward by the ministry related to development controls and proposals being put forward by a number of municipalities. I am interested in the question of the provincial role in this matter.

In the white paper it says, "Most private development proposals will be subject only to the Planning Act. The Environmental Assessment Act will be applied only to major private undertakings designated by the cabinet." If we are talking about Toronto, that means a high rise building can go up and if there are any objections, the matter will still rest with the cabinet. There will be no appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board; that is, the public has no right to appeal, if I interpret the paper correctly.

To continue quoting from the white paper, where such a designation of a major private undertaking is made, "any related approvals required under the Planning Act will become the responsibility of the approving authority under the Environmental Assessment Act."

I am glad to see in this proposal the Environmental Assessment Act will apply to planning; I don't think it has in the past. I am talking about an open concept theme park. I think of the matter of the one to be located in Maple. I can try and relate it to the matter of the proposal now being presented by the city of Port Colborne to the ministry for approval where Sherkston Beaches will have an open concept theme park where there will be commercial and recreational integration. It will be integrated and I suppose there will even be high-rise buildings as indicated in this proposal by the planner of the city of Port Colborne.

The white paper goes on to say, "approvals required under the Planning Act will become the responsibility of the approving authority under the Environmental Assessment Act. No hearing before the municipal board will be required and such proposals will be subject to only one comprehensive hearing.

"Where a public undertaking is subject to the Environmental Assessment Act and also requires approvals under the Planning Act, the same 'streamlining' arrangements will apply."

As I said, I'm concerned about this particular amendment proposed by the minister. In the United States, for example, where they have high density high-rise buildings, there have been court decisions handed down that have some bearing on high-rise apartment and residential property that may be abutting a certain development plan where the residents have been deprived of perhaps one of nature's best available products—the sun.

I suggest to the minister another area he should be looking at where we have high-rise buildings, particularly in Toronto and other communities, is that no citizen or resident be denied the right of access to the sun. We are talking about solar energy in particular. I think the time is going to come very shortly when many home owners will be moving into the area of solar energy and they are certainly going to require the sun for that.

I will be passing on information concerning the city of Port Colborne's application for official plan approval to this ministry and I suggest that the minister takes a serious look at this matter, because it is going to disrupt the whole community in the so-called hamlet of Sherkston.

There's another matter I bring to the attention of the ministry. For development purposes, communities that have no services out in the country, which is strictly a rural community or area, under the present plans that are available now, or suggestions under the planning by the region and by the city planners in Port Colborne, any 10 homes in an area can be designated as a hamlet and land be subdivided. If the minister is going to allow that to be permitted in the city of Port Colborne—a subdivision some eight or nine miles outside the downtown core, where they lack potable water and sewer services—he is going to compound the problem down there. I thought when we had regional government this was going to solve some of our problems and we wouldn't permit that urban sprawl, but this proposal put forward by Sherkston Beaches and accepted by the council is irresponsible planning. I am going to forward all that information to the minister.

On this particular bill, section 35a(2)(12), I would like to see, for development control purposes, all important matters of drawings and proposals for future development in any municipality made available to the public. This business where you can show a development-control site plan covers nothing. It just shows you the outside areas; it doesn't actually tell you what's going to take place in there.

For example, at Sherkston Beaches 10 per cent of that area will be used for buildings of some nature. It could be a motel, or it could be a hotel, or it could be indoor-outdoor tennis courts, or something like that, but 10 per cent of 600 acres is 60 acres of valuable lakefront property that's going to disappear. In the Sherkston Beaches operation, the public now have access to that lakefront. That access could disappear under this proposal for development.

I'm going to support my colleague, who will be moving an amendment as it relates to section 35a(2)(12) of the act, that all information must be provided to the public.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I rise to tell the minister I think it's an absolute disgrace that he has ignored the consultation process that is supposed to be taking place with municipalities, the consultation that his colleague, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), promised to us yesterday during the consideration of his estimates. That minister promised to us that consultation was an ongoing part of the government's program with regard to municipal governments.

The minister knows that the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee process is in existence and in fact he had the opportunity just a few days ago to explain this to the PMLC. Yet the bill comes here today with an explanatory note that ends with a paragraph that reads: "The other provisions of the existing section 35a providing for the entering into of agreements . . . are basically unchanged." It comes to us with an explanatory note that says that this very major and important change has been slid through without consultation with appropriate municipal representatives and without drawing to the attention of our caucus and the opposition party caucus that the change is there in the act. I really think that is quite an inappropriate way for the minister and for the government to proceed.

Having said that the consultation process wasn't there, I've also just learned that there was a meeting on Tuesday, March 20, in the ministry's offices, at which representatives of the city of Toronto, Scarborough, North York, London and Ottawa met with the minister's staff to talk about this bill, to talk about the things that should be incorporated into it. The recollection of my contact is that that meeting agreed that some form of architectural review should be included in the Planning Act.

Yet we have the act brought forward now, at short notice, without adequate consultation. I think it's to the credit of our caucus that we have initiated the consultative process with municipalities and I think it's to our credit we have the contacts available who are able to respond to these kinds of things far quicker than the minister and his contacts seem able to.

There are other matters that concern us in this act, as my colleague has already outlined. I want to assure the minister that we will be doing everything possible to make sure that paragraph 12 is reintroduced into the design control provision of this act so that municipalities continue to have the powers available to them now, powers they are beginning to use and which form a crucial part of development control in the downtown areas of certain substantial municipalities.

I want to indicate to the minister that we will support an amendment introduced by my colleague, the member for Waterloo North, if that's brought forward this afternoon, but we will make sure that the bill goes nowhere until that amendment is incorporated. If that means bringing members into this House in order to make sure that we get the consultative process that the minister should have implemented, then we will undertake that.

I hope the minister will assure us now that he will introduce the amendments that are so desperately needed and which should have been incorporated as a result of consultation with municipalities rather than having to come to this kind of forum to get the minister's problems solved.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to address myself to this bill and particularly to paragraph 12 which has been eliminated from the act. I would like to give a for-instance of the implication so far as the city of Toronto is concerned.

I would remind the minister that cabinet not too long ago, in a proceeding which I still maintain is a corrupt proceeding, in the Annex area of my riding overruled a decision of the Ontario Municipal Board and sent a certain matter back to that board for further consideration.

One of the very nubs of that particular development was the opportunity for the city to bring into play design control. For the benefit of the minister, this is the area between Elgin and Prince Arthur on the west side of Avenue Road known as the Garden development. There was certainly a problem with both the densities and the coverages in that area. In effect, the action of the cabinet in sending it back to the OMB was really to breach part 2 of the plan.

Inherent in that whole decision was the opportunity for the city to look at the elevations of the project and its design component. For example, in the north end of that development there was a stage of height control by elevation control which could enable the residents on Elgin to live with a rather large development in their vicinity. It wasn't just the height control; it was the whole design of the project which had been very carefully worked out.

If this were to pass in principle or even go to committee, I would say that once more the city and, more important perhaps, the residents who spent several years in trying to accommodate to this kind of development, would feel frustrated. Already they feel very frustrated and cheated by the government by the fact that they had to spend $22,000 of their own money to support a plan, then the government blithely sent it back without any compensation for cost. In this bill, it is getting into something that is really a nitty-gritty item in the city of Toronto.

There is no question in my mind that through the years there has been criticism of the city for its lack of development—that's what most people have called it—in the downtown core. There has been in part an accommodation to planning which would take into consideration the lifestyle of this city, which I think, on the whole, councils one after the other have maintained. Their major tool has been their opportunity for that kind of design control.

What the government will be doing, quite apart from what it may think about the right of a municipality to design its own lifestyle, in my view and in the view of others in the city, is to completely frustrate one more time the whole development process because then there will be no attempt to accommodate. One will simply go on the very narrow confines of the central area plan, part 2, or whatever applies to a given section.

There is no question in my mind that we must ensure that section 35a is restored to the bill. We recognize the procedural problems at this point in time. Because there isn't an opportunity to introduce an amendment at this stage of the bill, as I see it, I would urge the minister himself to speak to this matter and to reintroduce this section, since my understanding is it is intended the bill should go out to committee and that section should be in the bill when it is discussed and debated in that committee.

I regret I don't know how many municipalities across Ontario have taken advantage of that section. I am advised that Toronto is not alone, but I can't give any statistics on it. While any municipality is using that tool to protect what it believes is the interest of the residents of its municipality, it seems to me it is totally wrong to deprive it of that opportunity.

I can't speak further on the matter, but I would urge the minister to at least allow this matter to be reincorporated for debate in committee so that we may have a full discussion of that provision. Otherwise, I am afraid I would have to take a position personally that this is a principle with which I cannot concur. I would hope the minister would not place us in that confrontation position. I think it is important to the planning of this province that we review the wishes of municipalities.

Goodness knows, in these days what you have done is to say: "We believe in municipal autonomy." Translated it means: "We believe you should raise the funds for what you want to do, but when it comes to making your decisions, we believe we, as Big Brother, know best." It is not the way to approach the municipalities. It is not the way to approach proper, adequate planning. We need the tool.

Mr. Renwick: I am sorry I was unable to be in the House during the course of the comments made both by my colleagues, by others and by members of the Liberal Party in respect to Bill 96, An Act to amend the Planning Act. I do understand the minister has as yet made no statement of any kind. All I can do in a very brief way, since the minister didn't choose to make a statement at the opening of second reading of the bill, is talk into the kind of vacuum I hope the minister will move in to fill at the time when he closes off the debate. I know that is an immense request to make of the minister, but I hope he will.

More than anything else the events of the last 24 hours, in my opinion, as they have developed with respect to the concerns the minister has raised among the municipalities that have taken advantage over the years of section 35a leads me to believe this assembly requires the minister to level very clearly with us about what has taken place. If there are any misconceptions in my understanding of it, I hope the minister will feel quite free to say I am quite improperly informed or not informed adequately about the background of it.

I am interested only in one thing. I don't really care at this point in the game whether or not I should or should not have had further information about it. I am concerned that the minister's statement clearly and unequivocally states what the position of the ministry is with respect to the omission from this bill of the provision which has caused so much agitation. That provision is, of course, the existing provision of paragraph 12 of section 35a(2) of the act as it presently stands. That is the provision which states that "Perspective drawings and plans showing building elevations and cross sections of industrial and commercial buildings and residential buildings containing 25 or more dwelling units," will be contained in the presentations which are required in relation to development projects so that municipalities will have an opportunity to have some sense of design approval available to them in respect to the overall public interests served by the old section 35a and the new section 35a.

So, I want to know why there has been no apparent public discussion of this matter. There certainly isn't any reference to it in any of the explanatory notes that accompany the bill. Why has the minister decided to omit the particular provision? So far as I am concerned, and I don't pretend for a moment either to be sufficiently expert or to have studied in detail the white paper with respect to the Planning Act, why does there appear not to have been any significant discussion in that white paper about this particular provision in the existing section 35a? Third, why does it appear from the way in which the matter has come to our attention, that in a very real sense, the municipalities have been caught by surprise by the omission from the bill of that provision?

I think we are entitled to have the information as to the course of the negotiations and discussions which led this ministry to produce the bill which omitted that particular provision. There are other provisions that are going to be matters of concern, but that's true of all bills and those are matters which can quite properly be dealt with in a committee of the assembly in the ordinary way in dealing with amendments. But, when you come to a matter of such fundamental importance, a party such as ours is placed in a very difficult position because we have to await the so-called dynamics of the debate about the question of voting for or against the bill.

I don't want the minister to misunderstand. It is our intention, unless the minister unequivocally states that he is going to propose an amendment in committee to reinstate the substance of paragraph 12 in section 35a(2) as it presently stands, to oppose the bill on second reading. This caucus would have little other alternative.

The next point, which is of major concern to us is that if we do not get that kind of unequivocal undertaking from the minister, then we are prepared, if necessary, to stand 20 members in their place in order to ensure that the bill goes out to a standing committee of the assembly and does not appear before the committee of the whole House. I have heard—again in the immense number of rumours that always crop up when we're under this kind of pressure because of a failure by the government to give an adequate explanation of a problem which has arisen—that the minister is going to refer it out to a standing committee. If so, then there will be no need for us to exercise our right under the rules to stand 20 members in their place in order to direct that the bill be considered in committee other than committee of the whole House.

Those are matters which appear to me to be of such significant importance that we have to have a complete levelling by the minister as to what is the background of the omission. If it is sheer inadvertence and misunderstanding of the implication, that's fine. Confession is good for the soul; ignorance, once dispelled, is no particular vice. We are quite happy to have that kind of admission from the minister.

If, however, there are some other reasons and he has been subjected to other pressures, then we'd like to know what are the meetings at which the pressures took place, who were present and what indications he has given to anybody that he has a problem with this section. Is he going to await the unfolding of the events in committee to determine what his ultimate position is going to be? Is he going to make it clear for us or not clear?

I can only speak from the point of view of a representative of the city of Toronto which has an immense interest in the kind of provision of section 35a which replaces the existing section. It has an immense interest in that there is a tremendous amount of time, effort and talent which goes in, as the minister is well aware, to these major multiple-type agreements that the city is a party to with respect to the redevelopment of the basic part of the inner of the city of Toronto.

The minister knows that when, as I understand it, the legal department of the city of Toronto—for which I happen to have a very high regard and respect, and for which I am quite certain the minister's advisers have a high regard and respect—has tremors about the net effect and the fall-out of the proposed bill that is before us on both existing agreements and intended agreements for these multiple complexes which will not develop in the way that is consistent with the central core plan which the ministry itself has approved within only the last few days; when that kind of tremor is sent through the legal department amongst the experts in the city, from a legal point of view, who deal with these redevelopment matters, day in and day out, then there is a very profound obligation on the minister to dispel and allay those very real concerns that have been generated within the knowledgeable people in the city's planning, legal and other departments.

This is not in any sense to be taken as a matter which is a political matter in the sense that it is a partisan political problem that has been created. This is a serious fundamental amendment to the Planning Act, related to the whole of the redevelopment of the city. It has had the net effect, because of its draftsmanship and because of this particular serious omission, of destabilizing all of the existing agreements with respect to the Eaton's Centre Phase II, with respect to the tremendously complex College Park development, and with respect to the properties immediately on the north side of Dundas, known, I guess, as the Trizec lands, to name only three of them.

When one finds there are other agreements pending which are in the course of negotiation and which in a funny way have had to come to a halt because of the uncertainty created by the bill the minister has introduced, then he has an immense obligation, because of the long history and the long commitment of the city to the public interest in the kind of legitimate, equitable redevelopment which can take place, to dispel each and everyone of those concerns and to dispel them promptly, clearly and concisely in this assembly and not to have the tremors of it reverberating for the next several days while we go through our ruminations about it.

As I say, there are other amendments which are the normal give and take of the interplay of any statute when one is trying to satisfy a number of groups. We can deal with that and the assembly is accustomed to dealing with that type of amendment in its committees. But in this particular fundamental flaw in this bill which has caused this kind of concern in the city of Toronto—and representing as I do one of the areas contiguous to this development area I have a particular and special interest in it—it seems to me the minister has to level with us and has to come clean in the House this afternoon as to exactly what it's all about—why the omission, what the purpose of the omission was, was it intended and what he is going to do to give us some assurance that it will be replaced or not.

I don't wish to emphasize the position of the city of Toronto unduly because it would appear to us there are significant concerns, in the planning departments and elsewhere, which are affected by section 35a, in municipalities across the province. I don't know the exact number, but I am advised somewhere in the neighbourhood of 50 to 60 municipalities have taken advantage of the existing section 35a. I am told they have, when it is drawn to their attention or they find out on their own initiative, significant concerns about it.

I do not understand it. I believe the intended omission of this item from the bill was not a matter which was discussed at the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee by the minister or his advisers, in order to try to make certain that municipalities were apprised of it in time.

I have some very real concerns when I know the minister's own city has apparently somewhat similar concerns to the planning departments and others in the city of Toronto. These were reflected in the statement which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning about the position of the mayor of Toronto.

These arrangements are the result of very complex, lengthy, valuable, costly negotiations over a long period of time. If there is going to be destabilization of the legal framework within which those agreements are negotiated, then I do not think this government will want to bear the responsibility for the destabilization. I am calling on the minister, in a matter within the framework of important matters, a matter of essential need for this government, to move promptly to restore the kind of stability which existed. That stability will continue to exist if the minister will make a formal declaration in the assembly on second reading that he will accede to the request.

I have been informed that my colleagues in the Liberal Party are prepared to move and we will support—or we will move and they will support—an amendment in committee, at the appropriate time, to restore the particular section. I don't think it calls for that kind of activity on this kind of an issue.

It seems to me the very destructive nature of this bill is such that the flaw in it must be removed now by the minister, at the time of second reading, by an unequivocal statement that he, himself, will reintroduce the missing provision in the bill.

I trust I have put the position of our caucus as clearly as it is possible to put it, so there will be no misunderstanding about our position, either by my colleagues in the Liberal Party or by the government, as to what course of action we intend on the bill. But I hope we will not be placed in a position where we must vote against, on second reading, a bill which is required. Such a bill, in a proper form, is needed urgently to fill the vacuum created by the quite proper but difficult decision of the Supreme Court of Canada now faced by the city of Toronto. I hope the minister will give us that kind of unequivocal answer to the questions I have tried to place unequivocally before you.

Mr. Makarchuk: I too would like to express some concerns about what is going on in this bill. I would also bring to the minister's attention that in a sense, in Ontario, over a period of time, there has developed a reasonable process of planning. It was not perfect and it certainly can be adjusted and improved and the government is moving in that direction with the minister's white paper. But the point that has to be taken into account is that in that process there is an opportunity for local councils to give and take or barter with developers to try to protect neighbourhoods, to take into account the wishes of the people who live in those neighbourhoods and to ensure that the wishes are implemented in the plans for new developments going into various communities in this province.

What the minister has done in this bill is to eliminate that option for the people of Ontario by denying them the right to continue to have input into the planning process. It bothers me to find out that he has brought this in without taking into account the consequences that can and probably will happen if this legislation ever gets through.

The usual propensity of developers is to try to maximize the units, the densities and so on; in most cases they have very little concern for neighbourhood. Their interest is financial gain because that is what they are all about. This is not to be critical of them, but that is how they operate. What the minister is in effect going to permit will bring a reaction from various neighbourhood groups and citizen groups. He is going to encourage confrontation in the planning processes in Ontario; he is going to have more angry people storming city councils; he is going to bring on all sorts of new Ontario Municipal Board hearings and he is going to have appeals to the cabinet and appeals to the divisional court.

This is the kind of future this bill would create for the people of this province. I worry as to why the minister responsible for this would bring it on. In many cases of appeals, the OMB will probably base its decision on this bill and then the appeals will be made to cabinet. It will be the necks of the minister and the cabinet that will be on the line in terms of what goes into certain neighbourhoods.

Unless at that time the minister makes a decision in favour of the people, he will certainly have to take the political fallout. Why go through such a process when there is in effect right now a process whereby the wishes of the people on the local elected councils are relevant and can have the proper planning effect on new developments? Why the minister tries to remove it is something I can't understand.

Before this debate is over I hope when the minister makes his windup speech he will give some commitment as to what he intends to do, as was pointed out by the various speakers on this bill earlier today.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have listened with interest and also concern to the remarks raised by members representing the opposition. The member for Waterloo North drew my attention to the fact that paragraph 12 under 35a(2) of the present Planning Act had been deleted. There is an inference from the comments of two or three other speakers that somebody was trying to slip something through or to process a piece of legislation without proper and adequate input from people at the municipal level or from members represented on the other side of the House.

The bill was introduced in this House on May 17. I would surely think that in the two weeks or more since then there has been ample opportunity for developing one's arguments for or against the bill or requesting amendments, whether at this level or at the municipal level. In order that there is no misunderstanding, my ministry representatives met with a subcommittee of the Municipal Liaison Committee to review, at my request, the proposed new section 35a, because some 75 municipalities in this province have enacted their own bylaws under the old section 35a and now find themselves, as the member for Riverdale said, in somewhat of a difficult position.

We reviewed it with them and we reviewed it with other interested bodies that had been party to the legal case on which the Supreme Court of Canada ruled on January 31, 1979. We have, in my opinion, tried to cover the waterfront in a very specific way with those people in the city of Toronto representing that municipality in the field of planning. I am not saying it was done at the political level; it was done at the administrative level or the planners' level. The general act being presented here was reviewed with them.

On the first occasion that I became aware of some concerns in the municipal sector—and it is not from lack of consultation with them—obviously in reviewing the bill, their outside legal counsel, I gather, determined that paragraph 12 should not be eliminated under subsection 7 of the previous act and that it should be retained.

At the time we discussed this particular subsection being dropped there appeared to be ample opportunities for the municipality to secure site-plan situations on a particular site being developed and to indicate the type of landscaping that would be required or demanded by the planning board and council.

I repeat again that it was only late last week—on Friday, if I recall correctly—that the mayor of this community, through his people, indicated to my ministry that they had some concerns for paragraph 12.

At this point I have not received any official communication from the city of Ottawa in relationship to paragraph 12 of section 35a (2) of the act. But I did receive from the mayor of the city of Ottawa a letter relating to this amendment but dealing with another problem entirely which the planning board of that city would like to have reviewed.

Obviously, if I am to take the letter of the mayor of the city of Ottawa of May 24 as being some indication of the fact that they legally have reviewed the bill, and that their planners have reviewed the bill, there was no comment raised in relation to paragraph 12 of 35a(2).

I can appreciate that some people feel we are extracting some of the authority of the municipality, which is far from what I wish to do. I said clearly in the white paper presentation a week ago that we were attempting to give back to the municipalities, upon their request, more and more authority on how they are to handle the planning and development of their communities. Far be it from this ministry to want to reduce in any way the authority of the municipalities in designing and developing their community, because they live in it and they have to live with whatever mistakes or improvements they make. Far be it from us to wish in any way to take away from a municipality.

Obviously, though, at the time of reviewing paragraph 12 there were some misgivings as to its need, because of the time factor, as to whether municipalities in all cases had taken paragraph 12 and properly applied it; whether municipalities should get themselves into the position under paragraph 12—from my understanding of it—where some would dictate the quality or colour of brick, for example, for the exterior of a particular building. There should be some flexibility, I would hope, left for the imagination of the private world of architects and not only those employed by municipalities.

Clearly we are in no way, shape or form trying to sneak anything through in this new section 35(a). It is our attempt to make sure that if we amend the act that it will stand the light of day—and, indeed, the trial of another court case if that should ever take place—and that it will give to the municipalities the authority and the control of designing and developing their communities as they, the politicians at the local level, see fit to include.

I would like to touch on one other point that was raised by the member for Parkdale and touched on by two or three other members in talking about existing agreements between municipalities and developers throughout the province.

The question is appropriately and well asked as to what happens to those agreements, and why we should not certify them or qualify them to continue to be in existence in this province, legally. Legal counsel has indicated to us clearly that the whole section 35(a) was under question, which could very well nullify some of the agreements that are in place at present throughout the various municipalities.

There's another very important point of which I think this House should be aware. Obviously, this province is not fully aware of the total range of the matters which the municipalities have included in the past agreements. Many of them, I say to the member for Waterloo North, are beyond the terms of the Planning Act, from a legal point of view.

I would find it rather difficult to suggest to this House that the government of this province should enact a piece of legislation which would certify or validate previous agreements that could very well be once again involved in a court case to decide whether a government has the right to validate something that was far beyond the laws of the day in which it was enacted.

On the other hand, in talking to some of the municipalities, I think they're firmly of the opinion they can validate them. For some of the agreements, while there might be conditions in them that could very well be contested, most of the developers having entered into those agreements, and also in respect of the fact they're going to ask to enter into other site-plan agreements and so on in the future, would more than likely find ways of validating them between the municipality and the developer him or herself, or their companies.

I'm not sure I understood all of the remarks made by the member for Erie, particularly because I do not have the plan from Port Colborne the member talked about. I would find it difficult to try and comment on some of the spot developments and so on. The member will appreciate some of that has come about, not as a result of section 35a, but as a result of land severance committees or committees of adjustment. They have allowed for infilling to a greater extent than what should have been, in my opinion, allowed to develop, for the reasons of water supply and environment, as the member has said.

I am not one who enjoys seeing urban sprawl as we fly over Ontario. One has to wonder how it will ever be adequately serviced either by those amenities most communities want or indeed, by the other more important ones, water and sewers, for the protection of the general public of Ontario. I would be pleased to review further with the member for Erie those things relating to Port Colborne.

I would say in due course, in the discussion of the white paper by municipalities throughout the province and by other organizations, the facts that relate to environmental assessment re the Planning Act can be brought out, as well as how we can have one joint hearing rather than going through dual hearings, which only complicate the subject and raise costs, both for those appealing and for the government of the day.

The member for St. George spoke on the problem of Garden development in the Annex, which is to the north of the Legislative Building, on Avenue Road. Obviously there were some very direct concerns, relating to both density and coverage, which even under the proposed amendment, or Bill 96, would have given the municipality the flexibility in controlling heights as long as the developer did not lose the overall maximum square footage allowed within the construction of the project.

I make it very clear to the member for Riverdale, who said he wanted the position made clear, that we have gone through what we consider to be public discussions with groups that were duly involved and responsible, both to the Municipal Liaison Committee and for some municipalities. I will admit we did not go individually to London, Windsor, Hamilton, Stoney Creek and Ottawa. We went to the municipality, first of all, that was principally involved in the court case, which was the city of Toronto, under its bylaw 419-74.

The member for Brantford raised questions on responsible process. Indeed, that is exactly what the white paper intends to bring into this province—a responsible process of planning and development which may be a little more sophisticated. It will be more sophisticated because we think there's competence and quality of planners within municipal staff today that didn't exist some years ago. That's why we brought forward the white paper and the amendment to the Planning Act, which we hope will help further the development of the province.

I must say the member's remarks relating to this section and how we could get through the Ontario Municipal Board and eventually be referred back to the minister escape me completely, since it is not an item that is put into that position of an appeal to the OMB.

May I conclude by saying that while I have indicated our discussions with CIPREC—the Canadian Institute of Public Real Estate Companies, which is the group of firms here in Toronto which appealed the by-law originally—my staff has met with representatives of the Municipal Liaison Committee, as I said, and with specific employees of the city of Toronto; and recently we have had notices from this municipality, and indeed I understand legal counsel has called the city of Ottawa and the other communities and suggested to them that they now review the old paragraph 12 under section 35a(2) of the act.

I have no desire to leave with this House, or the people of this province, or the municipalities the idea that we're trying to reduce their authority in trying to build an appropriate community. I am willing to accept the views of the opposition and review with my legal counsel a proposed amendment that would likely come into section 35a(7)(a) of the bill, and without saying definitely that it would be paragraph 10 or what, it would likely fit into that particular area. I would trust that would put to rest some of the uncertainties that seem to prevail in the minds of the opposition at this time that we were anxious to reduce the ability of municipal councils to effectively design and develop their communities in any way, shape or form.

My concluding remark is that I'm not aware at this moment of opposition by any particular group to having paragraph 12 removed—pardon me, anyone who is objecting to having paragraph 12 as it was reinstated into Bill 96. I'm sure the development industry that expressed some concerns at the time of the court case felt it was a delaying feature and that sometimes it didn't give flexibility for them and their private architects to do what they believed was good design and development and that at times far too many bureaucratic opinions were expressed by other than political forces at the municipal level on exactly what the characteristics of a building should be.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying that we will look at the possibility of bringing forward an amendment to section 35a(7)(a), which will likely be under paragraph 10 of that subsection.

Mr. Duksza: I don't understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We don't allow a member to speak any more than once on second reading. I'm sure the bill will go to committee and there will be ample time for a clause-by-clause analysis, or clarification at that time.

Mr. Makarchuk: On a point of clarification, what assurance do we have that it is going to committee? Has the minister committed that it should go to committee?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'm open to suggestions that it go to committee of the whole House or to standing committee. The only point I would like to raise in relationship to going to the standing committee is that the ministry and my staff are committed to a rather extensive touring of the province in relationship to the white paper, commitments have been made and staff will obviously have to be in attendance; either that or the necessity of the minister to cancel those meetings and to try and re-schedule them at some other date to review the white paper with all municipalities in this province.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is it my understanding that the bill should not be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, may I get a point of clarification? I don't think that the minister is doing justice to this House in trying to clarify exactly what he is going to do. That is both in regard to paragraph 12 of 35a and with respect to where this bill is going to be amended.

Mr. Speaker: The member is raising the very same question that the member for Parkdale raised.

Mr. Epp: I think, to do justice to the House, we do deserve a clarification on it. I don't think we have had the benefit of one from the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Let me put the question. What is the wish of the House with regard to Bill 96?

[4:30]

Mr. Makarchuk: Committee outside the House.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Committee of the whole House.

Mr. Speaker: It is the discretion of the minister to direct it to the appropriate committee.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable the minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not really, Mr. Speaker. I will be asking that this bill go to committee of the whole House as I propose to introduce two amendments to the bill. Copies of these amendments have been distributed to the opposition critics: an amendment to section 10 to include ambulances as emergency vehicles and an amendment to section 12 relating to the carrying of retarded adults on school buses, which was the subject of the private resolution of the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) a few weeks ago.

The rest of the bill is somewhat mechanical and I don't really have any further comments, other than those I made on the introduction of the bill.

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to thank the minister for the time he and his staff spent briefing us on Bill 90 and other bills pertaining to his ministry. At the same time I do appreciate receiving in advance the amendments he will be proposing today. I am supportive of them and I expect my party will be as well.

The remarks the minister made with regard to the transportation of mentally retarded adults on school buses are, in fact, in keeping with comments that were made during the course of debate on the private resolution of the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel which was supported by members of the House and certainly in keeping with requests made by other members of the Legislature, including the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) during the course of the minister's estimates.

The bill itself, I think, is self-explanatory. It doesn't involve a great deal of comment by me but I would ask the minister to comment on his intent with regard to the stopping of vehicles the police regard to be improperly loaded. Possibly when talking about the enforcement of this provision of the legislation he might direct his attention to a concern I am sure we all have with regard to shippers who know that some of these vehicles are loaded improperly when they leave a plant or loading facility. It is a concern we all have. I think it arose initially when we talked about the movement of sand and gravel and aggregate material, but on a regular basis I see vehicles on the Queen Elizabeth Way with pieces of metal hanging out. One wants to pass these vehicles as fast as possible—in keeping, of course, with the provisions of the Highway Traffic Act.

The reference to definition of a driver is of interest to me as it applies to the possibility of some violations relating, I suppose, to non-motorized vehicles. I gather this amendment is as a result of some court cases involving bicycles. It is my understanding, as bicycling becomes more and more popular, we will be invariably seeing more accidents. While it may be the concern of the ministry to see that these vehicles are brought under the control of the act, and I endorse that, I have some concern about just how that will be applied to individuals, whether or not the minister might be contemplating some kind of licensing provision and what provisions may be expected as far as age and enforcement are concerned.

The only disappointment I have relates to school buses. I remain somewhat unhappy the school buses will be inspected, or can be inspected, by mechanics who are employees of the school bus firm itself. I know the minister's concerns as they relate to northern Ontario and outlying areas. I appreciate that. I appreciate that and I'm sensitive to that. But I think in the built-up urban areas, in the larger municipalities, there are many alternate sources of mechanical inspection. As I've said before, I believe the mechanic required to put the stamp of approval on a bus belonging to a company he or she may work for, is in a particularly invidious position. I see a blatant conflict of interest developing there.

While we may have tightened up in the last six or eight months as a result of some accidents that occurred some time ago, my fear is that we will be less stringent in the future. At some point in time some laxity may occur again. I would ask the minister that during the course of the summer he contemplate amendments that would remove this conflict of interest. But we will nevertheless be supporting the bill.

Mr. Philip: We support the bill, Mr. Speaker. I echo the member for Wentworth North's sentiments to the minister and his staff for the co-operation they have shown, not only on this occasion with the briefing that both the Liberal critic and I had requested during estimates, but also for other help they have been able to provide on various transportation matters over the last three or four years when I was transportation critic.

We are in support of the bill. It makes a number of sensible suggestions. From a very personal point of view, the one that struck me was the addition to section 124 of the act that deals with the problem of snow dumped on highways from private driveways and parking lots and so forth. Before I was elected to the Legislature, I had the privilege of working for the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and drove a great number of miles. I was constantly aware of the fact that one could be going around the corner at 40 or 50, or even 60 miles an hour on a good highway, only to be confronted by a small snowbank that had been ploughed out by someone who thought the snow would somehow evaporate on a bright, sunny day.

I think with the movement toward smaller vehicles, and the present energy crisis that's motivating this, it becomes even more of a hazard. Therefore it's more important that we deal with this problem; which is for me a psychological problem. I never lost control of my car running into one of these things, but certainly I know of people who have gone off the road in instances like this.

As I read the act, and I'm not a criminal lawyer, the minister has made this an offence under the Criminal Code. I wonder if it wouldn't be simpler to have some kind of fine as for other offences under the act. It might make for greater policing and enforcement of that particular problem. Perhaps he had some good legal advice in approaching it this way; but I would like to ask the minister if, under committee of the whole, he would at least address himself to how he is going to educate the public on this particular change. I am sure the majority of people will not be aware of it; they simply do not spend their days reading Hansard.

I welcome, also, the change to section 96 of the act, allowing for emergency vehicles to continue through red lights after taking the proper precautions in coming to a full stop and so forth. I remember endless conversations at the Ontario Fire College when I used to spend some time up there three and four times a year as a consultant. I remember different firefighters and fire chiefs saying they took a chance, even though they knew it wasn't legal to do so, because of their concern about saving lives at the scene of the fire. Others were perhaps enthusiastic about breaking the law. I am sure the minister has received numerous letters over the years from fire departments and police departments. The more recent case that made all the headlines with the tragedy over one particular police incident no doubt has resulted in even more letters on both sides of this question.

I have some questions concerning sections 3 and 4 of this act. The minister is making amendments to sections 57a and 57c, I believe it is, of the old act. I refer to a proposal the minister will recall to exempt from provincial inspection vehicles that come from those jurisdictions with which we have reciprocity agreements. Can the minister give us some assurance that he will at least be doing something to ensure those jurisdictions are made aware of the standards we have? What will he do in cases where a particular jurisdiction with which we sign a reciprocity agreement does not have the same standards of safety to which we seem to be moving, as a result not only of the select committee on highway safety but as a result of the minister's own initiatives in this direction? I'd like some assurance that in signing reciprocity agreements with some jurisdictions perhaps not as safety conscious as we are, that we are not at the same time allowing unsafe vehicles, or vehicles that have less high safety standards, on our highways.

I welcome the section that facilitates the matter of the transportation of the disabled. I think the minister is well aware of our party's stand on that issue. I also express some concern that the minister still has not developed what I consider to be an adequate safeguard in the inspection of school buses, but as a whole I compliment the minister on the bill. It's a good bill; I hope that perhaps in the committee of the whole he may be able to answer some of my questions, and perhaps one or two other questions that I'd like to raise in the committee.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member wishing to speak to this bill?

Mr. Roy: Not right away, no.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Minister, this is your last chance.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments of the honourable members regarding this bill. I'll try to answer a few points that have been made.

The Liberal critic (Mr. Cunningham), the member for Wentworth North, inquired regarding the amendment relating to the fastening of loads. The present section of the bill requires the securing of loads on commercial vehicles. Enforcement of this, as he knows and as I know, is a problem. Sometimes we see pieces of lumber or something—as a matter of fact yesterday morning as I was coming in on highway 401 a truck had lost a number of bundles of insulation. Another enterprising young contractor was stopped and trying to gather up this insulation the truck ahead had dropped off. I was surprised, because when I caught up to the truck carrying the insulation it looked to be well fastened, yet he had lost some.

What this amendment does is make the same provision for a passenger car as for a truck. What we are concerned about here is the fellow who goes down to the local lumber yard on a Saturday morning, picks up a couple of sheets of plywood and doesn't properly fasten them, or has a mattress on the top of his truck or his car. This makes it an offence not to have that type of a load securely fastened.

The definition of the driver, just as the honourable member said, is to include the rider of a bicycle, so that the rider of a bicycle has to obey a red light or signal a left turn, or stop at a crosswalk or otherwise live within the law. It applies provisions of the Highway Traffic Act to the driver of a bicycle or other vehicle that is not defined as a motor vehicle.

I appreciate the honourable member's concerns regarding school bus inspections. I can assure him we will be continuing very strict enforcement. I think we have perhaps the best school bus inspection program in any jurisdiction. We are now extending this to include all commercial buses.

I recognize the argument that can be made about a mechanic of a firm being allowed to certify the buses owned by that firm; but for practical reasons really I believe it is a necessity. For instance, bringing all commercial and transit buses under the system, I am sure you would agree, would make it very difficult for the TTC to take their 1,500 to 1,600 buses to an outside inspection station to get them safety checked. It is necessary that they do their own inspections.

Mr. Cunningham: I am more concerned about the private companies.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am getting into some of the private companies. I won't mention any names, but the honourable member knows of a couple of major companies in the province that have several hundred school buses, so they are almost in the same category. We intend to follow this very vigorously, to do spot checks and be very tough on any offenders we find, as we were in the past.

The honourable member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) mentioned the snow dumping clause; section 124 of the act, I believe it is. This is not a Criminal Code offence—I am surprised that he got that opinion—it is an offence under the Highway Traffic Act. I presume the minimum fine would be the normal $28, the same as it would be if you put snow on the roadway, or more could apply if the judge so decides, as it would if you were not wearing your seatbelt. Certainly it would not be my desire to make it an offence under the Criminal Code that would establish a record for an individual. That is not in the bill and is not the intention.

The emergency vehicles: during the past year I had some contact with the firefighters' association and with the ambulance association. I apologize for the confusion over the ambulance situation, because in my instructions to my staff when we were preparing this bill we had included ambulances. I have an amendment, as you know, to put the ambulances back in. There was some lack of communication between staff officials of the Ministry of Health and officials of my ministry; and after all, Health does run all the ambulances in the province. Reluctantly, I had agreed to take the ambulances out before introducing the bill. The Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and I got together personally on the matter and discovered the misunderstanding. The ambulance people thought we were going to exempt ambulances from speed limits, which they did not want. They are now quite happy and want their vehicles treated the same as fire department vehicles in this area; so in committee I will be introducing an amendment to do just that.

The other item mentioned was the reciprocal inspection agreements for safety standards, relating basically to our bus inspection program. We do hope to enter into reciprocal agreements with other provinces and other jurisdictions; in fact I had a call from the state of New York yesterday. We want very much to enter into an agreement with the state of New York.

These reciprocal agreements are by an Ontario regulation, so if we are not happy with it at any time we can revoke the agreement by revoking the regulation. But New York is recognized, I am told by my staff, as having a very high standard for bus inspections. If you have a New York certificate any other state in the United States will accept it, so hopefully if we will be able to have a reciprocal agreement with the state of New York so that the certificate we issue here is acceptable in New York. It would then be acceptable pretty well throughout the United States. We will be watching very carefully and comparing the programs of safety inspection in other jurisdictions with our own to be satisfied they are adequate before we enter into a reciprocal agreement. I give the honourable members that assurance.

I think that covers the points that were questioned.

RAILWAYS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 92, An Act to amend the Railways Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I really have no comment. I explained the bill on introduction. It is very straightforward. It is brought forward at the request of the Toronto Transit Commission. The Railways Act is an old, old act that has been on the books for many years and is used very little. In fact, until we got this request, I was not aware that we still had it on the books. The bill changes the fine for defacing railway property from a maximum of $20 to a maximum of $500, and it affects the TTC subway.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I see by the date of the act that it was passed during the course of a very fine Liberal administration here in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It has been a long while.

Mr. Cunningham: It has been. But the minister might get used to some changes coming up, especially in view of the changes that have taken place nationally.

I see no need for this bill to go to committee, but I was just wondering about the nature of the violations that the TTC might have referred to the minister. I was just curious with regard to the kind of violations they would be confronted with.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, we are in support of the bill. I have absolutely no problems with sections 2, 3 and 4; the question I have is perhaps related to what the Liberal critic has asked. Section 1 deals with changing section 164 of the act, but section 163(e) also refers to "the commission of any nuisance in or upon trains."

Since we are raising considerably the upper limits of the possible penalty for an offence, I wonder if the minister, or perhaps some people in his ministry, can give us some idea of what offences might constitute a nuisance, what the limits are of that, of whether there have been any cases in which someone has been convicted of that under the act.

I would like some assurance about how this is going to be used. I recognize that the TTC and other companies of that size are not going to be frivolous in the way in which they ask that somebody be charged under the act, but I think it is a question that should be answered.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I guess the best answer I can give is by way of a letter we have from the general counsel of the TTC requesting this amendment. They refer in this letter to the prohibition against smoking, interfering with the mechanical equipment of any of the commission's vehicles, the committing of any nuisance on the commission's vehicles—I do not have an explanation of what they refer to as nuisance—or premises, and the necessity of entering the rapid transit system other than at designated passenger entrances only. Someone climbing over a fence into the subway tunnel, or damaging the commission's equipment would be committing an offence under this act. It would apparently also cover smoking; where there is no smoking permitted, that would be an offence. The point made by the TTC really is that the $20 fine maximum at the present time is not an effective deterrent for the vandalism they encounter on the TTC.

But as far as any complete details of the type of minor nuisance is concerned, I'm afraid I can't give the member that. However I'm sure neither the TTC nor the courts are going to allow the abuse of this.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 99, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill is housekeeping in nature as far as most of the items are concerned. It provides metric measurement in a number of clauses. It deletes the requirement for a registered civil engineer because apparently the engineering profession no longer uses the word "civil." It's a structural engineer, or whatever the proper wording is.

The main importance of the bill is that it provides the authority for me, as the Minister of Transportation and Communications, to pay subsidies for the new program for transportation for the physically handicapped. There's another clause that relates to the marking of roads closed to traffic.

At the present time, apparently, the act says that where a road is closed to traffic it must be signed as "road closed" and "detour." This is not appropriate signing in many cases, where all we're doing is diverting the traffic off the road, through a farmer's field and back to the road, which isn't really closed. It's not really detoured in any major way either. Apparently there has been a legal problem over it. To be legal we had to put signs up saying road closed and detour. This amendment of the act will provide for appropriate barricades and signs to warn traffic there is an obstruction ahead and there is a diversion of the road. I think that's the best explanation I have of the items in the bill.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, we will support the bill. I find the minister's comments to be self-explanatory. I would say as an aside I'm very pleased. I know members of all parties would be pleased to see the provision for the amendment respecting the definition of public transportation, which will facilitate, I hope, increased subsidies for the transportation of the physically disabled.

I think in the past we've been somewhat negligent, possibly, in not providing enough financial support and a little leadership in this regard. I was delighted to see that develop in recent years, and now we will be renewing the commitment to people who are physically disabled that we will be improving the facilities significantly.

We certainly will be supporting the bill.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I support the bill in principle, but I have real problems with section 1. When the minister wishes to make a change that relates to safety he must first of all, to get my support, prove to me beyond a reasonable doubt that safety is in no way being lessened and that it is not merely a change for the sake of expediency or the ease with which his officials or his employees can get on with their jobs.

[5:00]

I haven't heard that, and therefore unless I hear a more convincing argument from the minister as to why section 1 should be included in this bill, I will be moving in committee for the deletion of that section. However, I will be supporting the rest of the bill and some of the excellent proposals and changes in the other sections. I hope the minister will be able to convince me. If he can't convince me, my colleagues will be moving for deletion of that section.

Mr. Isaacs: I share my colleague's concern about the changes in signing for road construction and for detours. As the minister may be aware, my presence here involves considerable quantities of driving on the Queen Elizabeth Way between Stoney Creek and Hamilton and the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. I very often find on that road and on many other King's highways around this province which I have occasion to travel that the amount of signing for roadwork is very inadequate.

I want to tell the minister that I was witness to an accident one night on the skyway bridge across the Burlington canal in which the left lane of the southbound carriageway was closed to vehicles, but for which there was no advance warning sign. The only warning sign that was provided was mounted on the back of a dump truck parked just over the brow of the skyway.

In the very unfortunate circumstances that arose, a van passed my car travelling at some considerable speed and went into the back of the dump truck that had the sign mounted on it. In the very unfortunate circumstances, the driver of the van was killed. Since that event, and perhaps even before that event, I have found that the signing for major roadworks on our expressways and on our highways very frequently leaves much to be desired.

I note from this bill that the present act requires that lights be provided that are visible from at least 500 feet. I'm convinced, from my own experience, that that is not being adhered to at the present time by road crews on our highways.

I note that the bill before us deletes that reference to advance visibility. It concerns me greatly that we're not insisting that road crews take a very responsible attitude towards signing. We have situations where signs are very often left in place when there are no roadworks in progress. That leads to a contempt of such signs by many drivers, which is most unfortunate.

We're now putting forward proposals whereby there will not be a legislative requirement in this act for signs that are visible from a considerable distance. I hope the minister can assure this House he will take a very serious look at that situation so that through some mechanism, either by an amendment to this bill or some other way, we can be assured that motorists have an unobstructed view of signs marking roadworks that are in progress on our highways. Without that kind of authority, I think we're asking for more situations where drivers either run into roadworks or are forced to make manoeuvres at the very last minute, which may imperil other drivers on the road, in order to avoid improperly signed roadworks.

I join with my colleague from Etobicoke in urging the minister to respond to that in a positive way. If not, I will then be supporting my colleague in his effort to delete this section until such time as we can have the assurance I'm asking the minister to provide.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak? If not, the minister.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I must admit I'm somewhat confused. I thought in my introduction of the bill and in my comments five or 10 minutes ago I fully explained the intentions or the effect of this clause. I say, unequivocally, that there is absolutely no intention in any way to delete any of the safety precautions that are now taken.

The ministry is very much aware of the necessity of adequate signing, adequate lighting and adequate safety precautions. For every construction project of any significance, a special slow order is put on and a regulation reducing the speed limit. I am sure the honourable members driving along the Queen Elizabeth are aware that sections of it are now 80 kilometres an hour rather than 100; in some areas where construction is taking place it may be 30 rather than 50.

We have signs reading "construction ahead 4 kilometres" or "construction ahead 2 kilometres" at all these locations. There is no way I would consider any deletion or any easing off of the requirement to sign properly anywhere where there is construction going on. I must say the courts deal with us very severely where there are accidents or where it is found that we are lax or liable in any way in adequate signing or barricading. We don't like having court cases against us, or people being injured and having the necessity to bring court cases against us.

As I explained, the law now says that where a road is closed, to put in a culvert for instance, it must be signed as "road closed" and have detour signs to divert traffic. That can be very confusing to people and can send them off in the wrong direction if they see "road closed ahead" when all we are doing is having a small roadside detour where traffic follows right through with a very minimum delay.

We don't think it appropriate when we have that kind of detour that we should have to put signs up a distance back from the construction saying "road closed," because that is not right, the road is not closed. The physical road surface may be closed, but a detour or a way of bypassing is provided. It is a minute thing, but it would facilitate the ministry in the regulations and in better informing the public as to what to expect. I can ensure the honourable members it is not our intention to do anything that would in any way eliminate any of the safety precautions that are taken. In fact we fully expect this to improve safety at these sites.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

ONTARIO HIGHWAY TRANSPORT BOARD AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 88, An Act to amend the Ontario Highway Transport Board Act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There are a number of items the chairman of the Highway Transport Board has under review at the present time. I expect there will be more amendments to this act perhaps by the fall. These amendments are somewhat mechanical in nature. If members have any questions relating to them, I will be glad to answer them.

Mr. Cunningham: I appreciate the comments of the minister with regard to these amendments. During the course of our investigation of the Highway Transport Board annual report and their activities earlier in the year, it became apparent to us, more apparent than I had ever appreciated, that there were certain practices that were customary at the board for which really there was no basis in law at all, which was somewhat disturbing to me. I appreciate what is being done in these three sections that are part of these amendments to the act. I would expect that as time goes by, recognizing the concerns we have had and industry has had with regard to the act itself, we will see more amendments to the act, both to clarify the function of one of our most important regulatory boards and at the same time to regularize some procedures for which heretofore there was no basis and statute.

I do have a concern with section 3. The minister was kind enough to explain a few things to me with regard to that particular amendment. My concern really is the process of attracting or gaining the confidence of parties to hearings, applicants and respondents to participate in what would appear to be this new simplified procedure. I would sense once the individuals, especially the lawyers, of that small club at the board get to know each member, even the new members of the board, they may have some reticence or some unwillingness to see the chairman bring in one particular member or another to determine a conclusion to a case.

What I suggest might be more effective conduct in the hearing process in the future, might be the consideration that if the hearings are straightforward and simple one individual will hear them, and where they tend to be a little more complicated take the time to add one more individual to the hearing board. I think this is done for Ontario Municipal Board hearings or environmental hearings; certainly it is the custom in the courts on occasion.

I think if that particular procedure were considered it would eliminate the necessity for the provision being made now. At the same time, consent would be irrelevant. If the parties were not happy, I can only say that's unfortunate and the provisions in section 17 would thereafter have to apply. They could reapply or ask for a rehearing. Consent would not necessarily be relevant in that regard. If there were an odd number there would never be a tie—at least nobody would ever admit that anyway.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You'd get one on each side and one riding the fence.

Mr. Cunningham: I was once told the story about how one member had been sitting on the fence for so long his rear end looked like a hotcross bun. I won't disclose to the minister which that was or what particular case.

I support this particular provision, but I hope the minister will take into consideration the comments I have made with regard to the hearing process, because I think as the hearings get more complicated, if in fact the cartage provisions contained in Bill 89 come into effect and we start to regularize or legitimize the leasing operations, and if the North Bay restriction is removed, I would anticipate the Highway Transport Board is going to become a busier place. If this particular provision in fact would inadvertently complicate things, and it may, then I would anticipate probably the easiest way of expediting the hearing process at the board fairly and effectively would be to see the panels are constituted with odd numbers of individuals—one, three, five, whatever; although I can't see too many occasions where you'd ever want to have five people on a panel. The minister nods his head and agrees, and I agree too. With that in mind, I support the bill and I see no necessity for it to go to committee.

Mr. Philip: Unless there are other members who have different views, I don't see any point in sending this to committee of the whole. I am in support of the bill. I don't have any concerns with section 3. There are safeguards built into it that have satisfied me.

I am pleased to hear the minister say this is just the start of a series of such changes that will in some cases make legal, practices that have been done out of necessity to facilitate the processes of the board, to simplify them if you like. These will now have some basis in law.

I take some assurance and comfort in the minister's statement that other changes are coming in the fall, but I see as major the omission of any kind of section that would require the board to set up a separate section to deal with appeals. This has been a major concern I have had, as the minister well knows. I don't believe anyone, no matter how objective he is, can pass judgement on himself. Nor do I think he can, unless he has a tremendous amount of personal security, and perhaps even aloofness from his fellows on the board, pass judgement on other members of the board with whom he may be sitting on the next case. I think if there is any change the minister brings to us in the fall that would add to these three sections, it would be some change that would divide the appeal process, at least in terms of personnel hearing the appeal from those who have heard it on the original application.

I support the bill. I don't see any sense in sending it to committee.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the point made by the member for Wentworth North. I think this is to deal with a situation that to date has not arisen. Many of the applications are heard by one member, and of course when he makes up his mind and that is the decision. I agree that on very major cases, it's probably quite appropriate to have three members sit. This does get expensive and it affects the work load of the board. Of course you can appoint more members if you don't mind how much money you spend.

When you go to court, you only have one judge unless you get up in the higher courts. But I still think if I were an applicant and spending a considerable amount of money to put a case forward, I'd feel a little more comfortable if there were two members sitting there and one person's bias would not necessarily totally affect my case. At least you are going to have two people considering it.

I think the present chairman of the board foresees more situations where two members will be sitting. He foresees the possibility of a split decision or not a unanimous decision, and he has asked us to put in this clause to the effect that with the agreement of the parties involved a third member, perhaps one of the vice-chairmen of the board, could under certain conditions sit with the other two members, perhaps reread the transcript, perhaps rehear the final argument—or whatever conditions the chairman might put on the situation—and then make a decision.

If the applicant or the appellant cannot agree on this, then it goes to a new hearing. We are trying to prevent any more new hearings than necessary—having to be ordered.

The honourable member for Etobicoke referred to the proposed appeals section of the board. I must say I have problems with this, too; that is the fact that at the present time an appeal is usually heard by the same member who turned you down or approved it the first time. This is difficult to understand. I have difficulty understanding it.

I am advised by my officials that, I believe in the province of Quebec, the highways board has set up an appeals tribunal, or an appeals section, and they have run counter to the law in some way. I am not sure whether it has been settled yet. I do not have all the legal advice I require to even comment on it properly, but apparently the appeal section of the Quebec board has been challenged in the courts and is sort of in limbo right now, it is not being used. Apparently any appeal panel may be unconstitutional under federal jurisdiction, which is part of the problem as far as the Quebec tribunal is concerned.

Again, this is something that is being looked at very carefully by the chairman and by the legal counsel hired to assist him in reviewing all the procedures of the act. It is something in which I am most interested, as I know the industry is—that is some change or some revised procedure for dealing with appeals. I assure the honourable members we will be following this up and, hopefully, in due course, we will be back with a recommendation and a further amendment to deal with that matter.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT, 1979

Consideration of Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments, prior to section 10?

Section 1, the member for Nipissing.

On section 1:

Mr. Bolan: On section 1, the amendment to 7a, which changes the definition of "driver."

May I ask the minister what brought about this amendment? I can see a situation possibly has arisen in the province where someone who was driving a bicycle, a muscle-powered vehicle shall we say, may have been involved in an accident which caused damage to other people, and I can appreciate the concern which this may have caused. However, personally I prefer to leave the section as it was, because I think it covers the situation. What the minister was trying to do under the old section was to define a driver as a person who drives a motor vehicle for a specific purpose. Then follows a definition of a motor vehicle and that the driver has to follow the rules of the road as they apply under the act.

My questions, which flow from this proposed amendment, are as follows: Does this mean that every person who drives a bicycle is subject to the rules of the road under the Highway Traffic Act?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It sure does.

Mr. Bolan: Does this mean that if my eight-year-old son rides his bicycle down the street, he is going to be hauled over by the constabulary and given a ticket to appear in juvenile court to face a charge of, shall we say not making a right hand turn around a corner the way he should do under the Highway Traffic Act, which is as closely as practicable to the curb? If that is the case, does the minister have some kind of a program set up to license these youthful drivers of bicycles who, if we follow his reasoning for this amendment, are literally terrorizing the people of Ontario with their reckless and wanton disregard of the public by careening menacingly down the public roads?

I suppose if that is the case, the minister might want to consider something else. Does it mean that the boy should be issued a license? If he is to be put to the same test as an adult with respect to the rules of the road under the Highway Traffic Act, what about insurance? Doesn't the minister think he should have insurance, if that is the case? If he can't have insurance, doesn't he think my eight-year-old son should contribute to the motor vehicle accident claims fund? In other words, does he realize how nonsensical this amendment is.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There sure as hell is a lot of nonsense over there right now.

Mr. Bolan: When one gets right down to it, that is precisely what it is. It is absolute nonsense. I don't know who in the ministry dreamed it up, I am sure the minister didn't. I think he is too sensible a man for that. What I can't understand is how somebody back there can convince him that an eight-year-old boy or a 10- or 12-year-old boy is, all of a sudden, hamstrung in his daily operation of driving his bicycle down the road, without getting any kind of safety instruction from the ministry such as is given to all other drivers on the road, who can only qualify for a licence after they have passed a test. Does the minister not see how ridiculous it is?

I go back to what I said before. What about liability insurance? They are a menace on the highway; as such, should they not be required at least to pay into the motor vehicle accident claims fund? I don't think there was that much thought put into it by whoever came up with what I consider to be a lame-brained amendment.

If the ministry is concerned about speeding bicycles, propelled by muscular power, there are ways of taking care of it other than by picking on every eight-year-old kid. What you do is licence certain types of bicycles, such as racing bicycles, those 10-wheelers, or anything with gears.

Hon. Mr. Snow: A 10-wheeler is a truck.

Mr. Bolan: The minister has lots of gears in his head. Let's see them go into motion for a change. What about the 10-speed bike? Why not licence that? Incidentally, why does the minister not send his draftsmen back and make an amendment to include tricycles? Why not?

[5:30]

Mr. Worton: And kiddie cars.

Mr. Bolan: The member says kiddie cars. The minister might as well do something very constructive with this amendment instead of bringing in something silly like this. As I say, I want some answers—some definite answers—about insurance, about this menace on the highways.

Here's something else for the minister to consider. Is it an offence to drive a bicycle on a sidewalk? It is an offence to drive a motor vehicle on a sidewalk. But what about a bicycle on a sidewalk? What about the kid who cannot pay the fine when he is hauled into court? What about the point system? What is the minister going to do about that? While he does not have a licence, he still is liable to be convicted for the same offences as I would be for breaching the rules of the road; yet that eight-year-old child is not subject to the same sanctions as I am in that, once 15 points are taken off, I lose my privileges to ride a bike.

As I say, perhaps we could have some answers on this.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I am shocked that the member for Nipissing would offer such an argument. I have always had a high regard for him, and we have had some good discussions on safety in estimates in previous years, but I am absolutely flabbergasted at the argument he puts forward.

I doubt very much that any member in the House realized that at the present time, without this amendment, the rules of the road do not apply to someone riding a bicycle. That has been a situation we have run into in the Supreme Court, apparently, where the judge criticized the draftsmanship of the previous section for not properly defining a driver to include the driver of a bicycle.

As a matter of fact, I have to assure the honourable member that we do not need an amendment; tricycles are included in this.

Mr. Bolan: Then it applies to three-year-olds. That's brilliant.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think the amendment is self-explanatory—the honourable member may agree; I certainly disagree with his viewpoint in that someone riding a bicycle, whether eight-years-old or 18 or 80, should have to obey a stop light and should not be able to ride carelessly through a stop sign or a stop light, creating an accident and causing an injury to or the death of some innocent individual who is trying to swerve to miss that bicycle careening across the intersection as the honourable member said.

If he, as a responsible legislator, cannot understand the need for this amendment, then I regret that I have been unable to convince him, but I hope I have.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to associate myself with the remarks made by the member for Nipissing, but I do have a question for the minister that relates to this matter of bicycles.

I fully support the amendment as it is brought forward. I think anything that can be done to stop cyclists ignoring red lights, ignoring stop signs, riding down both sides of the street at the same time, is a move in the right direction.

It has been brought to my attention that a situation exists where a person who is riding a bicycle and who holds a driver's licence may be treated by the courts in a manner that is different from the way in which they treat a person who commits an offence while riding a bicycle but who does not hold a driver's licence. I wonder whether the minister could comment on whether there is a problem if there is a rule if you are convicted of an offence and you happen to be a driver holding a licence you don't need for riding a bicycle.

I think that's a problem and I'd be interested in the minister's response.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, if it is a problem I haven't heard about it.

Mr. Warner: You have now.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't see why the court would deal any differently with the two individuals. I suppose if a person was an impaired driver of a bicycle he could have his licence suspended, but then he doesn't need it, so it's pointless.

Mr. Chairman: Is this on section 1?

Mr. Roy: Yes. I've tried to glance briefly at this amendment and look at the Highway Traffic Act and see some of the implications of the amendments. I have to say to the minister that for a responsible minister who's bringing forward legislation, it seems to me you're sloughing off reasonable and very important questions out of hand.

I think there are points raised by my colleague that have some merit. Just because a judge has ruled your legislation does not include a bicycle driver, you make a wholesale amendment in the act by just taking out the word "motor" from motor vehicle. It is a pretty simplistic thing.

I share the concerns expressed by the member for Nipissing and I share the concern expressed by the member for Wentworth. I think the minister has some responsibility to respond to questions.

Every time we pass legislation in this House, as confident as we all are the legislation makes sense, it's logical, and there are no holes in it, by the time it gets out there and is interpreted by the courts inevitably we run into some problems.

If we're legislating in an area where we have concerns at this stage of the game, where we have concerns about the effects of the legislation, it seems to me the minister has some responsibility to say, "We're proceeding in this fashion because there should be no concern." As my colleague from Nipissing has said, is this going to apply to people? It applies, the minister has said, to tricycles. That's obvious from the definition in the act. Is that what we want this legislation to do? Is that the standard of care we're going to have in this legislation?

Mr. Bolan: Standard of care for a three-year-old kid. That's bright.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I am just looking at some of the implications. For instance, if I read section 147 of the act which says about liability, "the owner of a vehicle shall incur the penalties provided for any contravention of this act," here we have a situation where the owner of the vehicle could be a parent, and it could involve a young person who could incur certain of the penalties. The implications are such.

I look at section 140 of the act, which deals with the duty of a person in charge of a vehicle in case of an accident. It says: "Where an accident occurs on a highway, every person in charge of a vehicle or car of an electric railway . . ." Would that include the young driver? Would the young driver of a tricycle or a bicycle have this type of duty on him? My concern is that I think the minister has some duty to at least tell us that as a responsible minister he has no concern by just changing the word "motor." Surely we're not after the eight-year-old.

I could see circumstances where some of these people who don't respect the rules of the road were wheeling around on a 10-speed bike—

Hon. Mr. Snow: What about a five-speed?

Mr. Roy: —and I could see some concern if we're talking about adults. Can the minister give us a guarantee that this legislation, for instance, follows normal legislation we pass?

We pass legislation that usually imposes penalties on adults, not on children. It seems to me the points raised have some merit. I haven't sat down long enough to see the contradictions in the amendment with some of the other sections of the act. Hopefully, most of the sections talk about drivers' responsibilities that refer to motor vehicles and not only vehicles. But in this case I'm suggesting you haven't said anything here this afternoon which responds to the questions raised by some of my colleagues; it seems to me you have a duty to do that.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Chairman, I'm glad someone has started to make some serious arguments. As the minister responsible for this act and based on all the information I have available to me, I have to say I have no doubts whatsoever in bringing forward this amendment.

The honourable member, who is a lot more familiar with the courts than I am, or ever will be, should know that when legislation is challenged in the courts, when there are found to be imperfections, it should be corrected. A Supreme Court judge has found that a biker was guilty of an offence under the act, despite the concern the judge expressed with the definition. The court has ruled that a bicyclist is bound by the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Worton: He is bound already.

Hon. Mr. Snow: A bicyclist or a tricyclist is bound already. I don't know how you separate that in this legislation. I would not be in favour of excepting anyone under the age of 16, 18, 21 or 10 from the rules of the road. They're covered now under the act. The act applies, despite the definition. But I'm convinced the definition should be corrected to eliminate the necessity of more of these cases going to the Supreme Court or somewhere else, for example.

Mr. Worton: As an example, that guy out west.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm not one who wants to lay charges. I think the police are very responsible in dealing with this type of situation. I don't foresee the police going out arresting eight-year-old children who may not make a perfect right turn, as the member for Nipissing suggested. But if a 20- or 30-year-old adult rides his bicycle through a red light, through a stop walk or through a stop street, I think then the law should be clear so that everyone can understand it to deal with that type of an offence.

Mr. Warner: I have what I think is a pretty straightforward question following up on what the minister mentioned.

I'm the driver of a bicycle; I go through a traffic light and I'm stopped by the police. Is it possible that if I am also the holder of a driver's licence I may lose demerit points against my driver's licence for having committed the offence of driving my bicycle through a traffic light?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It may sound silly, but unfortunately I don't have an answer for the member. My officials are checking the act. I can't tell you exactly. It's a good question.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Minister, I believe the bill you have in front of us today with the amendment makes possible the situation I have described. At some point when we return to this—obviously not today before supper—if we could get an answer to that question, I would appreciate it.

[5:45]

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have part of an answer here anyway. Under section 33 of the act, it says: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for a demerit point system for drivers of motor vehicles."

Mr. Bolan: That's a bike.

Mr. Warner: No.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No. That is the driving of a motor vehicle. We are saying that a driver is the driver of a vehicle, not necessarily a motor vehicle. The demerit point system applies only to the driver of a motor vehicle.

Mr. Nixon: That's true. You've got to extend that point system beyond 15 without delay.

Mr. Bolan: The minister referred to the fact that if a police officer were to stop a child who is operating his bicycle in contravention of the act, he would not expect him to come down with full force as if it were someone who is 25 or 30 years old.

Frankly, I am appalled that a minister of the crown makes a statement where he invites somebody to supplant the rule of law by the rule of man. That is precisely what he invites. I can assure him that it is a sad commentary in the province of Ontario today when ministers of the crown are advocating that the rule of man take over from the rule of law. There is a distinction. It has been there for many years and there is a reason for it. With the rule of law, one knows that it applies to everybody and that is not left up to the individual police officer on the street or an individual minister of the crown to say when, on whom and where will charges be laid.

Hon. Mr. Snow: A terrible, horrendous finger is being pointed at me as if I am the green monster from Loch Lomond or something because I have suggested that I did not feel a police officer would not deal in some reasonable way, depending on the offence.

Mr. Riddell: You're just a little green giant.

Mr. Roy: Why don't you admit you hate mothers and babies?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to ask the honourable member, has he never been given a warning by a police officer?

Mr. Bolan: That's not the point. If the minister is concerned about it, put it in the act.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not prepared to put in the act that any age limit is exempt from breaking the law. In a Highway Traffic Act offence, whether the police officer deals responsibly with the juvenile or not, I have enough faith in the court to deal responsibly with the juvenile.

Mr. Philip: I always believe that legislation should be relevant to the people using it. In the interest of science and in the interest perhaps of the minister's enjoyment of his dinner, I have just completed a survey of three bicycle riders, all of whom are pages in the House. They all agree with the minister and all disagree with the member for Nipissing.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This will be known as the great bicycle debate.

Mr. Roy: Let me point out to the minister the concern that the member for Nipissing and I have about this section.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Don't help him out. Speak for yourself.

Mr. Roy: Section 152 of the act says: "Every person who contravenes any provision of this act or any regulation is guilty of an offence on summary conviction and where the penalty for the contravention is not otherwise provided for herein is liable to a fine of not less than $20 and not more than $100."

That is the penalty section and that is the concern we have.

As I understand the law prior to this amendment, the young bicycle driver we are talking about was exempt because he was not driving what was defined as a vehicle, namely, a motor vehicle. Therefore, it did not include a bicycle.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He is not exempt. The court has ruled that he is not exempt.

Mr. Roy: It has ruled that he is not exempt? Then why do we need the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Snow: May I have the floor, Mr. Chairman? I have explained, I think about four times during the last 15 minutes, that the court has ruled that the driver of a bicycle is subject to the regulations of the Highway Traffic Act. The court also in their decision, I am told, stated that the wording of the definition of the driver was ambiguous and that it should be changed. While bringing in other, important amendments to the act, it was thought that we should clarify the definition of a driver and that's what we are doing.

The penalty section, I am told according to the act, has no relevance to a juvenile under 16. A juvenile under 16 goes to juvenile court and does not go to the court that would normally handle these cases.

Mr. Roy: We knew that the Juvenile Delinquency Act handled that, but in fact, this amendment of the minister's makes it very clear that a vehicle would include anything from a tricycle right on up so that—

Hon. Mr. Snow: The amendment doesn't do that.

Mr. Warner: It might even be a lawn mower!

Mr. Roy: The amendment sure makes it clear. If a five-year-old child was brought forward as a driver of a vehicle and I had looked at the previous definition and it talked about a driver being the driver of a motor vehicle, I would have had doubts that a tricycle was included. I don't know how the judge concluded otherwise; I haven't read that decision. But it's certainly clear now that vehicle includes everything from a tricycle right on up and, under those circumstances, I think the implications are such that the concerns as expressed by my colleague and I are certainly relevant.

This amendment makes it clear. I must admit to the minister I was confused; I thought he was bringing in the amendment because some judicial interpretation of the section had left it up in the air as to whether it was clear or not, but apparently the judge ruled the minister's way. Why the amendment was necessary under those circumstances I don't really know.

Some of my colleagues may appear to be overly cautious or at times even ridiculous, but it's been my experience in this House, in my limited time here, that one can't be overly cautious when talking about legislation. As cautious as we are and as concerned as we are, there are still going to be problems along the way and I suggest to the minister that this amendment is going to be of concern. Not only on the penalty aspect, but on the insurance aspects of highway traffic law.

Mr. Lawlor: Listening to the debate, I am beginning to doubt whether the minister has really thought this thing through. The wide definition of using muscular power in order to propel a vehicle, and infants in swaddling clothes being convicted in some court with respect to making an improper left turn, it seems to me boggles the mind a bit.

Maybe the minister is just a little overweening in his attempt to meet a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which is enormously impressive, I am sure, particularly to people in his position. He helped to bring onerous measures to bear upon all the multiple, infantile brains of the province, and all of the children. My Lord, I mean he just doesn't fool around, does he? When he brings in legislation he covers the better part of the universe.

I just don't think the minister knows what he is doing. Isn't it true what members are saying? The minister is expected to meet the objections that are raised. He can't just shrug his shoulders over there, even if he is sitting down, and escape the implications. Standing here and hearing the debate I wish I had spent a little more time studying the legislation. I am sure a strong case and a sensible case could be made—so sensible that it might even convince the minister himself—that in this clause the word "motor" bloody well should have been left in there and not the alteration he is making at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I see it, I guess the issue we are trying to deal with is whether we should make it plain in the act that the driver of a bicycle is responsible for his actions and is subject to the provisions of the Highway Traffic Act. That is the issue. A doubt has been raised as to whether he is. The court has ruled that he is. We are trying to simplify and clarify the wording of the act by removing the word "motor".

If the opposition wants to remove that section of the act, I suggest it moves an amendment to remove it. Then it'll be on their heads not on mine.

Interjections.

Mr. Cunningham: I wonder if I can speak on this. We have spent the last half hour on it and we are not really getting anywhere. I am concerned about the points that have been raised by some of my colleagues. If I could respectfully submit, notwithstanding what a learned judge has decided, the basis of which I am somewhat unclear about myself, what would be an effective solution to this particular problem would be a more effective and clear definition of what the minister means by a bicycle. With respect, the suggestions made by my colleague from Nipissing would be in order. Possibly the ministry's legal department might give some consideration to looking at some other jurisdiction and seeking a definition of a geared bicycle, et cetera.

While we may be well intentioned here—and I appreciate the minister's concerns, especially insofar as several people have been killed by 10-speed bicycles that have been breaking the law or going at excessive speeds

—I think it's incumbent upon us as legislators to make sure that when this law leaves the chamber it is as perfect as it possibly can be. Some of the hypothetical situations that have been described notwithstanding kiddie car stories, et cetera, as the member for Lakeshore suggested, may come back to haunt us.

If we could prevail upon the minister, because we are not going to get through this bill at this particular point in time, when we resume discussion on this bill, possibly he might have a more clear and more effective definition of what is meant by a bicycle. It's quite obvious to me that that is the intention of his amendment. At that point in time, I am sure we could possibly see that this particular section of the act is passed.

Mr. Philip: With respect to the Liberal critic, I cannot find any definition of bicycle in the act, but there is a definition of vehicle. Maybe there is some addition or modification to that definition which the minister's staff may want to look at.

Mr. Roy: As my colleague from Wentworth North just mentioned to me, a skateboard would be included under the definition of vehicle right now. It would, if one looks at this definition, because it includes any vehicle propelled or driven by any kind of power, including muscular power. Let me propose a ridiculous situation. I am sure that's not what the minister intends with the act. As I read section 140 of the act, it says: "Anyone in charge of a vehicle must stop, remain at the scene of an accident, render all possible assistance and upon request give in writing his name and address" and everything else. Anyone who contravenes that is subject to a maximum fine of $100 or jail. Here comes a fellow on a skateboard. He is travelling on a highway, as they often do, and is involved in an accident. Is this the kid the minister wants to be subject to such provisions?

Mr. Bolan: You are out to get him.

Mr. Roy: I am suggesting he would be. That's my concern and the concern of my colleagues in the Legislature. Don't leave it up to the discretion of the police. The minister says he has a lot of faith in the police and in the law enforcement agency. All we need is one ridiculous situation like that to make not only the minister but all of us look like asses.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have just been handed a note to say that there has been a charge laid against a person riding a skateboard.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Snow, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

The House resumed at 8:02 p.m.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved second reading of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not have any statement?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I did give a statement when I introduced this bill. It's straightforward, and I think, members will understand the import of it. It changes section 505 of the Municipal Act, which was put in to allow a phasing-in of market value reassessment to occur in an area of the province.

It has been looked upon as a vehicle to allow a municipality to phase in, if it has had a section 86 reassessment. Upon close scrutiny it does not lend itself to the desires and wishes of municipalities that have had a section 86 reassessment and may wish to bring in a bylaw to allow phasing-in. It does not have the flexibility to allow that; therefore, we are suggesting an amended version which will have that flexibility.

For those who have not had an opportunity to read the bill, perhaps I could run quickly through some of the distinct changes of this section from the section at present in the Municipal Act. First of all, it removes the responsibility of the minister to give his consent for a municipality to have a phase-in bylaw. Next, it removes the requirement, if a bylaw is to be enacted, that it must be for all the classes of property. It allows a municipality in the bylaw to define the classes of properties—for example, single-family residential, small business, et cetera—where the phasing-in arrangements may occur. In other words, different classes of property may be treated differently under the bylaw; there may be different minimum figures. Although the minimum figures in this piece of legislation are $50 or 10 per cent of the preceding year's taxes on that property, whichever is greater, the municipality may change those amounts and increase them as it wishes in its bylaw. In other words, there is a greater degree of flexibility as to the kind of phasing-in bylaw that may occur.

Also under this amendment the municipality may finance the phasing-in procedure in one of two ways. It may phase in those whose taxes will go up because of the reassessment by limiting the decreases of those whose taxes would go down so they would phase in over the same number of years as the increases in taxation. Or it may allow the decreases to go to their full level in the first year and phase in the increases of those who would pay more taxes, up to a limit of a five-year period, by assessing as a general levy over the whole municipality the amount necessitated by having a phasing-in mechanism.

There is also a provision in the bill which stipulates that at least 20 per cent of the amount of the preceding year must be reduced in each year in the phasing-in process. In other words, the bylaws passed by a municipality must provide that at the end of the five-year period the increase or the decrease—whichever plan the municipality is using—has completely taken place. In other words, if the taxes go up $1,000, at the end of the five-year period the property so affected will be paying in the sixth year the complete increase that the section 86 reassessment brought about.

The importance of that section, of course, is that it would prevent a municipality from completely forgiving an increase for a period of years or forgiving an increase in a very small way so that the problem was still there at the end of the phase-in period. Of course, that would completely obviate the whole section 86 reassessment program and the equities it was bringing to that municipality. In fact, that would suggest to me that if that's what a municipality wanted to do it would probably have been better advised not to get into a section 86 reassessment, or we might also say it could be shifting the responsibility to another council at some other time which would have the responsibility when the phase-in period ended.

The other section in this act is one we have removed from one of the other sections of the Municipal Act, from section 636a, which allows a municipality under special circumstances to reduce, refund or forgive the taxes for a variety of reasons under that section, also including at the present time reassessment. We have taken that reassessment provision out of section 636a of the Municipal Act and brought up into this act a provision that would allow a council by bylaw, under special circumstances for an individual property, to provide in a given year for a cancellation, refund or reduction of the taxes because of the increase attributable to reassessment that amount which exceeds $50.

The other point I could make is that this amendment makes it clear that business taxes are eligible for bylaws under this section. We believe they were under the original section 505, but some people who looked at the section interpreted it differently. This amendment makes it very clear that business taxes also can be treated in the same manner as the property tax in this section and are eligible for a phasing-in bylaw. That I think is the gist of this bill.

The principle of the bill is to allow a municipality, through a bylaw, to effect a phasing-in procedure for those taxes which have either gone up or gone down under a section 86 reassessment. There have been 14 such reassessments in this last year.

The city of Hamilton, which had a section 86 reassessment, is particularly anxious to bring in a phase-in bylaw. The quicker we can pass this bill the better it will be for Hamilton because they need the flexibility that will be afforded under this amended bill to carry out the phasing-in procedures which they have decided upon and which will be beneficial to the people of Hamilton.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to speak to Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act, which clearly deals with section 505 of that act.

I appreciate that the minister is anxious to have this bill passed. As I understand it, the city of Hamilton is losing about $6,300 a day by the delay in sending out its tax notices and thereby receiving money from its various property owners. In other words, they have to borrow this amount of money and pay interest on those funds.

Because we appreciate the urgency of the matter and agree with the principle of Bill 115 we will support it, but not without first indicating that an amendment will be made when we get into committee of the whole House.

I appreciate the fact we have before us enabling legislation. In other words Hamilton or any other municipality may or may not adopt it. Thirteen—the minister now says 14, maybe Hamilton is the 14th municipality.

Fourteen municipalities are taking advantage of the application of section 86 of the Assessment Act which permits them to equalize assessments within classes of property owners. Six of those 14 municipalities are in my own region of Waterloo.

I agree that where major discrepancies exist, as they have in Cambridge, Kitchener, Hamilton, and other municipalities, a cognizance should be taken and remedies applied. These are what the present Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs obviously are trying to do. But they are not enough. What we now need are amendments to section 505 of the Municipal Act, and some of these amendments the minister has alluded to.

Until now, for instance, in order to have a change in assessment and be able to phase in these things a municipality had to seek permission from the minister responsible. We're pleased to see that greater autonomy is being given to the municipalities. In other words, the minister is not only saying he intends to give greater autonomy to municipalities but in fact is doing so, as reflected in this bill by deletion of the section under which municipalities had to apply to the minister to get permission to apply section 505.

If increases are more than $50 they must be subsidized and the money may be obtained from the same class of property owners or from general revenue. Municipalities may even raise the taxes by more than $50 or the $50 limit or a higher figure. This increase may only qualify for assistance if it exceeds 10 per cent of the total amount. I cannot argue or disagree with this particular provision.

We particularly feel, however, that the five-year provision, which permits municipalities only five years in which to phase it in, is too short. I don't want to argue with the fact many municipalities may want to phase it in over a one, two or three-year period. I don't know any that has asked for anything beyond five years, but we on this side of the House, believe municipalities should have the prerogative of phasing in those increases or decreases, over a longer period than five years if they wish. We are suggesting this period be 10 years. Obviously, at some time in the future municipalities will take advantage of it if this House concurs with that amendment. Municipalities will take advantage of that particular section I'm sure.

As I indicated at the outset of my remarks, we will be supporting this bill in principle.

Hopefully, we'll get the concurrence and support of the House in placing before it the amendment I will be introducing in committee of the whole House.

Mr. Isaacs: It's a sad day when I rise to speak on this bill.

Mr. Pope: Oh, play the fiddle.

Mr. Isaacs: The whole matter of property tax reform has been before us for 10 years and we've come to this meagre bill which allows municipalities some very limited provisions to phase in a reassessment program. It is a parody of what reassessment should be all about, and a parody of what a tax system should be all about.

With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to remind the minister of just two sentences that were spoken in November of last year in this House by the former occupant of this seat—I guess he didn't occupy this seat, he occupied a seat down there, but my predecessor representing the riding of Wentworth.

Mr. Foulds: A fine representative he was, if I may say so.

Mr. Isaacs: He certainly was. That member, in a debate on November 2, 1978 said, and I quote:

"We are having, even now, a transfer of responsibility and in some measure, I suppose, a changing of the whole property tax system. The unfortunate part is that it is no more equitable when it finishes than when it was started."

That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly the situation in which we find ourselves today. We have a tax system which is no more equitable now for residents of the city of Hamilton, or for 13 other municipalities, than it was when the whole business of section 86 reassessments were started under the leadership, the guidance if you like, of this government.

I know the minister is very sensitive about whether it was a municipal decision or whether it was a government decision to permit this to happen. I don't intend to go through the whole background of the promises the government has made with regard to property tax reform. They go way beyond the Blair commission. They go back way beyond the white paper. They go back way beyond the technical committees that have studied and studied this thing.

I want to remind the minister that his predecessor, the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. McKeough, promised many times that we would see an end to the joke we have now and a beginning to some kind of real property tax reform we could address ourselves to and express our views about.

The consultation the minister indicated happened in regard to section 86 reassessment and with regard to the provisions before us in the bill tonight, I also believe to be a travesty of the system.

I want to remind the minister that it's not that long ago that I was a council member in a municipality that was also approached by representatives of the Ministry of Revenue. Those representatives consulted with the council of the town of Stoney Creek concerning a section 86 reassessment in that municipality. I suspect that consultation was very similar to the consultation that took place in the city of Hamilton when they opted for a section 86 reassessment.

I want to tell the minister that that is not consultation. To take just one example, the town of Stoney Creek has a situation where there are two different assessment bases because it was formed by the merger of two municipalities. When, as a member of that council, I asked the representatives of the Ministry of Revenue what the impact would be on the property taxpayers of the two halves of the municipality, they told me they could not and would not give me that information until the council had voted for a section 86 reassessment, a vote that is irrevocable. I want to suggest to the minister that to pretend that consultation takes place and to pretend that local councils know what they are doing when they get themselves into this situation is just not the way it is.

To return more specifically to the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, which I am sure you'd be happy to have me do, there is a suggestion from the minister that it permits autonomy, or at least some degree of autonomy, to the municipalities to deal with the problems that have been brought about by a section 86 reassessment. Those problems are very serious. We have a situation in the city of Hamilton where the assessment on a multiple-family home as a percentage of market value is nearly double the assessment on a single-family home as a percentage of the same market value. To pretend that what we have has anything to do with market value assessment is really just not fair to the taxpayers of that city or of any other municipality that is involved in this program.

I received from my colleague, the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie), a letter which he had received from one of his constituents, a Mr. Reizgys. In that letter the constituent writes: "I am in strong opposition to the proposal in its present form now before Hamilton city council to phase in equalized assessment. It discriminates against the less fortunate living in multiple dwellings who cannot afford single-family homes or higher rents, by giving the full benefit of any reduction to single-family homes and duplexes immediately, while reductions on multiple-unit residences larger than duplexes, on which taxes went down more than 20 per cent, are to be phased in and, undoubtedly, would result in unfair rents to tenants."

That's the situation we have for just one class of property dwellers in the city of Hamilton. The same thing applies in slightly different ways to residents and occupants in all classes of property. Phase-in is the only way to go to get us out of the mess we're in in the short term. But I would hope that the minister—and he is a relatively new minister in a portfolio that holds some promise—will give us a commitment tonight that proper property tax reform will see the light of day and will be implemented in this province before he leaves his present post as minister, because I really think it's that important, and he might not have too much time left.

Mr. Nixon: Time is running out.

Mr. Isaacs: Judging by the votes in Wentworth riding not too long ago in that part of the riding that is most seriously affected by property tax assessment, his party and his government don't have too much support for the things they are doing.

The joke that is before us to permit municipalities to deal with this situation as they see fit really can't be let stand as it is. We have in this bill a detailed proposal as to how a municipality should phase in property tax problems that are caused by section 86 reassessments. The minister may say, and probably will say, there is flexibility in the bill. In fact, by the way the guidelines are laid down and by the way the percentages are specified, particularly in the latter part of the bill, we are telling municipalities what they should do about phase-in, and yet the government is not providing them with any financial assistance to get them over this very difficult period.

The legalese, the verbiage contained in this bill to me is incredible. I particularly draw members' attention to paragraph (b) of subsection (4) in section 1 of the bill. If the general public were to read that and try to interpret what is going on—"greater and lesser percentages or both," et cetera—it really is tying down municipalities in a way I find totally unacceptable.

Because the city of Hamilton needs these provisions desperately, as the minister and my colleague the member for Waterloo North

(Mr. Epp) have indicated, we are going to support the bill on second reading. But the bill is not specifically for the city of Hamilton in 1979. It is a general bill which may remain on the books for a long time to come. If the Ministry of Revenue continues to encourage, directly or indirectly, municipalities to involve themselves in this mess, then we need a bill which doesn't just deal with the Hamilton situation but which deals with situations that may arise a long time in the future.

We in this party believe in municipal autonomy. We believe there are certain things local government should be involved in and certain things the provincial government should be involved in. This bill blurs that distinction quite incredibly. Therefore in committee stage we are going to be moving amendments which remove the strictures this bill places on municipalities. They will say to municipalities in the clearest possible language: "Section 86 is your responsibility and phase-in of section 86 problems is your responsibility, go about it however you like." Those four amendments I have already transmitted to the minister. In a sense they form a package, though any one of them could stand by itself.

While we will support the bill on second reading and while we will take a good look at it during committee stage, we want to assure the minister now that because of the long-term implications of this bill, because it ties down municipalities in a way we find totally unacceptable, our support of this bill on third reading will be conditional on passage of our amendments at committee stage.

We are not at all happy to be here this evening dealing with this matter. We are not at all happy the tax problems in Ontario have degenerated to this kind of thing. In addition to agreeing with our amendment, we hope we will get a commitment from the minister tonight that the phase-in programs that are implemented now by the city of Hamilton as a result of this bill, and perhaps by other municipalities, are only a temporary thing. We hope he will give a commitment that all municipalities can be promised that tax reform will be a very high priority for his ministry, and for the ministry of his colleague the Minister of Revenue, and that we can get in place a tax system for the property taxpayers in Ontario that is equitable, fair and long standing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: I am very glad the honourable member for Wentworth expressed his views on this bill, since I recall participating in some minor degree in the by-election campaign that resulted in his election.

Mr. Cooke: Your work produced this result.

Mr. Nixon: One can describe his comments with any adjective one chooses, however we have gone through the congratulations to the honourable member.

[8:30]

I do recall that the matter he referred to in his remarks just concluded were very much an issue in the by-election. The matter was raised here in the House and on the hustings in Wentworth about the commercial premises on Centennial Parkway. Some of the more glaring statistics were brought to the attention of the Minister of Revenue at the time, but not to that of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. They were certainly startling, the results of these changes would mean. I think it was the well-known Volkswagen dealer in the area who ended up by paying the largest commercial assessment for a car dealership in Canada. It was far larger, for example, than the taxes paid by a similar dealership here in Metropolitan Toronto, which brings it home to the honourable minister. I sometimes think that his interest and purview doesn't extend much beyond the interests of the Metropolitan chairman. That may be incorrect, but his lackadaisical approach to the so-called intergovernmental problems of the municipalities sometimes makes me wonder.

However, my colleague, the member for Waterloo North, has indicated that we will support the bill in principle. He indicated that we to have an amendment, which we hope will be accepted by the House, which in many specific ways will even ease the transition more than the amendment put forward by the minister. As a matter of fact, it will just double the easing; but we'll get to that when we're in committee.

I do believe that it is certainly an important improvement that the decision is left to the municipalities whether or not to avail themselves of the usefulness of this amendment. I think that it should be so, rather than on application to the minister. I believe the decision should be with the municipality.

I was interested in how the stretch-out of the change would be paid for. Obviously, if it's going to be paid for locally, which I believe it will be and in fact must be, then paying for this stretch-out is simply going to mean an increase in the overall taxes of all the taxpayers. Something that concerns me under the provisions of this bill, although I haven't discussed it in detail with my colleague who is our official spokesman in this connection, is that the municipality may in its wisdom allocate the additional costs on one class of taxpayer rather than on another.

I suppose if we have confidence in the wisdom of the elected municipal officials—which of course we do, I'm sure everybody does—then I suppose the justification for that change lies in that confidence.

There is a matter that perhaps might be raised in committee, but I thought that I should raise it now. The bill will apply to all municipalities that avail themselves of a section 86 rationalization and not just Hamilton. There is a very progressive municipality in my constituency, the township of Burford, which has been undergoing a section 86 reassessment. I think it has been reasonably successful, so much so, that some rural municipalities and some mixed urban-rural municipalities in the area surrounding Burford have been watching with a great deal of interest as to how the changing taxes will be applied in Burford.

In one instance, there is a matter I brought to the attention of the minister by letter. Under the postal system administered by Joe Clark it probably hasn't reached him yet.

Mr. Ashe: It will get better soon.

Mr. Nixon: I thought I would mention it and I'm the first to mention it. It may be mentioned during, let's say, the next 14 months until we return to normalcy.

I did want to indicate that when some of these municipalities are examining the section 86 alternatives, they feel they are not in possession of all of the facts that would assist them in making that decision. I am far from an expert in this, as well as many other subjects, but I am told that an application for section 86 reassessment should be in the hands of the ministry by the end of June for the upcoming round of reassessment. The officials in some of these municipalities, who are observing with interest the example established in the municipality of Burford, are saying that the ministry through its computer capability is prepared to deliver to these municipalities new taxation equalization factors, particularly in regionalized areas such as the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk. Unfortunately, this additional information is not available until July.

It is very difficult to communicate the view of the local council by the end of June on a decision which in many respects is based on information which would not normally be available until the following month.

I say again, that I am anything but a professional in these matters. It really is more esoteric than neurosurgery or even the finer points of the law—and we have an expert in both those areas in one large corporate body who, as he indicates with his upraised hands, is sterile in all respects.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I can certainly help you get that way in a hurry.

Mr. Nixon: Not all respects, not all respects.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: An easy little operation.

Mr. Nixon: I thought it would probably be a suitable time, with your concurrence Mr. Speaker, to bring this small problem, this anomaly, to the attention of the minister. Certainly the principle, the intent of this bill, is to make the section 86 changes as palatable to the local taxpayers as possible. It would be a small extension of this principle, in my view, for the minister to at least give consideration to the problem I have tried to express to him. Along with my colleague who has spoken, and the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs), I think that the whole matter of municipal tax reform and rationalization has been chaotic since assessment was brought under the control of the provincial authorities back in 1971. We expressed our substantial opposition to that concept at the time, and I would say to you that our predictions, which I am sure the minister will recall, have been certainly borne out in the events of the subsequent years. But I agree this bill goes only a very small step toward providing a very mild amelioration to the taxpayers who are subjected to the rather wrenching changes that the application of section 86 imposed upon them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you can help me. After listening to the previous speech, which stretched from the post office to neurosurgery, I wonder if it would be in order to speak about property taxes and property tax reform in Hamilton.

Mr. Nixon: Are you criticizing the Speaker in his role of keeping the order of his House?

Mr. M. N. Davison: No, no; I just thought it was a remarkable contribution to the debate.

The need for this kind of legislation is another fine reason and another example of why the Conservatives don't have a single seat in the Hamilton-Wentworth area, and let me tell you—

Mr. Nixon: Your presence will probably correct that in the future.

Mr. M. N. Davison:—that Bill 115 is not going to sweep them to power in Hamilton Centre. But that is okay, don't worry, the Liberal position is twice as bad, going from five years to 10 years.

The question that occurs to one in looking at this bill is how on earth did we ever get here. The government has been talking about property tax reform since at least 1967 in the current round; and look at the studies, look at the money they have spent on it. To name just a few of them, for the edification of people who may one day read this debate, I am sure all members recall the report of the Ontario committee on taxation, 1967, the Smith committee; the report of the select committee of the Legislature on the report of the Ontario committee on taxation, 1968, the White committee; the report of the committee on farm assessment and taxation, 1969; the report of the committee on golf course assessment and taxation, 1972; and the report of an intergovernmental working group on real property tax exemptions, 1974; not to mention the most recent report of the commission on the reform of property taxation in Ontario. The government has studied it and studied it and studied it, and still we have come to this.

In every election since the early 1960s, and no doubt a long time before that, members of this House have talked about the need for property tax reform. In every municipal election I can remember, politicians of all stripes have talked about the need for property tax reform, and still the government fuddles about. It has studied it and restudied it; and then has postponed it and forced situations like the one it is trying to correct, or has to try to correct this evening with this bill. Ever since I've been in this House, and longer, the government has failed, on the question of property tax reform, to accept any new ideas, and the minister has lacked initiative of his own.

The member for Wentworth talked about the former member from that fine riding. I can recall, I think it was in November of last year, when Ian Deans put forward a private member's resolution in this House that would have brought about some kind of real property tax reform in Ontario. What happened? The government members blocked it from coming to a vote so we in the Legislature could express our will on that issue.

In this particular case of the problem we are having in Hamilton, the government has tried to play both sides of the issue. The Premier (Mr. Davis) was sent off to Hamilton at the end of March, and he went on about his willingness to agree to a phase-in if only the city of Hamilton would come, cap in hand, to the provincial government. It was a phase-in without any provincial money. The city came, and then we waited and waited. Every Wednesday afternoon the citizens of Hamilton and the politicians in Hamilton sat with their ear to the radio to find out whether or not the cabinet had finally decided to let the city bring in some sort of phase-in program. Finally, they are getting Bill 115.

The problem we have in Hamilton is a very real problem; the solution the government has put forward is, frankly, anything but real. It is at best only temporary. The bill we have before us, Bill 115, must be amended tonight if it is going to deal with the problems, particularly those in Hamilton. We are going to support it because we want to see some sort of solution over the short term; ideally the best kind of solution we can find over the short term for those problems in Hamilton. With that in mind and for purposes of debate so the New Democratic Party can propose amendments that will patch this up as best we can, we are going to be supporting it so we can get into committee.

The government, though, must understand that no matter what the results of the debate and vote tonight, this issue is not going to go away. It is not going to disappear in Hamilton or in any other community in this province. The government must bring itself to institute some sort of rational property tax reform system. The government's course is nothing short of foolhardy, and I suggest to the minister it is one he is going to have to alter in the near future.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to speak on the principle of this bill, I guess largely to echo what was said by the member for Wentworth: that this bill in itself is rather an innocuous bill; it is a bill which will slightly improve the situation which exists now. Looking at it in the whole perspective of what has taken place in the last 10 years in the assessment field and the property tax field, it is quite frankly a pitiful bill. It is a testimony, I say, to a government that has been wholly inept in this area. In fact I would go even a little further; it is a testimony to a government that has to some degree been cowardly in proceeding with necessary tax reform in this province.

In fact, this bill is almost the final link in the complete cycle. Back in 1969, when the then Treasurer—or Municipal Affairs Minister at it was at that time—the honourable Darcy McKeough, introduced the Assessment Act that was going to bring in market value assessment and total tax reform, he said it was part of the package that was going to provide equality in taxation in this province.

I would like to quote what Darcy McKeough said when he introduced that bill away back on June 25, 1969: "This particular bill constitutes the most significant revision of the Assessment Act since 1904 . . . The revised Assessment Act is one of the two major steps that are essential in order to achieve a sound and thorough reform of assessment in Ontario. The other step is the transfer of the assessment function from the municipalities to the province, a changeover that is due to go into full effect next January 1. Together, these two actions are designed to establish the cornerstone of the reform of our system and structure of local government."

Ten years later the tax reform has been killed in total, or almost in total—I would say "in total" is not an unfair terminology. Under this bill and under the bill we had last fall, even the responsibility for the assessment system—perhaps we could put it another way and say the blame for it—is being turned back to the municipalities.

There is no question that there has been something of a struggle between the municipalities and the Ontario government with regard to responsibility for the assessment program. Changes in assessment have never been popular. When the government said it was taking over the assessment system in 1969, the majority of the municipalities and municipal associations said they were in support of that—not all of them; some of them had some regrets—because they could see that they were moving some of the responsibility and the blame on to the provincial government. They recalled reassessment programs that had taken place in their counties and municipalities and had been terribly unpopular. Half the people or the two thirds of the people who get a reduction think that's great, but the one third or the one half who get an increase make a lot of noise about it and are very unhappy; it's a rather unpopular thing to do.

The majority of municipalities were rather happy to see that go to the province. The province, under the Hon. Darcy McKeough, took that on with some enthusiasm. But that enthusiasm waned and, of course, the announcement was made last year that it would be abandoned. The municipalities were very unhappy about that at that time, and rightly so, because reforms were needed and proposals were being made for those reforms. Now they are finding that not only are no major tax reforms being made in the assessment system, but the blame is also being shifted back to them.

Under this bill the municipalities are going to have the responsibility of determining whether or not the assessment changes and the tax changes are going to be phased in. But the bill we had last fall determined, as does the policy of the government, that the municipality must request this or there are no changes. The total responsibility has been shifted back to the municipality. If changes are made in the assessment system now, they are only made at the request of the local municipality. Regardless of the injustices that there may be, the changes are made at the request of the local municipality and the phasing-in that goes along with it has to be made at the request of the local municipality.

I say to the government that the main reason this has been done is for political expedience; it gets the blame off the government. But it doesn't solve the basic problem with regard to assessment and the injustices that remain. I may say that this party had some courage last fall in proposing to the government that it should proceed with the tax reform system. We expressed a willingness to work that out with the government, but the government didn't have the courage—

Hon. Mr. Wells: After you knew for sure we wouldn't go ahead.

Mr. Swart: We proposed that when the government was still vacillating last fall. The minister hadn't told us at that time he was abandoning it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What's your position today, Mel?

Mr. Swart: We will support this bill as a Band-Aid approach to do something to heal the system we have at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And you have the solution.

Mr. Swart: But to us it is a poor, weak and cowardly alternative to the kind of tax reform we need in this province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have the solution?

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to this amendment to the Municipal Act and Bill 115.

I noted in the explanatory notes of the act this will put some of the onus on the municipalities to set their own tax rate as it relates to re-evaluation of property tax if they apply section 86 of the Assessment Act.

I remember well that when section 86 was discussed here last year I said there would be a number of difficulties that would arise in a municipality that was applying section 86 of the Assessment Act. I said the minister at the time would have to bring in other amendments to other acts to reduce the large increase in taxes on certain properties that would have increased substantially through section 86 of the Assessment Act.

I can well recall the position put forward, not only by myself but by other members, that the government is at fault for not bringing forth market value reassessment in the province much earlier. We had disapproved of the measures whereby the government had frozen the assessment for a period of almost 10 years.

I still don't think this is going to remove the inequities that exist within a municipality. Anybody who has had municipal experience will no doubt acknowledge the serious problems there are with any reassessment that takes places in a municipality. There are a certain number of inequities. It has been expressed in different reports, for instance the Smith report on taxation back in 1965, and it has continued right up until this day. There are inequities in assessment in municipalities and I don't think this legislation changing section 505 is actually going to remove any of the inequity that is there.

The municipality may say they'll spread it out over a period of five years so there will not be that serious an impact from the substantial increase in taxes that may amount to $100 or $150 a year. Perhaps it can be spread out over a period of 50 years. But a five-year period is when reassessment should take place again within a municipality to pick up new inequities that may come about. I'm sure anybody in the field of assessment, particularly an assessor, is well aware that this is what happens in municipality. The longer you delay reassessment in any municipality the worse the inequities become. I suggest to the minister that five years is a good average to take in this area for re-evaluation.

I don't know how one is going to get around the difficulties that are there. There is a serious problem and it will remain even after this amendment to the Municipal Act.

It's going to take courage by the government, or even by all members of the Legislature, to bring in some form of equity in assessment in Ontario. These half-baked measures I don't think are going to solve the problem.

I suggest we should get on with it in almost every municipality and bring forth some measures of market value assessment.

I don't suggest that market value assessment is having it assessed at 50 per cent of market value. Assessment on the old method used in the Niagara Peninsula was about 33 per cent of market value some 15 years ago. I suggest this is an area that the minister should be looking at.

Maybe 50 per cent of market value is a little bit too high. Perhaps he should start at about 30 per cent and then gradually phase it in with an annual two per cent increase over a period of five years, bringing it up to at least 40 per cent. I think that's one way that we can remove the inequities that are there.

It's difficult for any person to understand that where persons are not carrying their load in municipal taxes there is going to be a substantial increase, because that's why you have market value reassessment. It's for that purpose. It's for those who are not paying their fair share of the municipal tax base. I suggest the minister should be looking at that.

There is another way we can look at a substantial increase in assessment on reassessment. Another measure is to alter the mill rate in the municipality. I don't see this mentioned in any of the proposals for market value assessment. What is a municipality going to do in this particular area? We can have an increase in market value assessment on reassessment, but there is no commitment from the municipality that it is going to lower the mill rate. Perhaps that's an area that the government should be looking at where there is a problem in assessment in certain municipalities.

I suppose we have to support the bill in principle, but I hope the minister will take a look at some of my comments.

Mr. Nixon: Here's the assessor responsible for it all.

Mr. Charlton: That's right. I'm the assessor who is responsible for it all.

I would just like to start out, Mr. Speaker, by reminding the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs of something he seems to be attempting to forget completely in this bill and with the actions that the government has taken under section 86.

In 1969 and in 1970, and a number of my colleagues have expressed it in slightly different terms, his former colleague, Mr. McKeough, said, and said quite clearly—

Mr. Haggerty: Are you talking about assessors now?

Mr. Charlton: —the province was taking over property tax assessment because the municipalities weren't capable of dealing with it any longer in terms of fairness, in terms of reform and in terms of uniformity. So the province took it over to achieve fairness, equity, uniformity and reform.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Remember that, Tom?

Mr. Laughren: Good point.

Mr. Charlton: Now the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is saying to us through this bill and through his refusal some two weeks ago to provide any provincial moneys for phase-in—

Mr. Laughren: What a chicken heart.

Mr. Charlton: —that this government is not responsible for what happened in Hamilton, the municipality made the choice. And yet in 1970 that's exactly what the government said the city of Hamilton was not capable of doing—or any other municipality in this province for that matter.

Mr. Laughren: Exactly.

Mr. Charlton: It's absolutely disgusting to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have to be here tonight dealing with this bill. The province said the municipalities didn't have the responsibility, the know how, or the wherewithal to properly do what Hamilton is presently attempting to do to clean up the mess in property taxation. The province said that quite clearly; McKeough said that quite clearly. Now this Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is telling us that this is something that Hamilton has done; they made that choice on their own.

I might even point out to the minister that although it wasn't he himself who responded to a press statement which I and my colleague from Wentworth made some two weeks ago—it was the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) who responded—the Treasurer responded that the municipalities had had it made out to them quite clearly what this assessment equalization would mean. That's balderdash, Mr. Speaker. It's just a lot of garbage.

[9:00]

Those municipalities that went for the equalization last summer, and those municipalities that were approached and did not go, like the sister municipality in Wentworth, Stoney Creek, were not informed accurately at the time last summer when they were first approached what equalization would mean. In fact, they were given estimates of what kinds of properties would go up and what kinds of properties would go down and they were given estimates of the average change. They were in no way fully informed of what the extremes would be. Even after the job was finished this March and before the notices went out, the documentation that was presented to Hamilton city council did not indicate in any way, shape or form—and I have been through it quite carefully—what the extreme shifts would be and what were the real problems that were being created. That didn't become apparent until after the assessment notices were in the hands of the taxpayers in the city of Hamilton.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What has the government got against Hamilton?

Mr. Charlton: We have this government presenting us with this kind of a bill and refusing to put up provincial money to phase it in; totally shirking its responsibility, a responsibility which it took in total, 100 per cent, 10 years ago.

Mr. Laughren: It was a power grab.

Mr. Charlton: It is total avoidance of responsibility. The minister has before us a bill which in a number of instances mentions classes. How are we going effectively to deal with classes of property, in any municipality in this province, when they are not properly defined anywhere? This provincial government has the responsibility for assessment, I think that's quite clear; but there is no provincial definition of the classes it is talking about anywhere in legislation or in regulation.

The definitions that are in effect in the Hamilton instance are definitions that were sold to Hamilton city council by the assessment commissioner for the Hamilton-Wentworth region. The assessment commissioner in the city of Toronto is preparing a similar proposal for the city of Toronto to equalize under section 86, but his definition of classes of property are totally different from those definitions used in the city of Hamilton. His classes are much more specific and much smaller. What it boils down to is that they are broken down into different classes altogether.

The effect of this bill at some point in the future will be totally different in its application in the city of Toronto from what it will be in the city of Hamilton. I know that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs can't answer this question for me, but at some point perhaps he can ask his colleague—the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), who it was who set the definitions for the classes. Who was it decided that in the case of multiple-residential apartments a different factor would be used because the shift would be enormous if it was not, but in the case of developed and serviced residential property, and in the case of undeveloped, unserviced residential property, the same factor would be used for both even though the same criteria for making a difference existed between single-family residences and multiple residences?

Who made that determination? Who decided what the classes would be? Who sold the bill of goods to the Hamilton city council? I think I know the answer. It was the Hamilton-Wentworth assessment office. Where is there a provincial policy that defines what this piece of legislation will cover? There isn't one anywhere. Let me tell the minister that the problems of equalization in Hamilton and the problems of phasing in the tax increases that result from equalization would be nowhere near as great as they are if the classes used in the city of Hamilton, the classes the minister refers to in this bill, had been defined somewhat differently so that unserviced land could be dealt with in a category of its own, in the same that multiple-residential properties and commercial properties are dealt with in a category of their own, while industrial properties are dealt with in several different categories, depending on whether it involves heavy, light, strip, industrial park, and so on.

It seems to me we are into a situation in this bill where, although 10 years ago the province said it was the only institution in Ontario that had the wisdom to deal equitably and uniformly with assessment reform, today the government is saying the municipalities have to take that responsibility upon themselves, but at the same time this bill will tell the municipalities what they can and cannot do in terms of dealing with the problems created by equalization.

That is just a ridiculous situation for us to be in. Either the municipalities have the responsibility and have the wherewithal to deal with assessment reform or they don't. If they don't, this government should be taking total responsibility for that reform, and they are not. If they do, which is what the minister is now telling us, if they are the only ones who will have the right to deal with assessment reform, then those municipalities should also have the right, the open right, the complete right, to decide how they are going to deal with whatever problems evolve as a result of that equalization.

They should have the total right, the completely free right, to decide how they wish to deal with phasing in excessive increases or excessive decreases as the case may be. Certainly they shouldn't have the province telling them on the one hand if they want to fix up the assessment problems in their municipality they have to decide how they are going to do it, but they can't decide how they are going to deal with whatever problems or excessive increases result from that. This bill should be opened up.

I would much prefer to see the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs refer back to the responsibility this province took for property tax reform and assessment reform and think seriously about the statements made in the past; think seriously about where this government's responsibility should be now in the financial crunch. That responsibility is to come up with the money to do the phase-in so the people in Hamilton, who have been overtaxed for the last 10 or 15 years, don't also have to get their decreases phased in, so they can get the total and full effect of their decrease now, whether they be in a residential home, an apartment or commercial and industrial property, so they can receive the full impact of that decrease now and are not further penalized after having been penalized for a full 10 or 15 years already.

The provincial government is the institution in this province which has failed to live up to its promises of property tax reform. The provincial government is the institution in this province which should be taking responsibility for the consequences of a program which this government's Ministry of Revenue is actively selling in municipality after municipality across this province today.

It is not as if the Kitchener-Waterloo region or the city of Hamilton came to the province with particular schemes which they implemented or dreamed up in their own heads. There are very few municipal councils who understand the intricacies of property tax assessment. The schemes those municipalities implement were schemes recommended and sold to them by assessment officers, assessment officers of the assessment division of the Ministry of Revenue. They didn't go out and dream up these schemes; they were packages put together by this government. This government should have the guts to deal in a responsible way with the consequences of the package they put together and implemented.

Mr. Laughren: As usual, I will be extremely brief. I always notice when we talk about a bill dealing with property tax reform in general, or assessment in particular, that when the member for Hamilton Mountain gets up to speak there is a collective quivering among the Conservative members over there, because he has more knowledge about assessment and property tax reform than all of them combined, including a couple of the ministers responsible for the subject area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It wasn't quivering, it was snoring.

Mr. Laughren: If that is not true, I want to hear the minister's response to the particular questions raised by the member for Hamilton Mountain. I would like to hear the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs respond to the particular questions he raised.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am going to answer.

Mr. Laughren: I will bet you, Mr. Speaker, the minister won't even have the answers to these fundamental questions raised by the member for Hamilton Mountain.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let alone the frivolous ones.

Mr. Laughren: Let me be specific. The member for Hamilton Mountain said to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, through you, Mr. Speaker, that more than 10 years ago the government said to the municipalities of Ontario, "You can't administer the assessment of the province of Ontario in an equitable fashion, therefore we're going to put you out of your misery. We're going to take assessment off your hands and we're going to put it into the Ministry of Revenue."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What was your party policy then?

Mr. Laughren: Well, I want to tell the minister what our policy is right now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I want to know about them. What was your party's policy then? I know you've got a different one now.

Mr. Laughren: No, no, last fall in 1978—

Mr. Ashe: How about 1971?

Mr. Laughren:—this party laid before the government our proposals for property tax reform. That's what we did. And the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs says, "Oh well, you did it after we'd taken a position." What a lot of nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Oh, you know that is true.

Mr. Laughren: The minister—

Mr. Pope: What was your position in 1970?

Mr. Laughren: Are there any time limits on the introduction of government legislation? I don't think so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why did you change your policy?

Mr. Laughren: The minister can introduce legislation dealing with property tax reform any time he wants. He knows we were at least direct and honest enough to put before the government what we would accept in the way of property tax reform, which is more than the Liberal Party did. There were guarantees in there for residential property owners and for the small business community, but beyond that there was no reason why this government could not have accepted our proposals for property tax reform.

That was in the fall of 1978. We have not changed our position on our demands for property tax reform. There's no reason.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For one whole year you have not changed your position. Not a bad record. Better than the Liberals but still pretty bad.

Mr. Laughren: Well this government has changed its position. A year ago the Conservative government promised the province of Ontario property tax reform in the form of market value assessment. It was in the budget speech of 1978 and the Minister of Industry and Tourism has the nerve to say that we haven't changed our position in over a year. Well, what has his government done with the position of property tax reform?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Twelve months is pretty good, Floyd. Twelve months is pretty good.

Mr. Laughren: He has totally and deliberately misled the people of the province of Ontario. That is what he has done.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't say that, it will have to be withdrawn. Don't say that.

Mr. Laughren: The former Treasurer said to the people of Ontario, "It's gone on long enough, we've had 10 years and we've spent millions of dollars on the reassessment program in Ontario. It's time we got down to it and brought in property tax reform." What did the government do? Why is the former Treasurer not here today. He's not here today because that caucus told the Treasurer at that time, "We will not accept your proposals for market value assessment."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why isn't Ian Deans here today?

Mr. Laughren: That's exactly why Darcy McKeough doesn't sit in the front bench today. That's why he sits on the board of directors of Noranda Mines, rather than in the cabinet of the Tory party in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where are Ian and Stephen?

Mr. Laughren: Well, it was not because of revolt within this caucus—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it was because of your leader.

Mr. Laughren: —like it was with Darcy McKeough.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Your leader lost the support of his caucus.

Mr. Laughren: Darcy McKeough at least knew there had to be property tax reform. He knew it was a bitter pill, but he knew he had to grasp the nettle and bring in property tax reform and when that bunch of chicken, lily-livered Tories said, "We will not accept that because it will cost us votes in Metropolitan Toronto," Darcy McKeough said, "Yes, you either accept my proposals or I am out." Guess what? He was out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Guess what? You are dead wrong.

Mr. Laughren: I am oversimplifying it, but nevertheless, that really was his scenario, a year ago. That was the scenario and that government over there has not had the courage to implement property tax reform which they have been promising for 10 years. They haven't done it and it really is dishonest to have, 10 years ago—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Careful, Floyd. Careful.

Mr. Laughren: It's dishonest. It's plain and simply dishonest for the government to have taken away from municipalities the responsibility for assessment under the guise that they couldn't administer it equitably and then simply abandon the cause themselves.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If Evelyn were here I'd make you withdraw that.

Mr. Laughren: The government has a tough job to justify what it has done. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the mess continues in property taxes in Ontario and if the members over there had the courage of their convictions—if they had convictions—they would be the first to say—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do your members have a lot of convictions? How about Renwick?

Mr. Laughren: —they would be the first to say, "We'll sit and we'll wait for the amendments that are going to come to this bill." While we are supporting it on second reading to get on with the amendments, they would say, "Well in that case we will look seriously at the amendments and we will accept them as you bring them forward on the merit of the amendment"; in which case the minister would accept them all.

[9:15]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, it has been a very interesting evening. I have listened to a lot of fairy tales and interesting suppositions from the other side of the House.

I want to deal first with the comments from my friend the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), who I think made some valid comments on this bill. I just want to indicate to the member before he leaves that I think the point he made about the Ministry of Revenue asking for requests to be in by June—and of course, the new equalization factors will be out in July—is a very valid one, and I am going to discuss it with my colleague. I do not know whether municipalities got all the information they wanted last year when they undertook section 86 reassessments, but they should have all the information. We will do everything possible to make sure they have that this year. More than 100 have already applied for section 86 reassessments next year; they should have the information, and we will do everything possible to make sure that they have it.

Let's talk a little about some of the things that the members opposite have talked about. Everybody over there, in both opposition parties, breathed a sign of relief when we decided not to go ahead with market value assessment. They all breathed a sigh of relief and said, "Thank goodness, they are not going ahead with market value assessment right now."

After they had a chance to take a couple of deep breaths, they brought in a resolution suggesting that we should go ahead with some form of abbreviated and altered property tax reform, knowing full well that we would not vote for it and we would probably veto it and they were on safe ground. They got what they really wanted, and they could do as they always do, be on both sides of every issue.

I remember the most dramatic example of that was away back when we had the legislation to end the Toronto teachers' strike. They wanted to be on both sides of that issue. They want to be on both sides of every issue. But they cannot be on both sides of every issue.

I want to remind members opposite that this government is committed to property tax reform in a progressive manner, and we will move ahead with property tax reform. We are moving ahead with section 86 reassessments. We are introducing new equalization factors this July.

Mr. Charlton: Thanks to us.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Not at all thanks to the members opposite. It is thanks to this government's belief that there is a progressive, evolutionary way to bring in section 86 reassessments. I do not believe that the members opposite had any effect on the fact that we are bringing in new equalization factors. As we bring in the new equalization factors, we are going to guarantee that no municipality will get less grants in 1980 than it got in 1979 because of the equalization factors.

What I want to do is deal specifically with Hamilton because, although this amendment we are bringing in is general legislation and will assist those who undertake section 86 reassessments, it is being brought in particularly because Hamilton, having undertaken one, now wants to have the necessary flexible legislation to bring in a phasing-in procedure.

I want to deal with a couple of things. First, my friend from Hamilton Mountain said something about municipal councillors not knowing anything about this, anyway; that they are really pretty ignorant about it. He said they do not understand. I want to tell him that section 86 reassessment came in because in Hamilton, Mayor MacDonald, Controllers Morrow, Stout and Valeriano, and Aldermen McCulloch, Ford, Hinkley, Lawrence, Lombardo, Stowe, Ritchie, McMeekin, Edge and MacDonald—14 of them—voted to go ahead. Is my friend saying they did not know where they wanted to go?

Mr. Charlton: After they were sold the package by the Minister of Revenue.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They were elected by the people, and of their own free will they decided to ask for a section 86 reassessment.

Mr. M. N. Davison: They couldn't wait for you for ever.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They asked, and I suspect that among that list there are some members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Charlton: That's right; because they are trying to take on your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Wells: They asked for a section 86 reassessment, and that's why we have had a section 86 reassessment in Hamilton.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's because they couldn't wait any longer for you to move.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's not a bad idea, that the municipalities themselves ask for a section 86 reassessment. I don't consider myself bound by anything that was said here 10 years ago, I don't care who said it.

Mr. Laughren: I guess not.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't consider myself bound by that. I believe it is just and right today that by their own vote a municipality should ask for this kind of reassessment.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Under your legislation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: So a section 86 reassessment took place in Hamilton; and it also took place in 13 other areas in this province.

Mr. Charlton: Under your legislation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let's take a look at what happened. We listen to all this doom and gloom, but let's take a look at what actually happened. Excluding the city of Kanata, in the 13 areas that were reassessed 54,429 single-family homes had an increased assessment. Of those, 28,556 had an increase of under $100. In other words, half of those that were increased had an increase of under $100, but 85,699 single-family homes had their assessment decreased in the 13 areas across this province where a section 86 reassessment took place. So 85,699 had a decrease; 28,556 had an increase of less than $100, the remaining 20,000-odd had a large increase; that's the desperate problem that we have?

Mr. Charlton: But don't forget that under your legislation those decreased won't necessarily get it all.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All right, let's look at the city of Hamilton where 43.5 per cent of the single-family homes had an increase in taxes. For 34.2 per cent of the single-family homes in the reassessment area the increase was less than $100; for 9.3 per cent it was more than $100 in Hamilton; and 56.5 per cent of the homes in Hamilton had a decrease. Only 9.3 per cent of those homes in reassessment had an increase of over $100. Is that the desperate situation we're talking about?

Mr. Charlton: Those are the classes your people screwed up.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This is part of property tax reform, and what a bunch of nonsense to suggest that it isn't. Section 86 can be a useful tool, and it has been.

Let's look at small business in Hamilton. Sure, 2,288 had an increase in their assessments.

An hon. member: Let's look at Centennial Volkswagen; okay?

Hon. Mr. Wells: But 21,028 had a decrease and many of the increases were not significant. Let's bring some of those figures out; let's talk about those when we're talking about what's really happening.

Section 86 reassessment, I suggest to members, have on balance been a step forward. The city of Hamilton, knowing they have some problems in a small percentage of the areas—small business probably being one of the biggest areas—has a program for phasing in, which they have asked for and which we are giving them the right to implement under this legislation. There is nothing wrong with that. I suggest this is a good amendment and it will mesh in with the kind of program the city of Hamilton has undertaken.

Mr. Charlton: It's a second-choice program.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is not a second-choice program.

Mr. Charlton: Sure it is. Their first choice was for you to say where the responsibility lies.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You'd do a lot better if you put your money where your mouth is.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Those members from Hamilton are woefully ignorant, even of the things that are happening over in their own municipality. First of all they try to paint this picture of doom and gloom.

I'm glad we have some spectators in the galleries today, the executive of the Progressive Conservative Association from Wilson Heights riding. That, of course, is the riding represented by my parliamentary assistant. They are a very hard-working group, and they get their member elected; that's what counts. I know they are very interested in sitting here and watching the kind of wishy-washy material that is coming from the third party in this province on this matter of property tax reform.

I don't think the members from Hamilton who sit over there in that third party even know we made a special grant to the city of Hamilton; they probably don't even know that. They don't even know we made that special grant to the city of Hamilton to assist all the taxpayers. They probably don't know Hamilton has already got its phase-in program ready. It's ready to phase it in. It's going to cost about 0.4 mills on this year's mill rate, but they feel it's an equitable program, and I think it's just and right that they be the ones to decide to institute it.

On balance, this is a good set of amendments; I think it has balance within it. It should move forward quickly so the city of Hamilton can get its plan in progress.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

House in committee of the whole.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 505(1)(b) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by striking out "five" in the third line and substituting in lieu thereof "10".

Mr. Epp further moves that section 505(3) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by striking out "20" in the fifth line and substituting "10" in lieu thereof.

Mr. Epp further moves that section 505(4)(a) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by striking out "five" in the third line and substituting in lieu thereof "10".

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, as I alluded earlier, we believe the municipality should have the flexibility to go beyond the five-year period. We do not believe there would be any need to go beyond the 10-year period, but we do think sometimes these increases are substantial. They could sometimes run into thousands of dollars. I know in one case in the municipality of Waterloo the increase was in the neighbourhood of 11,000 per cent, and the increase went up from under $100 to over $5,000.

We believe in that case, as well as in other cases, there should be some flexibility, that flexibility is warranted. Although the ministry is well intentioned in trying to get five years there, we think that does not give enough flexibility to the municipalities and therefore, we're recommending 10 years.

Mr. Isaacs: I think the amendment is certainly a move in the right direction in that it gives municipalities the flexibility to select a period up to 10 years, but I want to ask both the member for Waterloo North and the minister why we have to put restrictions on local government at all when we're dealing with this kind of thing.

In his introductory remarks when he brought the bill into the Legislature last Thursday, the minister said the act is designed to provide sufficient flexibility to a municipality which has implemented a section 86 reassessment to phase in over a period of up to five years the effects of the reassessment.

We talked a great deal earlier this afternoon and yesterday, when dealing with the estimates for the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, about autonomy for municipalities. It seems to me if we believe that municipalities have certain rights and certain powers, then we should allow them to proceed with those powers according to their own wishes and we should allow the voters of the municipality to decide whether their council is doing the right thing or not when they go to the ballot box every two years. By putting these restrictions in this bill we are confusing the issue of who is responsible for a phase-in.

I want to say that while this bill is, unfortunately, necessary, and while I recognize that some of the minister's comments about continuing to bring in property tax reform are encouraging, it's my guess we will not see proper property tax reform in this province for quite a number of years. There will be a substantial number of section 86 assessments this year. Next year the minister, or his colleague the Minister of Revenue, will ensure through some mechanism that all municipalities are brought into section 86 and then all municipalities are going to need to take advantage of these provisions. I doubt that the minister has studied the effect of this bill on every municipality in the province.

I suggest that that responsibility should be in the hands of those who know the local problems best, that is, the local municipality. Therefore, we will be opposing this particular amendment and, after it's defeated, we will be introducing an amendment of our own which allows municipalities to choose the period of time over which these adjustments are phased in.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, let me deal with the amendment that has been proposed. First of all, dealing with the proposition that municipalities should have a fair degree of autonomy in this particular area, I do not disagree with the idea of autonomy for municipalities. I think that's valid. I certainly have been one to believe that as far as possible we should achieve more autonomy for municipalities with less provincial direction and control. However, at certain times it becomes necessary to insert in legislation a certain regulatory standard within which that autonomy can operate.

The way I see this situation operating is that the municipality of its own volition decides to have a section 86 reassessment. That is decided by themselves. There's no direction from this government or any ministry that they must do that, but if they wish to do it they decide to undertake that. They then move to this amended bill. Having undertaken a section 86 reassessment, if they find there are problems with the phasing-in procedures in some way, we provide a vehicle by which they may pass a bylaw to allow for some form of phase-in procedure. They don't have to ask us for it any more. They go ahead and pass that bylaw.

However, having made the decision to have a section 86 reassessment because there were certain benefits to the municipalities—in other words, assessment within classes would be equalized—we believe that they then should not have any other vehicle in legislation whereby they could negate the whole process.

I would submit that leaving the time limit completely open would allow a municipality to devise a phase-in program that could in effect obviate the section 86 reassessment or pass it on to successive councils with them taking very little action on the increases at the same time the decrease is going into effect completely.

For the same reason, I think that 10 years is too long. This is a phased-in program to get over certain injustices but a prolonged phased-in period would only prolong the degree of injustice to other people in the area. In other words, the justice comes about when the equalization has occurred and those taxes which must go up have increased and those which should go down have decreased. As I have pointed out already, most of the people's taxes will go down and of those that will go up, a large percentage of those taxes will go up by only $100 or less, so to allow a long phased-in period or an unlimited opportunity for a phase-in could completely obviate the whole program which had been sought and decided of their own volition by a council. Therefore, I believe the parameters we've set out here are necessary in the legislation and I regret I cannot accept the amendment of my friend to change the five to 10 years.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I understand the attempt that is being made in the amendments moved by the member for Waterloo North. I'm not going to dump them, even though in some cases they may not be in the best interests of the constituents whom I represent in this assembly.

I would suggest that the series of amendments to be proposed by the member for Wentworth are probably better, and I think the minister should reconsider his position on this, because what we're trying to do is get the municipality out of this bloody awful situation they've been put into by the provincial government.

The people in Hamilton, unlike the people in some other communities, have no way of further punishing the provincial Conservative government. It has no seats there to lose. So if they don't like what the provincial government is doing, they can't protest by defeating provincial Tory members. I suppose, though, it's possible to argue that they can, at least, have some impact on their local council.

Now that we've dumped the matter back on the municipalities, at least give them the full autonomy, or a better chance to try and work out the best possible solution for this problem. I think if the minister looks at the amendment, which I understand is a good and positive attempt to try and deal with it, and looks at the amendments to be placed by the member for Wentworth, I think he could agree that these would give the local council the best chance to come up with a good and workable solution.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on the amendment?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I just have a very brief comment. I regret, of course, that the minister does not see the wisdom of the amendment. He obviously doesn't understand it.

Mr. Ashe: You can't stretch things out forever.

Mr. Epp: I hope, of course, that he reconsiders. I would provide him with that opportunity.

I know he quoted earlier from some statistics. I'm just wondering whether he would be so kind to share those statistics with me. I don't want to quote them right now, but I would like to take a look at them because I think they may be helpful to study and use on some future occasion.

I would like to appeal again to the minister to reconsider and accept our amendment, because we obviously feel it's a good one. We've given considerable thought to it, and what he has in the bill is just a continuation of what was in the previous act. We don't feel that's good enough. We feel there should be some reconsideration given to that 10-year period, recognizing the large discrepancies that have been evident across the province in some of the reassessed municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I can't reconsider my friend's amendment but I will be happy to share with him the statistics I have. I thought they had been shared and were public information. I think we got them from the city of Hamilton or someone who did some compiling there. We'll get him a copy.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions on the amendment? If not, shall the amendment carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Conway: Democracy is defeated again.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 505(1)(b) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by deleting the words "not exceeding five years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "to be set out in the bylaw."

Mr. Isaacs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for sorting out the sections, subsections and clauses for me. This bill certainly has a plethora of those.

As I indicated in my remarks earlier, we believe in municipal autonomy in those areas for which municipalities should have responsibility. The minister has indicated, and we agree, that in this unfortunate circumstance it is incumbent upon the municipalities to deal with the situation before them. It is unfortunate that the minister and his colleagues are not prepared to help those municipalities. Given that circumstance, we have to find the second-best way.

I am assuming that the minister's comments may be similar to those he made on the previous amendment, though I hope very much that they are not. I hope he will consider supporting the municipal autonomy that we are proposing. He indicated previously that he did not wish to give the municipalities the right to negate the whole process. To me that suggests the minister is agreeing that the whole process is a trap into which municipalities fall and if, having fallen into the trap, they decide they don't like it, he is going to make very sure they don't have a way out.

I think that's inappropriate. Municipalities should be able to phase in the property tax increases that result from an assessment equalization program in whatever way best suits their municipality. I remind the minister that we are not talking just about the city of Hamilton, but we could be talking about all municipalities in this province.

The minister also suggested that he felt that the bill helped municipalities to get over the injustices. I suggest to him that he is phasing in the injustices that have resulted from making adjustments to another set of injustices. I really don't understand how the problems that have arisen as the result of a section 86 reassessment can be described as an injustice. They are just improper. They are situations that should not have occurred. The phase-in proposal that is before us now may, if the minister and his colleagues cooperate, give us an opportunity to bring in a proper system of property tax reform before the phase-in periods that are chosen by municipalities expire, if our amendment carries.

I hope that the minister will agree with us that municipalities should be allowed to deal with these problems in whatever way they see fit.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I very clearly indicated my feeling on this in the response to the first amendment. I thought that the suggestion that the five years be removed and that there be an unlimited time limit for a phase-in process would not be a good amendment, that it would perpetuate injustices, and that it could have the effect in a negative way of negating the section 86 process.

When I say in a negative way, what I mean is that what happens is that where you have a section 86 reassessment among classes you have achieved some degree of equity presumably. As I indicated in the Hamilton situation, most single-family homes decreased in value; and justice, for them, is not to have that decrease in assessment and the consequent decrease in taxation. The equity, to a large degree, would be for those whose assessment increased to assume the extra burden of taxes that would be caused by the increase in assessment.

Under the flexibility provided by this legislation, to allow an unlimited phasing in, or an unlimited forgiving—if you group together all the amendments of my friends from the third part, if you take this plus their other amendments—you could have a prolonged period of never really touching in any significant way those people whose assessment went up. The injustices would remain for those people whose assessment went down, because they would be paying an increased mill rate for those whose taxes never went up as they should have when the decreases occurred. To my mind, that would be perpetuating an injustice over a prolonged period.

Therefore we feel there should be a five-year period for the whole program, because we believe there is fairness in a phase-in, even though that will to some degree put some added burden, for a time on those whose taxes have decreased because their assessment has decreased. We think there should be a limit, and that five years is an equitable time.

I am sure my friend knows the city of Hamilton plans to do this in a three-year period. Therefore I can't accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Charlton: It seems to me the minister is again neglecting a number of things that are real in this province.

First of all, this amendment to the Municipal Act, although it may have resulted specifically from the Hamilton situation, and the specifics of the amendment parallel quite closely what Hamilton proposed in the way of phase-in, the same situation may not exist in every municipality that gets into this situation; the same set of specific guidelines Hamilton found acceptable may not in fact apply elsewhere.

The second thing I think the minister is missing or overlooking—and I can't speak for my entire caucus on this, but I speak for myself at this point; although we have been critical of some of the things which have gone on over the last few months, I personally am a supporter of what Hamilton city council did, even though I don't believe, from my discussions with a number of members of Hamilton city council, that they were fully aware of what they were doing; or perhaps they were aware of what they were doing but they weren't aware of the extremes involved on both sides of the question.

I am a supporter of the courage it took Hamilton city council to do what they did, because even though they perhaps didn't understand the extremes, they understood—specifically some of the aldermen you mentioned knew—their wards were going to be the wards where the bulk of the increases occurred; one such is Mr. McMeekin in ward seven, who is a personal friend of mine and to whom I have spoken on a number of occasions about this. I admire the courage they displayed in making this move.

I have said to the minister before I felt it should have been the province's responsibility to pay for the phase-in. That is obviously not possible now. What we would like to see is not only Hamilton covered in a situation where because of the action they have taken they can be in the best and most flexible position to respond to the people in the city of Hamilton over this whole issue.

For example, Mr. Minister, we are aware of what Hamilton council has chosen to do in their proposal; we have talked to them quite extensively about it. One of the complaints evolving amongst taxpayers in Hamilton right now, is that in one class, as you mention in your bill—a class I think was ill-defined in the first place; but that is again beside the point, it is a fact now—in one class they are going to do the phase-in by allowing all of the decreases, the total amount of the decreases, to become effective immediately, but they are going to phase in the increases and pay for that by a mill rate increase. In other classes though, the other option of the bill is going to be taken where the increases and the decreases are going to be phased in so those who have paid too much for far too long already, will be penalized somewhat further.

I'm not saying that since you've thrown the responsibility to the city of Hamilton it's necessarily your responsibility to dictate which of the options the city should take or which of the options any municipality should take, or in fact if there should be any options. You have said and you've said as clearly as you could, the section 86 things in the long run are a good thing, but you've also said you think it's good and right that the municipalities should make the choice.

Well, I can't see for the life of me why, if the municipalities are the ones that are going to make the choice and if they find they have made a mistake, at least in the case of the extremes they wouldn't have discretion. This is what we are talking about, Mr. Minister. We're not talking about any municipality not allowing any of the increases to occur. We're talking about the extremes, because that is what we are going to phase in. We're not going to phase in the three, five, seven, eight, 10, 12, and 14 per cent increases I myself had. We're not going to phase those in. We're talking about phasing in the extreme increases. We're talking about dealing with and helping those people who when they bought their property, regardless of what its current value is, bought that property based on a number of economic assumptions. Those economic assumptions were first, and obviously, the cost of the property; and second, the mortgage rate they would have to pay on the mortgage they would have to take to cover that cost. Obviously, the third major economic consideration they made was the taxation on that property. What we are trying to deal with by a phase-in is the extreme increases, and you've mentioned that yourself. These are the increases over $50 or over $100. In some cases they will actually amount to considerably more than that.

We're talking about the extremes. We're talking about the small percentages, as the minister has also very carefully pointed out. The very few cases are 9.7 per cent, I think he said. We're not talking, by having an open-ended phase-in, about negating the section 86 process in the city of Hamilton or in any other municipality. Perhaps at some time you should sit down and talk to Mr. Gillis, who is the executive director of the assessment division, and talk to some of his staff.

When a municipality calls the local assessment offices and says, "Tell us what will happen if we go for this section 86 program," the assessment office has not done the equalization. They don't have the facts and they can't present anything except an estimation. The member for Wentworth, who sat on the Stoney Creek council when the assessors came from the Hamilton-Wentworth assessment office to make the same proposal to Stoney Creek Council, can attest to that.

The assessment office does not do the equalization, does not come up with the numbers until after the municipality requests the equalization. That is because they don't want to expand the man-hours and the overtime involved. Perhaps in some instances, it has even meant bringing in assessors from outside regions. They don't want to expend all of that effort until the municipality has actually made the request for the equalization. Once the municipality has done that and the machinery is in motion, it appears it's too late to back out.

We're in a situation where nobody before the fact can clearly define the extremes. Once the municipality is into the process, then they have to deal with those extremes. We're not asking the minister to allow a municipality to make a decision to go the section 86 route and then totally negate it. We're asking that the municipality have the discretion, because we have no idea what the extremes might be. We know what some of the extremes are in Hamilton now, the ones that have been personally brought to our attention. We have no idea whatsoever to what extent those extremes might occur somewhere else.

Again, we're talking about the extremes and we're talking about once the municipality gets to the stage where the notices go out and they are now fully aware of what those extremes are and what kind of people are being hit with those extremes. We are talking about the municipality's ability to respond to that in as flexible a fashion as possible. I am not afraid to suggest, and I don't think any of my colleagues are either, that perhaps the municipality should have the right to totally negate the full effect of some of those extremes until such time as the province can go forward with complete province-wide property tax reform.

That is not to say, Mr. Minister, we want to negate the section 86 process. We want to negate some of the extreme excesses of that process, some of those things that the minister called injustices. We want to be able to deal with them in the most effective and the fairest fashion. We want the municipalities to be able to deal with something of which perhaps they didn't fully understand the extent.

That is what we are really talking about here, Mr. Minister. We are talking about the extremes, we are talking about those properties which a phase-in really applies to—the 9.7 per cent, or whatever it was you quoted earlier. That is not a very great number of properties but, regardless of the number, the effect the excesses can have on the people involved is extreme. The municipality's ability to respond flexibly to that is going to be very important in a lot of municipalities across the province, as we go through this ad hoc process. You might admit, Mr. Minister, that it is an ad hoc approach to property tax reform.

I support it because it is dealing with some injustices. Some people have been paying too much for 10 or 15 years. There is no question about that, and those people deserve consideration. I applaud the city of Hamilton and the other 12 areas of this province which took on that problem on their own initiative, but if we are going to ask the municipalities to take on the problems, then we also have to give them the power to deal as flexibly as possible with the extremes they are talking about having to phase in.

I repeat, Mr. Minister, we are talking about the extremes, not the whole program. The way your response came out it seemed to indicate they could negate the whole program, and I don't see that. I see us talking about the small percentage, as you pointed out in your response in the second reading debate. We are talking about a small percentage, we are talking about excesses, we are talking about people's ability to deal with those excesses. The municipality should have the ability to deal with the situations that specifically exist in their municipality.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman: Frankly, I am not terribly surprised by the minister's out-of-hand rejection of the very useful amendment put forward by my colleague from Wentworth. I didn't really expect him to support it. I think the minister's positions are totally in line and completely consistent with his government's approach of ignoring all good new ideas that come before him on the matter of property taxes. It accurately reflects the government's inflexibility and rigidity when it comes to important and useful new initiatives on the matter of property taxes.

What I would like to know, though, and what I think would be useful, would be to find out where the Liberal Party stands on this amendment, which will hopefully help alleviate the problems in Hamilton. I wonder if perhaps the Liberal critic would be so kind as to put before the House his party's position on this issue, in the absence of his colleagues from Hamilton.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, the member for Hamilton Centre is soliciting our opinion on it, and I don't mind giving it. I believe he should have the benefit of it.

We believe that to not have a limit included in this regard would not be a very wise step. We believe many municipalities have exercised three and four years in the past. My reading of my contacts with municipalities on this matter and others is that they would prefer to have some limit there as a guide.

We would very much appreciate having a 10-year limit. Unfortunately, that was not possible today due to the lack of support from both the government and the members of the third party. So we will oppose this amendment as we would prefer not to see the time period left open to the municipalities.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would like to thank the member for Waterloo North for putting forward the Liberal Party's position on the question of local autonomy. It is nice to know where they stand. I can understand why the member who represents the riding of Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) and the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) are not participating in this debate tonight to help the problem in Hamilton.

Mr. Haggerty: It is the first time the member for Hamilton Centre has been in the House for a month.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would like to comment on what the member for Hamilton Mountain said. I thought he had some excellent comments about the process and what happened. I appreciated his comment that he supported what Hamilton council had done. I support what they have done. I think that section 86 reassessment will in the long run be helpful. It may not be the ultimate of what he wants, but I think it will be helpful to Hamilton council.

I may have put my words wrongly in suggesting that it would negate the whole process. What I was trying to suggest was that by a prolonged phasing-in, albeit for extreme cases and for a small percentage, to some degree the whole idea of equity would be frustrated, as there would be increases in tax because of that on all those other people who got decreases. That's really what I was suggesting.

Notwithstanding the eloquent words put forward in support of this proposition, I still believe there should be a time limit and I am happy that my friends in the official opposition also feel that way. We feel that five years is adequate at this time. Therefore, I can't accept the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Isaacs' amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 502(2) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended to read as follows: "A provision limiting the amount of any increase or reducing the amount of a decrease under subsection 1 shall, in the first year of operation of the bylaw, limit or reduce only the amount of the increase or decrease, as the case may be, that exceeds $50 or such greater amount as may be prescribed by the bylaw."

Mr. Isaacs: Notwithstanding that we are now stuck, it appears from the previous vote, with a five-year period for phase-in, we still believe it should be up to the council of the municipality to decide how the phase-in should be operated, given that it is aware of all the local circumstances.

The present subsection 2 requires that the first annual increase be at least 10 per cent of the increase faced by individual property taxpayers. In his remarks on previous sections, the minister has repeated a number of times that the majority of taxpayers are facing lower property taxes as a result of the section 86 reassessment in Hamilton.

I want to suggest to the minister and to the party on my right that this party cares about minorities. If there were only one taxpayer in the city of Hamilton who was suffering gross inequity as a result of section 86 reassessment, then we would be fighting on behalf of that property taxpayer. It's because the local people are the people who are in touch with the situation that we're bringing forward this amendment tonight.

Interjections.

Mr. Isaacs: If they see fit to give an individual or a group of individuals an increase of $50 a year for the first year, then why should they not be permitted to do that? There are property taxpayers in the city of Hamilton whose taxes have increased by 300 and 400 per cent—and that is not 300 and 400 per cent of one dollar, but 300 and 400 per cent of many hundreds of dollars.

And those taxpayers are faced with that increase in taxes without any advance warning at all. They receive their notice of reassessment in the year in which the taxes are to be paid. In fact they have not yet received a tax bill that reflects their new assessment, because the preliminary tax bills, as the minister is undoubtedly aware, were based on last year's assessment.

Mr. Sterling: The bill allows 10 per cent the first year.

Mr. Isaacs: So there are taxpayers who, within a few weeks from the passage of this bill, are going to receive a tax bill that requires them to pay in the last six months of this year the whole of the increase imposed upon them because of the section 86 reassessment, subject to whatever adjustment the local council decides—not 10 per cent, but whatever the local council decides.

Mr. Sterling: The council has a voice.

Mr. Isaacs: We are suggesting the local council should be given complete flexibility to set the phase-in timetable as it sees fit—and this amendment is a very crucial part of that—so the first year's adjustments can be made according to local circumstances, not only in Hamilton but in every other municipality that is going to be facing this difficulty in the future.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, this amendment really changes the intent of what we had. It leaves in the $50 requirement but it takes out the 10 per cent. I am afraid I must disagree with my friend. In looking at it in one light it could mean, I suppose, if the situation was so—and I am using this purely as a hypothetical example—that if the Dofasco taxes were increased anything over $50 would be eligible for a phase-in, although I think he would probably agree that perhaps a minimum of 10 per cent would be equitable in that particular situation.

Mr. Isaacs: That's for city council to decide.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think the amendment we have tends to make things a little more equal and also shifts the burden in a balanced way over the total population who are getting the phasing-in process, rather than to some degree benefiting the large taxpayer who perhaps could bear a little greater burden than some of the others.

We feel that this section of the bill should stay as it is written.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Isaacs' amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of new comments relating to this section which I think are very important. I'll certainly be happy to dispense with the reading of the amendment if it's acceptable to the other members. The minister and the critic for the Liberal Party do have copies, as does the chairman. May I proceed with the points I wish to make?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The amendment must be put by you if you wish the committee to consider it. You should proceed with it.

Mr. Isaacs moves that section 505(3) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended to read: "The amount of an increase or decrease that may be limited or reduced in the second and each subsequent year of operation of the bylaw shall be an amount less than the amount of that increase or decrease that was limited or reduced in the next preceding year."

Mr. Isaacs: I suggest that the comments that the minister has made indicate that he has no trust in local councils to respond to the needs of the electorate and of the taxpayers in those municipalities. To suggest that Hamilton city council or any other municipal council would decide to phase-in tax increases for Dofasco at $50 a year suggests that the minister treats local government with contempt.

I think the inflexibility that the minister is displaying with regard to the whole bill is completely unacceptable. I want to ask the minister what background work his ministry has done in presenting this bill to us, particularly as, when he introduced the bill in the Legislature last Thursday, he said: "The legislation limits sufficiently the taxes that can be relieved to ensure that provincial interests are not abused."

I want to ask the minister what those provincial interests are, and whether his ministry has done an economic impact study on this bill, as we were promised would be done on every bill being introduced by the government.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the point the member makes that this legislation is designed for all municipalities, and indeed it is. I think it will be helpful to all municipalities. But he asks what kind of background did we go through in the developing of this legislation.

We went through about 15 meetings with the treasurer of the city of Hamilton and some meetings with the mayor in order to develop a piece of legislation that would assist Hamilton in its particular problem at the present time. In other words, we've talked to the city of Hamilton many, many times and tried to develop a piece of legislation that would allow them to come at the problem they see at the present time.

As the member has so eloquently stated, the government party has no members from Hamilton. The opposition parties represent the city of Hamilton and speak for their constituents in Hamilton. But I think the member should know that the municipality of Hamilton helped us greatly in developing this legislation. We value the expertise they have and we were happy to have that expertise as we developed this legislation.

If, in the future, it doesn't suit the needs of all those other municipalities of the province—in other words, if the value judgement of the people from Hamilton and their work with our people in developing it doesn't suit the needs of all the municipalities in the province—I'm sure we'll be back here with amendments to make the legislation do the job we believe it can do in its present form. Therefore, I can't accept this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on the proposed amendment?

We're dealing with an amendment to section 1 of the bill referring to the proposed section 505(3).

All those in favour of Mr. Isaacs' amendment will please say "aye".

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

[10:15]

Mr. Conway: The member for Mississauga East is cracking the whip over there tonight.

Mr. Isaacs: I have a final amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that section 505(4)(a) of the act, as set out in section 1 of the bill, be amended by deleting the words "not exceeding five years."

Is there any discussion on the amendment?

Mr. Isaacs: I suggest to the minister that this is his final opportunity to indicate who in this House stands for local autonomy. He has indicated to us that he has held 15 meetings with representatives of the city of Hamilton, and I don't dispute that for one moment. If this bill said somewhere in it, "This bill applies to the city of Hamilton," then we would be supporting it tonight. But I am raising these amendments because this bill could be in place for a long time to come and it could affect almost every municipality in Ontario.

He has suggested that the amendments I'm proposing, the amendment that's before us now, could mean that the property tax equalization system his ministry invented is never phased in. If a local council wants to take the gamble, and I would suggest to the minister that the odds are very good, that by not phasing it in for two or three years there will be a change of government in this province and we will be taking over and introducing real property tax reform that municipalities can live with, that the taxpayers can live with and that will treat everybody fairly, then I suggest that they might be making a good bet by never phasing in a section 86 reassessment.

Mr. Breithaupt: They can't even have five members here.

Mr. Isaacs: I want to say to the minister I hope he will consider once more this matter of the phasing-in period, this is his last opportunity to do so in this bill and if we are not granted this amendment, such that municipalities can introduce the phase-in over whatever period of time they see fit, then this party is committed to opposing the bill on third reading.

Mr. Breithaupt: How threatened do you feel?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to not accept this amendment because it would be inconsistent, this House having rejected the amendments to change the five years in the first part of the bill, to tamper with this particular section now would not be consistent. For the same reasons that I indicated for refusal of the first amendment, I would have to refuse this one.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You're such a dogmatic fellow, Tom Wells.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We're again dealing with section 1 of the bill referring to section 505(4) of the act.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there anything further on the bill?

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 115 reported.

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the committee rise and report.

On motion by Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Wells moved third reading of Bill 115, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of third reading of Bill 115 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, at this hour it would not appear to be wise to call another item. But I understand there is to be a late show.

Mr. Speaker: There is a late show that involves the member for Oakwood. Could he be found within the precincts?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member for Oakwood, wherever you are, we are ready.

An hon. member: Maybe the member for Armourdale could give us a speech.

Mr. Speaker: We could have the table officers do a little buck and wing.

An hon. member: A little what?

Mr. Peterson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) has his riding executive here in the gallery tonight, and they seem to be the only people here, perhaps with the unanimous consent of this House we could call upon the good member for Wilson Heights to make one of his eloquent speeches in this chamber. I believe he has yet to make his maiden speech, and I would offer him this opportunity, from this side of the House at least.

Mr. Speaker: As much as that may be desirable, I think it might establish a dangerous precedent.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the member for Wilson Heights just got back from Quebec City, where he attended the Federation of Canadian Municipalities meeting. I wonder whether in capsule form—about five words or less—he could give us a report on the convention.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In accordance with our announcement this afternoon I now deem the motion to adjourn to have been made.

The member for Oakwood has up to five minutes.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, as you know, during the question period I asked a question of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) to explain the announcement she made on May 15, 1979, about the school boards in Ontario getting 100 per cent, total funding. I would not say the information which the Minister of Education has provided in this House is misleading but, at best, the calculations are not correct.

The Minister of Education owes it to the different communities around this province to tell them exactly what she means by total funding. The Metropolitan Separate School Board in Toronto certainly would love to find out how the minister has decided that that board received more money last year than it will receive in this particular year, as of September 1979.

As you know, in February, as a result of the legislative grants, the heritage languages program was cut back by 50 per cent. The Minister of Education did not deny that. As a result, on March 15 four of the school boards, such as the Metropolitan Separate School Board and the Toronto Board of Education, which, as the minister very well knows, are right now on the floor—and the minister should understand that expression “on the floor”; it means that any legislative changes or any grants the ministry might provide will not benefit those particular school boards. That means in effect, for 68 per cent of the children in this province who are right now taking the heritage languages program, that the minister’s change of May 15 has made not one ounce of difference.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Your mathematics are absolutely dreadful.

Mr. Grande: Well, the minister will have a chance to explain herself.

Let her explain to us very briefly how the separate school board in Metropolitan Toronto was making a profit out of the classes, as she stated; and let her explain to us briefly how the Toronto school board is going to receive more money as a result of her May 15 memorandum that wipes out, as she was saying, the memorandum under which it was to have been in the legislative grants.

These are the questions that need to be answered, and I hope the Minister of Education will be very clear and will answer, not to me in this Legislature but to the Metropolitan Separate School Board, the Toronto School Board and the school boards in Ottawa and Kapuskasing, because as I understand it those are the boards that right now have the floor provision. I repeat, that means whatever grants she might increase, these particular boards will not be able to benefit from those increased grants.

With that, I will sit in my chair and wait anxiously for the minister to explain what she is talking about.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is obvious the honourable member has not understood the clarity of the memorandum presented on May 15. What I stated on that day was instead of funding at the rate of grant or in any way which is constrained or constricted by the usual delivery of GLG, the funding for the heritage languages program would be at 100 per cent of the cost of providing the course for 25 students at the rate of $21 per instructional hour for that number of students—growing, actually, from the provision for 10 students to a maximum of $21 for 25 or more.

Mr. Grande: Explain it, don’t repeat it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That funding is coming 100 per cent from the government. There is no constraint upon the local boards to provide additional funding for the program. The program will be funded at 100 per cent at $21 per instructional hour for all the school boards in the province, whether they have a floor, a ceiling or sidewalls.

I don’t know where the honourable member got his information. What I would like to read into the record right now is a letter dated June 5 from Mr. Bruno Suppa, the chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board. I have no idea where the honourable member has managed to extricate all of these petitions he is bringing in because all of them, I believe, predate the May 15 statement.

Mr. Pope: He works at it.

Mr. Grande: They don’t predate your February announcement.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Sir, I would like to read this letter from Mr. Suppa:

“Dear Dr. Stephenson:

“I would like to express the appreciation of the Metropolitan Separate School Board for the improvement in legislative grants for heritage language programs.

“As we explained to you during our meeting on March 21, the cuts proposed in the original regulations for the 1979 legislative grants would have affected seriously the program as it had been established in our schools.

Although the increase as announced by you on May 24 was not as much as we asked, it will allow us”—Mr. Suppa continues—“to continue to offer an effective program to the 32,000 children registered in these classes.

“May I thank you for meeting with us, for considering our problems, and for making the necessary financial adjustments which will allow the heritage language programs operated by this board to continue.”

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

---

THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mrs. Campbell: I wish to rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It has been drawn to my attention that in the Hansard of a meeting of the standing administration of justice committee, dated May 18 of this year, on page J-1330-1, the following is reported under comments by me:

"Oh, come on. You come from an area which is not an inner-city area, and it's interesting that not another Tory Jew is here, but you ought to know, if you don't know, that Toronto has been disadvantaged over the other areas with this metropolitan school board setup."

Mr. Speaker, I did not use those words. I have taken the opportunity to listen to the tape with others. The consensus is that it's clear that what I said was, "Not another Tory but you is here."

I am deeply offended that this could have appeared. I think I have spent most of my life fighting against that kind of approach to people in this community or any other. I feel very strongly that that has to be corrected, and that through me people who might have been offended by this are owed an apology by me, although I did not use those words.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, in relation to the public opinion polls taken by the government and paid for by taxpayers' money.

I would like to draw to your attention section 32 of the new rules, specifically subsection (c) which relates to the compendium and consolidation of information. It says: "On the introduction of a government bill, a compendium of background information shall be delivered to the opposition critics. If it is an amending bill, an up-to-date consolidation of the act or acts to be amended shall be delivered to the opposition critics, unless the bill amends an act amended previously in the session."

My point is that over the years the government has refused to make these public opinion polls public by tabling them in the Legislature. I would suggest that the answer to my repeated requests from the government has been that these polls are used in the formulation of policy and of legislation. I suggest, therefore, that they should be tabled in this Legislature so that all members may have the benefit of this background material, and that section 32 be complied with.

Mr. Speaker: I will take that under advisement.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I rise to correct the record. The Minister of Education has seriously misled the House, not on a matter of opinion but on an important matter of fact.

On June 4 I asked the minister whether the Metropolitan Toronto School Board would receive one red cent more as a result of her May 15 heritage language announcement. I expressed my dissatisfaction with her evasive response, and the matter was debated at the late show on Tuesday, June 5.

The minister, after attacking my statement, stated, according to Instant Hansard: "That funding is coming 100 per cent from the government. There's no constraint upon the local boards to provide additional funding for the program. The program will be funded at 100 per cent of $21 per instructional hour for all the school boards in the province, whether they have a floor, a ceiling or side-walls."

I would like to table a letter, dated May 14 and signed by the minister, to the Metropolitan Toronto School Board. Let me quote: "These changes will not have affected the Metropolitan Toronto Board of Education for 1979 as a result of the floor provision."

I also have a report dated May 24, 1979—and I will table it also—signed by the controller of finance of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board which states: "Changes in heritage language funding do not, therefore, directly affect the grant and no additional funds will be generated for the school board towards the cost of heritage language programs in 1979."

I am delighted that the Minister of Education acceded to our demands and increased the funding for heritage languages. However, I am dismayed that she is giving no additional funds to the Metropolitan Toronto School Board. Either she does not realize that she is still imposing cutbacks, in which case she is incompetent, or she is refusing to be totally frank and admit that she has seriously misled the House, in which case I firmly believe that the minister should apologize.

My original assertion is correct; the minister is totally wrong. The Metropolitan Toronto School Board will not receive one red cent as a result of the minister's May 15 heritage language announcement.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have to report to the member for Oakwood that he is incorrect but, indeed, the Metropolitan Toronto School Board will receive increased funds for the heritage language program this year. It is not based upon a floor or a ceiling; those factors have nothing to do with the funding of the heritage language program.

I apologize to the member that the information which he received from a member of my staff was incorrect. The reason for that is that, unfortunately, the staff member who responded to that question on behalf of the member for Oakwood had not been informed of the total policy change at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is always blaming her staff for her political errors.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, I am blaming me.

Mr. Cassidy: We've heard that one before.

Mr. Eaton: Make him withdraw his statement about misleading the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

LOCAL SERVICES BOARDS

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon I will be tabling a bill to provide for local services boards in unorganized areas.

I am pleased to announce to the members of the House that some of the northerners who have made this bill possible are with us in the Speaker's gallery. They are: Madeleine Belisle, president of the Unorganized Communities Association of Northern Ontario West, together with board member Doug May and executive director Kathy Davis, and Richard McGowan, president of UCANO East, together with his executive director, Gerry Violette, and Suzanne Violette.

Each has spent a great deal of time and effort helping us sort out the issues, from the major policy concerns down to the technical details. Each has travelled about the north helping to explain the local services boards concept. On behalf of us all, I would like to thank them personally.

This bill marks an important step for the residents of unorganized communities in northern Ontario. It is also an important initiative for the provincial government. The legislation offers the option of a formal, legal status to communities that are too small or too isolated to become municipalities and, in so doing, opens the door for these communities to enjoy a level of basic services that most of us in the larger centres or in southern Ontario have come to take for granted.

The need for such a vehicle has been recognized for some time. Lacking a local elected voice, an unorganized community can have difficulty establishing and putting forward its service priorities.

Even where a community can settle on its needs and succeed in obtaining a facility—either on its own or with the help of an outside grant—the activity often founders later on because residents have no formal way to share the ongoing operating and maintenance costs fairly among themselves.

I wish to emphasize three key features of this bill. First, it addresses just the basic service needs. Residents of the unorganized north have emphasized that their local needs are simple yet fundamental to the security and quality of life: fire protection, water supply, recreation, sewage disposal, street lighting and garbage collection.

Accordingly, this legislation would permit the residents and property owners of a northern community to initiate the creation of a corporate board with powers to provide such services in the community, on its own or by contract, and to recover some of the costs. There would be no regulatory powers such as planning, licensing or policing, nor would there be any responsibilities with respect to social or health services.

A second key aspect: This is permissive legislation; that is, it merely puts a mechanism in place. It will still be up to a community to decide whether opting for a local services board is to its advantage. The emphasis is on strengthening the self-help spirit that already prevails in many communities and on encouraging local initiative.

The third aspect is this is not a proposal for municipal government. A local services board is intended to be a much simpler organizational and funding vehicle. A community that chooses this route will still be "unorganized".

As I mentioned earlier, we have worked closely with the Unorganized Communities Association of Northern Ontario in designing this legislation. Once agreement was reached on principles, we issued an outline proposal, followed during March and April by a series of more than 30 public meetings in small communities across the north to listen to the views of residents and to develop a closer sense of their needs, preferences and capabilities. Most questions asked related to the procedures for establishing a local services board and the details of the funding and taxation features.

The first step would be for a community to initiate an application by holding a "town hall" meeting. In practice, we expect there will be considerable discussion in a community prior to this meeting, and provincial staff will be available to clarify aspects of the legislation as it relates to the particular community, help with notices, offer advice on the conduct of the organizational meeting and so on.

Once an application has been received, my ministry would undertake to advertise the fact and in other ways seek feedback, in order to be fully satisfied that the decision of the meeting reflected the feeling of the community as a whole.

So far we have developed no hard and fast rules as to which communities will be approved for incorporation as local services boards. The main purpose is to recognize and assist existing communities where possible, rather than to spur the development of new ones. In general, we will be considering such interrelated factors as the size and stability of the community, the strength of community spirit and the servicing needs. Because I am concerned that we should not impair the municipal system in the north, I will be consulting with my colleague the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) on local services board applications.

It seems reasonable to delay consideration of any applications from areas where local government arrangements are under active review by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, and I believe the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs will be making a statement on these issues in a few minutes. I will also be consulting with other cabinet colleagues whose jurisdictions may be affected. Altogether though, I would hope a final decision would take no longer than two or three months from the initial town hall meeting until final approval is obtained.

On the matter of funding, again we will have to work out many of the specific details as we deal with individual budgets. In general, capital projects will continue to be financed through existing schemes, including the special assistance programs of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. The fact that communities will have legal status should improve their access to these programs. Under the local services board proposal, the province, through the Ministry of Northern Affairs, will also assist communities with the operating and maintenance expenses of their activities on a $1 to $1 basis.

Mr. Laughren: Scrooge.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: For the present, there will be no upper limit to this assistance for each local services board, but I must emphasize there will be no provincial contribution without a matching local share.

Monies raised in any of three ways will be considered in calculating the matching grant: voluntary fund-raising events, user fees and on the assessment.

Mr. Laughren: What about volunteer labour?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It will be up to the community to decide which of these methods it wishes to use. During the initial period at least, bequests, donated land and volunteer labour or materials will not be eligible for the matching funding.

Mr. Laughren: Shame. Scrooge.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: On the assessment point, I am pleased to say the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) has agreed that the local services board levy can be billed and collected as an add-on to the provincial land tax. This will lift the burden of paper work from the local level, yet still leave the community itself with the annual decision as to what rate, if any, should be applied.

In conclusion, I would stress the flexibility of this draft legislation. A community can choose whether to opt in, which are the specific services it wishes to provide, over what areas, how it will provide them and the method of covering the local share of the costs.

The bill should not be looked on as an overall panacea for all the problems in unorganized communities. It offers a simple mechanism for facilitating self-help efforts and the flow of provincial funds. In some cases, the option will merely assist the community in maintaining its current service levels. In all cases, provincial ministries will continue to have responsibilities with respect to unorganized communities.

Short of going to municipal government, though, this local services boards legislation seems to me to be the best way of giving legal status, a local voice and a financial base to those unorganized communities which wish it in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on the introduction of this legislation permitting the establishment of local services boards in northern Ontario. I believe this initiative by the Ministry of Northern Affairs marks a significant step forward in ensuring that the residents of unorganized communities receive the essential services they desire and require.

Members will recall a similar bill was brought forward in 1974 by the minister then responsible for intergovernmental affairs. The bill was allowed to die on the Order Paper after the electoral and tax collection provisions in it had been criticized for being beyond the needs and capabilities of small communities in the north. The concept behind the legislation presented today is much more in line with the very basic community framework that residents of unorganized communities have told us they are looking for.

As the Minister of Northern Affairs has said, the concept of local services boards is not one that will be universally applied throughout northern Ontario because about 93 per cent of the population in the north is always able to deal with its problems through municipal government. Local services boards are designed specifically for communities which do not have the option of municipal self-government because they are too small to function as a village or a township or because they are too remote to consider merging with a neighbouring municipality.

The government is continuing in its efforts to help strengthen the municipal system in northern Ontario. These efforts include responding to local requests for studies of boundaries and structures. One example was the district of Parry Sound local government study which led to the Parry Sound local government bill which is now before this House. More recently, study reports have been released on the Kenora area, the Blind River area and the area north of Sault Ste. Marie. Final reports for the Geraldton area and for the area from Hearst to Smooth Rock Falls will be ready some time this month.

As the Minister of Northern Affairs has already noted, it is only reasonable that local services board applications from areas in which the local government arrangements are under study should be deferred until the studies and the follow-up to the studies have been completed. Of course, at this point, the applications will be processed in the normal way and proceed in the normal manner. For example, now that the local government study and follow-up have been completed in Parry Sound, such communities as Port Loring and Restoule may want to give serious consideration to the local services boards alternative.

The government of Ontario is anxious to assist those communities which wish to provide an outlet for their spirit of self-help through local services boards. The Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will be working very closely with the Ministry of Northern Affairs to assess the implications that applications may have for the municipal system.

For example, it would not seem wise to incorporate a local services board for a community which is essentially fringe growth from a neighbouring established municipality. In such a case the better alternative for all concerned might be to extend the boundaries of the established municipality to take in the unorganized community.

An hon. member: It is impossible.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Where this idea was feasible and was desired locally, it might well be the preferable way of providing improved services to the unorganized community. Our overriding objective, however, will be to keep red tape to a minimum and to work in close harmony with the local people involved so that we can respond with speed and sensitivity to their questions and to their needs.

In conclusion, I think the introduction of this legislation today is an important step forward in the improvement of community life in northern Ontario.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Walker: Regarding the Guelph Correctional Centre disturbance of May 7, I would like to report on the investigation and disciplinary action. Following the disturbance at Guelph Correctional Centre, Monday, May 7, an investigation was undertaken by the ministry's inspections and investigations branch. I indicated at the time that I would share the findings of this investigation with members of the Legislature.

Early in the afternoon of May 7, inmates of the Guelph Correctional Centre were successful in smuggling a three-quart milk jug of home-brewed wine into unit D3. Apparently this home brew was manufactured from ingredients stolen from the centre's kitchen, such as apple peelings and potatoes, and the brew was hidden until fermentation had taken place.

An hon. member: Hennessy's Three-Star.

Hon. Mr. Walker: A number of inmates consumed some of the so-called wine and, subsequently, two inmates were observed by staff to be in an intoxicated condition. They were removed from the unit and placed in segregation. A short time later an additional 12 to 15 inmates were observed by staff in the evening meal lineup to be in varying degrees of intoxication.

We do not tolerate behaviour of this nature. As a result, 74 inmates were placed off privileges and locked in their cells, pending further inquiries into the matter. This represented the entire unit. The reason for this action was explained to the inmates by staff. In effect, this meant that the 74 inmates were locked in their cells after the dinner hour and were not to be permitted to go to the common room to watch TV or to the gymnasium for recreational activities that evening.

A search by staff located the half-filled three-quart jug of home-made brew, which was then confiscated. The disciplinary action by staff in segregating the two inmates and, subsequently, removing evening privileges from the rest of the unit when more inmates were found to be intoxicated was questioned and resented by members of the inmate liaison committee. Several members of the inmate liaison committee informed staff that the institution was uptight as a result of the disciplinary action and they offered to visit various inmate units and explain the reasons for this action.

Mr. Nixon: Not enough orange juice.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Instead, the investigation clearly reveals that members of the inmate committee used this opportunity to create tension and to incite a disturbance. The investigation revealed that some of the areas involved in the disturbance were unaware of the disciplinary action in D3 cell block and that these areas were calm until after they were spoken to by members of the inmate liaison committee.

During the course of the evening, several small fires were started and a number of misconducts were laid against inmates. The full-scale disturbance erupted at approximately 10:30 p.m. and resulted in approximately $37,000 property damage. The figure of $37,000 estimated at the time has now come in slightly lower. During the height of the disturbance and the confusion resulting from the destruction of furniture, plumbing, windows and other items, seven inmates escaped from the centre. Incidentally, six of the seven have since been recaptured.

Mr. Foulds: They found the still.

Hon. Mr. Walker: In summary, the investigation revealed this disturbance resulted from an abuse, by the inmate liaison committee, of the responsibility and trust which they enjoyed at the centre. Clearly, the inmate liaison committee utilized a relatively minor incident to create resentment towards staff in regard to disciplinary action and to advocate retaliation in the form of acts of physical destruction and riotous behaviour.

The irresponsible actions of the inmate liaison committee resulted in the transfer of nine committee members to our maximum security facility, Millbrook Correctional Centre, on the day following the disturbance, and the immediate suspension of all inmate liaison committee activities at Guelph.

It is the view of our staff that a structure for ongoing liaison with inmates is important at Guelph. However, it is clear that a restructuring of the present system is warranted. A study is currently under way to develop a better system whereby inmate representatives can raise matters for discussion with the institution's staff. In the interim, until this new structure is in place, the suspension of the inmate liaison committee's activities will continue.

The day after the disturbance, I informed the Legislature that the ministry intended to take firm disciplinary action against inmates who participated in the riotous activity at Guelph. In this regard, the superintendent of the centre was authorized and directed to order the forfeiture of both earned remission and all savings and canteen spending allowances standing to the credit of any inmate who was involved. Inmates were also to clean up and repair the damage which they had caused.

Here are the results:

Disciplinary hearings were held for nearly 200 inmates within a few days. Approximately 60 inmates were found not to have taken part in acts of destruction, although they were present in the areas where damage occurred. No action was taken against these 60, who resumed normal privileges. The remaining 140 inmates were assessed the forfeiture of a total of 4,808 days in earned remission, which equals an additional 13 years in time to be served.

Inmates also had confiscated approximately $24,000 from their normal incentive allowance funds to help defray the nearly $37,000 cost of repairs.

Inmates have been required to work to restore the facilities which they damaged. The cost of restoring these areas would have been approximately $90,000 had an outside contractor been required. The estimate of $37,000 is based on having the work done by inmates. The repairs are 85 per cent completed, with only the replacement of flooring material and some plastering and painting to be completed in one unit.

I would like to reiterate my appreciation for the outstanding performance by staff of the Guelph Correctional Centre in bringing this disturbance under control. The fact that a disturbance involving nearly 200 inmates was brought under control in a relatively short period of time, without injury to staff or inmates, and without a physical confrontation, is a tribute to the professionalism of the staff at the centre.

In this connection, members will recall that the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra) visited the centre Wednesday, May 9. He subsequently issued a statement that was critical of the fact that staff were temporarily housing inmates in the tunnel areas of the centre's basement where there were few amenities. He asked the Ombudsman's office to investigate.

I expressed the view in this House that "the inmates were the authors of their own misfortune. They rendered a number of their living units uninhabitable through a rampage of wilful damage which was not justified, in my view, by the actions taken by staff or by any grievances of a serious or profound nature . . ."

I have not changed my mind about the temporary housing of the inmates in the tunnel areas, and there was nothing in the Public Institutions Inspection Panel report or in the Ombudsman's findings to alter that opinion.

The Public Institutions Inspection Panel, a panel of private citizens, toured the Guelph Correctional Centre, Thursday, May 10, and spoke to inmates in the tunnel areas. The panel commended the performance of staff in handling the disturbance and stated that the tunnel area for temporary accommodation was "acceptable" under the circumstances.

The Ombudsman's report notes that his investigator, Mr. Doug Naish, talked to inmates in the tunnel area. I would quote: "During Mr. Naish's discussions with both groups of inmates in the 'tunnels', no complaints were made concerning harassment or physical abuse by staff either during or after the disturbance." The report stated that it could not describe the decision by authorities to place inmates in the tunnel as unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminating. "Likewise," the report stated, "having regard to all of the circumstances, including the requirement to maintain security and order and prevent further damage to the institution, the Ombudsman was unable to describe as unreasonable the conditions under which the inmates were held in the 'tunnels' during the period May 8, 1979, to May 10, 1979."

Later today, I will table the report of the inspection panel and the Ombudsman's report, both of which support the position taken by ministry employees.

MEMBER'S WEDDING

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a statement to make; it is a matter of personal privilege I want to raise. On occasion some of my colleagues on Friday mornings are very heavily involved in public business other than in the Legislature and, while the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) I know will be here tomorrow morning, I did want to express on behalf of all members on this side of the House our sincere best wishes for the event that is to take place on Saturday next.

In that our family, that is, some of my children, have the pleasure of knowing the young lady who is to participate in the ceremony on Saturday, they too would like to express their best wishes. I didn't suggest to them that they might be wishing to say to her that although we hope she has a great deal of patience, understanding, et cetera, et cetera, however, in the anticipation that perhaps her brief involvement with a family that philosophically showed greater perception and insight than that into which she is marrying, perhaps she may have some influence on the distinguished member for Rainy River. We will live in hope, at least for a short period of time.

Most sincerely, we would like to wish the member for Rainy River a very pleasant day on Saturday and, more importantly, a very happy marriage. I guess it leaves very few bachelors left in this assembly, and I would only look to two or three of my own colleagues and say to them occasionally, "I wish you would follow that example, but only that example."

Mr. Cassidy: I would just like to add a word or two of congratulation to my long-time friend, Patrick Reid, on this event which is going to take place in his life on Saturday.

I recall meeting Patrick many years ago and asking him, as a bachelor, before I was even in this House, what he did when he met young women here in Toronto and how he avoided putting them off by saying he was a member of the Legislature? He said, "I tell them I work for the government." Well, obviously, it is an approach which has had a successful outcome.

I can also say I had some advance intimation of this one day last spring when I was out running, something I rarely do, and I run up to Sir Winston Churchill Park and around the tennis courts. There, at 7:30 in the morning, I found Patrick indulging in tennis with his bride-to-be—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Did Hansard get this?

Mr. Cassidy: —which suggests to me, Mr. Speaker, they have embarked on a fruitful kind of relationship.

Mr. Foulds: I think that requires a point of privilege.

Mr. Cassidy: All I want to say is the family that plays together stays together. We wish them well.

Mr. S. Smith: I will just be very brief. We think of it in caucus as not so much losing a member as gaining yet another opinion.

Mr. Nixon: I hesitate to stop the levity here, but I thought perhaps the young man himself might want to contribute to the discussion.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The last time I spoke I got into trouble.

Mr. S. Smith: It is the next time you speak that you are going to be getting into trouble.

MEMBER'S COMMENT

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I do have a point of order. I noticed you listening with care and attention when my colleague, the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), brought to your attention the error that had appeared in Instant Hansard, and I know we were all very glad to hear the correction and certainly accept it.

I would bring to your attention, however, sir, the erroneous Hansard—the Instant Hansard, which is not an official document, as you know—had somehow had extensive circulation and was brought to attention in some embarrassment actually, since the honourable member had no idea such an interpretation would have been placed on her remarks.

I would ask you, sir, to make it clear to all members that Instant Hansard contains errors that are corrected when the reference to the individual members takes place and, in this instance, corrections are made in the House when they come to the attention of the honourable member affected. This is a very serious matter. I can only hope the honourable members or other persons who may have been responsible for the circulation of that Instant Hansard will see the corrected Hansard is sent to the same people.

Mr. Speaker: I had occasion to discuss that problem you so rightly bring to the attention of the House with Peter Brannan, chief of Hansard. Something is being done about it. I agree whole-heartedly it should be quite clear in the minds of all members, or anybody who has occasion to use Instant Hansard, that it is just that. It is the unedited version; it is what either the transcribers think was on the tape or what is dovetailed in by our interjectionists. Until it has the final approval of the editors it doesn't become the official Hansard.

It may be necessary for me to elaborate a little more fully on it within the next day or two. I think it is a point well taken. I think everybody should be reminded that Instant Hansard is simply that: it is what people thought was intended or heard before the final editing is done. I would just like all people within hearing of my voice to keep that in mind.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Ziemba: I rise on a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) has justified the treatment of Guelph prisoners, and dismissed certain charges I made last May 9, by quoting from the Ombudsman's report. What the Minister of Correctional Services did not do is quote the conclusion of that report. I would like to put that on the record because in fact the conclusion justifies my charges.

The Ombudsman states: "Notwithstanding the aforementioned findings, had the authorities at the Guelph Correctional Centre not indicated that the remainder of the inmates in the tunnelled area would in all likelihood have been released by Friday evening, May 11, 1979, it may well have been that I would have considered making some recommendations to the ministry concerning the amelioration of conditions for inmates who were required to remain in the tunnels for a longer period of time."

ORAL QUESTIONS

NANTICOKE CONTRACT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, Mr.

Speaker. Can the minister explain how it is the Ministry of the Environment has apparently contravened the government's buy-Canadian policy with a very important pollution control technology contract? In particular I speak of the Nanticoke environmental management program where a bid by Canadian Applied Technology was turned down in favour of a bid by the Radian Corporation of Austin, Texas.

Can the minister explain how it is that such a decision was made, especially when members of the Ministry of the Environment have admitted the Canadian bid had a system which was adequate to do the job, that their bid was apparently the lowest, and their bid obviously had the highest Canadian content? Can he explain the situation and tell us what intervention he may have made with the minister at the time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I recall the circumstances, I was told the circumstances surrounding that were the subject matter of very lengthy discussions between the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) and the people concerned. It might be more appropriate if the honourable member asked the minister that question; I think he is out of town this week but when he returns. He was front and centre on that and was involved in these lengthy discussions. I think he would be the appropriate minister to ask and would be able to give a more complete explanation than I would.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: since the executive director of the division of industry and trade in this minister's ministry, a Mr. Garland, was present at one of the meetings held with Canadian Applied Technology after the rejection of the bid, and since copies of all the correspondence between the company and the government have been sent to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, why is the minister unable to explain what the situation is, and whether this is a contravention of the policy? Does he not recognize that phases two and three of the same program still have to be bid upon, but that now there will be an enormous advantage to the American company which has garnered phase one? Why does the minister not know about this, and how does he regard the matter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say I did not know about it; I indicated that my colleague who was intimately involved in the day-to-day discussions would be a better source of information to discuss some of the reasons the bid was turned down.

I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that while we talk about that Canadian purchasing policy as an important part of the government's strategy, its implementation ultimately rests with the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), in most instances, and with the particular minister involved in a particular purchase.

Mr. Laughren: It's your program.

Mr. S. Smith: Isn't it one government over there?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wait a minute. Obviously we get involved in situations particularly in which there is reason for the firm involved to wonder whether it is getting a fair shake, in view of the decision that is made. But I want to repeat to the Leader of the Opposition that, especially in the case of the environment, highly sophisticated and technical machinery is involved. In those instances it would be quite extraordinary for me or my ministry to presume that I or my staff had all the expertise to overrule or second-guess the decisions made by the Ministry of the Environment and its experts with regard to the technological aspect of the equipment in question.

We are present to make sure the policy is addressed, that it is very seriously addressed and that every consideration is made. To the best of our ability we satisfy ourselves that that careful and considered analysis is made.

It is for those reasons that the Leader of the Opposition obviously would be able to get more information from the minister involved with regard to the technical elements of a very sophisticated piece of machinery.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain how Canadian companies in the pollution control field are ever going to get themselves established and replace multinationals in this field operating in Ontario when in this particular case the Canadian company's bid was rejected, even though its price was lower than that in the bid offered by the American company?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, we have a policy which, I might add, is similar to the procurement policy of almost any other government in the free world and which is not simply a straight, no-outside-considerations, lowest bid, or even 10 per cent Canadian preference. Obviously, in certain circumstances there are other considerations that come into play: the quality of the machinery, the ability to service it, the suitability of that particular machine to the project in question and so on.

This is not unusual or unique to this government. As I say, it is literally the policy everywhere in the world where there is a procurement policy. There are certain riders and exceptions which allow some flexibility to make sure one does not buy a machine that does not fit, an inferior machine, a machine that will be difficult to service, et cetera, simply for the sake of sticking to a hard-and-fast rule.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary question: May I first of all remind the minister that officials within the Ministry of the Environment admit that the system offered by the Canadian company was adequate for the job required. Having reminded him of that, may I ask the minister how come he is unable to give a full and complete answer to this House on the very important matter of the failure of his so-called policy in this regard, when his own officials have already had lengthy discussions about this matter? He should be briefed and be prepared to talk to this House about it and not pass the buck to the other ministry involved.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will say to the Leader of the Opposition that, unlike him, I do not pretend to come to this House with a full and complete knowledge, or even a piece of paper explaining every single circumstance in which this government or one of its agencies purchases a piece of machinery. That would be total foolishness.

My responsibility is to be able to report to this House on the policy, the role of my ministry in making sure that policy is enforced, and the role we play.

I have indicated to the Leader of the Opposition that my colleague who was intimately involved in the matter would be pleased to provide that information.

I might also say to the Leader of the Opposition, if he would like detailed information with regard to this government contract or any other government contract, it is quite in order for him to put that question on the Order Paper or call my office the day before he wants to raise it in this House and I would be pleased to get him the information in quite extensive detail with regard to each and every purchase made by this government which appears to the Leader of the Opposition to contravene our Shop Canadian policy. I think that's a fair and reasonable position.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the minister has any intention of making reality of the policy of buy-Canadian for pollution control equipment, will he communicate with the Ministry of Natural Resources, which is shortly going to call for tenders on flood prediction and water-level monitoring systems, and tell it not to use the same technical experts who were called in on that Nanticoke contract in order that this small Canadian company can get a fair shake in being considered for that important contract?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the leader of the third party that the Ministry of Natural Resources, and every other ministry of this government, not only is well aware of our Shop Canadian policy—

Mr. Laughren: Except the Ministry of the Environment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —our procurement policy, which has been in place since 1974, but executes it fairly. When there are any questions involved, my ministry is available and called in to ensure that that is implemented, and that will be the case in the items the member has just referred to.

BLIND PERSONS' ALLOWANCES

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Community and Social Services. First of all, I want to say sincerely that we are happy to see him here and we trust he is well.

May I ask the minister with reference to the situation that pertains for blind persons in Ontario. Can he explain why this government finds it necessary to place a 75 per cent tax on any earnings that these blind persons happen to achieve over and above $60 per month?

Is he not aware of the fact that those who live independently in the community have only $286 a month and work in sheltered workshops frequently, such as the one at the Canadian National Institute for the Blind in my own riding, and that if the government taxes away three quarters of what they earn past $60, they obviously have no incentive to work past that amount and to develop the working skills and put out the production, even though the workshop has a good many orders?

Why would the government tax the blind at such a ridiculously heavy rate and take away their incentive, instead of letting them keep a good portion of that money and then having a sliding scale afterwards, taking away only some of the money until their earnings are indeed quite high? It is quite unfair as the government does it now, and does it intend to change it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not to make light of the question, I would like first to respond to the preamble of the Leader of the Opposition and to thank him for his expression of concern and all of the honourable members who have expressed concern. It is uplifting after the other event that was mentioned earlier by the Premier and the leaders of the opposition parties.

I must say I felt that I ought to have risen at that time and commented. I wasn't sure whether I should protest or congratulate the honourable member for Rainy River. I feel today that I know something of what a whooping crane feels like. I feel like the member of a dying breed. However, I also extend the best wishes from the whooping crane society, which is in diminishing numbers here in the Legislature, to the member for Rainy River.

With respect to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, the situation he describes is one that has caused me and my colleagues considerable concern as well. As I am sure he is aware, the same situation applies to persons in receipt of an allowance and family benefits for any type of handicap or to a person who is deemed to be permanently unemployable.

The proposals I made last September to the meeting of the ministers of social services from each of the provinces addressed that question. In fact, every province endorsed the proposals that we then carried forward to the federal-provincial meeting to seek the necessary changes under the Canada Assistance Plan regulations to allow for variations in that tax-back so we would not lose cost-sharing from the federal government by making substantial changes in the rate of tax-back. As I indicated earlier in the House, that proposal was not acceptable to the federal government, as was indicated in communication received in February of this year.

I'm encouraged to read in the newspaper—although I haven't had an opportunity yet to meet with the new minister—that one of the things that has been indicated, according to the press, by the Honourable Heward Grafftey is he wishes early to seek some changes. That, in my interpretation of the news story, would indicate he is willing to address these problems with us. If that is an indication of the willingness of the new government, I know the provinces are willing to support a move to make those changes and to provide for greater incentives and opportunities for security for those persons who are able and willing to move into the work force, either on a part-time or a full-time basis.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister saying there's absolutely nothing the province of Ontario can do to increase the incentives for these blind persons to allow them to retain more than $60 a month before taking it away from their pension? Is he saying there's absolutely nothing that can be done by the province of Ontario without the agreement of other governments? If that is the case, could he possibly explain to us his basis for that particular statement and also comment on the fact that two years ago the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped asked the minister to whom that council reports—the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch)—to take such action, and they're still waiting?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, there is very little that one could do without becoming ineligible for cost-sharing from the federal government. As the honourable member knows, for income maintenance programs there is a transfer from the federal government to the provinces equivalent to 50 per cent of the amount of pensions or allowances paid under the income maintenance programs.

I am advised that at the present time our level of exemptions—for example, the amount the member has cited for blind persons, and a somewhat higher amount for a single parent up to $120 a month exemption if there is more than a single person in the family—already exceeds the federal guidelines. We would risk losing cost-sharing if we attempted to move unilaterally. The other alternative would be that we might be able at some point to make that move unilaterally, on the clear understanding it would require 100 per cent funding from the province of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: It doesn't require any funding.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It does, because of the fact that by increasing, there would be two or three factors that would have to be taken into consideration. One would be that it would create a broader eligibility for some persons. I have to be careful here so I can explain it clearly.

Ms. Gigantes: You had better be careful.

Hon. Mr. Norton: For example, if $60 at the present time is exempt, and for more than $60 there is a tax-back provision, if there is a fluctuation or a change in that level, obviously it implies greater cost to the province because more persons, or more income, if you wish, become exempt.

Mr. S. Smith: They are not working past $60. They don't earn any more.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I realize that. The increased cost would have to be borne at the present time 100 per cent by the province.

Mr. S. Smith: There is no cost.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, there is. When one applies that across the whole of the system—and I think the changes that are desirable ought to be applied to single parents as well as the handicapped—the costs are very high, if they have to be borne solely by the province with no cost-sharing from the federal government.

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: Those answers are unusually long but I will allow one more supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The questions are complex.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I understand—if the Leader of the Opposition doesn't—what the minister is saying. But considering this was a matter that was included in the Throne speech, the matter of eliminating the work disincentives, the 75 per cent tax-back rate, and because of the incredible injustice that it inflicts on social assistance recipients, may I ask the minister to arrange a meeting as quickly as possible with Mr. Graftey and Mr. Crombie to resubmit the proposals, which he was kind enough to share with us last week, and try to get a speedy decision out of his colleagues in Ottawa? If he cannot get a speedy decision out of them, will he proceed on his own initiative, because it is a matter of incredible urgency that this work disincentive be removed from our social assistance programs?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the honourable member that that communication has already gone forward. Secondly, the possibility of a unilateral act by the province is under active consideration. Obviously, because of the financial implications, it is not something with which I can proceed without careful consultation with my colleagues.

Mr. McClellan: I can't believe that the minister's colleagues would turn him down.

Mr. S. Smith: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We spent 19 minutes on the first two questions.

Mr. S. Smith: I realize that, Mr. Speaker, but it was a rather long answer.

May I ask the minister, what do these additional costs involve? Does he not understand that for the vast majority of the blind persons—at least the 50 or 60 to whom I have spoken already—they stop work when they get to the $60 limit and do not continue working for 25-cent dollars? What is the enormous amount of money that it is going to cost the province to give these people additional incentives that will let them work and fill the orders which are coming in from various companies to these sheltered workshops?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I realize that it does sound complex, Mr. Speaker, and it is. But not everyone stops working exactly at the point where one makes $60. There are many people besides blind persons to whom this limitation applies, albeit at different levels, whether they are single handicapped persons or married handicapped persons with dependants, for example. The problem arises when those levels are changed. It also creates a broader eligibility in terms of earnings. More persons—not necessarily in the blind category but in other categories—may become eligible because of that change and, as a result, we may end up not getting cost-sharing if we proceed unilaterally.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. With respect to the irresponsible use of 2,4-D by the Northumberland and Newcastle Board of Education to control dandelions in school yards, will the Premier tell us whether he is aware of the numerous studies by bodies such as the medical association in British Columbia and the American Environmental Protection Agency showing that 2,4-D causes cancer and birth defects?

Could the Premier explain why, even after the board has been clearly violating the spraying guidelines laid down by the Ministry of the Environment, no stop order has been issued and no prosecution has been launched by the government?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Down with the dandelions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, these decisions were quite obviously made by the duly elected local boards—supported, I am sure, by members opposite in terms of principle.

Mr. McClellan: Local autonomy; that's the issue here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I was not participating in the discussions where the members opposite were a little critical of the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) for, in their view, apparently taking away some local decision-making responsibilities.

Mr. McClellan: Let's talk about 2,4-D and children. Let's talk about spraying 2,4-D in schools.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member have a supplementary?

Mr. McClellan: Just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I am directed by the Speaker, not the member, with great respect. I am trying to answer the member's leader. I did not know the member had such aspirations. I thought his party just went through a leadership convention fairly recently. Is the NDP contemplating a change?

Mr. Makarchuk: Would the Speaker bring the Premier to order?

An hon. member: The Premier's party needs a new leader.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that I am quite prepared to get the information for him. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), I think, has discussed this matter although not as it relates to the specific situations. The Minister of the Environment will be here on Monday next. He is busily engaged in one of our western provinces at a conference dealing with environmental issues. But I will be delighted to get this information for the honourable member, perhaps by tomorrow morning, but preferably on Monday.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the Premier has invoked local autonomy and since the Minister of the Environment says it will be a great educational experience for people in the area to work it out, is it the government's experience that if a school board invokes local autonomy it has the right to violate the Pesticides Act and use a cancer-causing chemical around children in order to control dandelions? If that is not the government's position, will it issue an order to stop the spraying before this weekend and to keep 2,4-D away from school yards until it can be positively shown that there is no harm to children's health?

Mr. Bounsall: To every board in the province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the leader of the New Democratic Party may be making an assumption. I haven't checked the provisions of the act, but it may just be that they are not in violation of the provisions of the act. That's just a possibility.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just sit back, relax, be comfortable for a moment or two. I did not suggest that any local school board or municipality had any right to act in violation of any provincial statute—or federal, for that matter—nor did I suggest—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Welcome back to the member for Sudbury East. I'm delighted to see him here.

Mr. Martel: It's great to be back.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How did you get in so quietly?

Mr. Martel: Right through the front door.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I see. I am quite prepared to check this for the member and try to have an answer tomorrow, but it may not be until Monday.

NAMING OF MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: Could I have the attention and the indulgence of the House for a moment?

On May 31 in the afternoon an incident took place in the House where the member for Sudbury East accused another member of telling an untruth. When I asked the honourable member to reconsider his position and when I asked him if he would reconsider withdrawing the remark, he said he would not. Before I had an opportunity to name him, he picked up his files and said, "No, I would not care to reconsider because I'm tired of this guy's lies."

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Now he's going to get thrown out.

Mr. Speaker: We are back to where we were, I say to the member for Sudbury East. If he will not withdraw it I have no alternative but to name him at this time.

Mr. Martel: Name me then.

Mr. Speaker: I have no alternative under the circumstances.

Mr. Martel: Nothing has changed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In the interests of consistency, I will have to indicate to the honourable member that he does not enjoy the privileges of a member of this House for the balance of this sitting.

Mr. Yakabuski: Can't he pick dandelions down there?

Mr. Martel: Nothing has changed from last week, and so I will leave again.

Mr. Martel withdrew from the chamber.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES (continued)

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the Premier not aware that the Northumberland and Newcastle Board of Education has been spraying school yards in winds of 25 miles per hour, when the ministry guidelines say clearly one should not spray in winds of more than seven miles per hour? Is the Premier aware the school board has been spraying school yards when children were present, when this is also a clear violation of the government's guidelines? In view of these facts, why won't the government act now to stop the spraying until it can establish whether 2,4-D is safe and establish that the guidelines are being observed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am pleased to sense the leader of the New Democratic Party is now in at least some doubt about his unequivocal statement that 2,4-D wasn't safe. My information is that the rather categorical statement he made in the initial question is perhaps not substantiated by fact. I said to the honourable member, and I can do no more than this, that I will take a look at the situation. I think it is something the Minister of the Environment should deal with on Monday, but if I can get some further information for the member for tomorrow morning, I shall endeavour to do so.

I must confess I do not know the exact velocity of the winds that were prevailing at that precise moment when 2,4-D was being used. I bow to the experience and the fact that the member was there himself and had a windometer there and was able to make that calculation. I honestly didn't know.

Mr. Conway: Allan Lawrence was giving a speech.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: In the Premier's attempt to arrive at an answer to the question by the leader of the third party, will he also assure the House in that answer that 2,4-D does not have any harmful effects on young children causing a symptom or disease called Reyes syndrome?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite prepared to pass on any information I have or will obtain. I long ago learned not, in any personal way, to give assurances that will relate to medical knowledge, et cetera, I don't personally possess. I am even reluctant to give opinion on legal matters, having been away from that profession for a number of years, unlike many of your colleagues, Mr. Speaker, although I could be provoked into doing that perhaps more readily than on medical matters.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the minister of industry and foreign ownership would take his seat, I have a question for him.

Not long ago the American magazine Barron's said the only US business that wouldn't be cordially welcomed to Canada is Murder Incorporated.

I have a question for the minister arising out of the fact that since January of this year, according to the records we have been able to monitor, 108 of the 117 applications before the Foreign Investment Review Agency for takeovers and the creation of foreign-owned businesses in Ontario have been approved.

Are we to assume Ontario is concurring with 92 per cent of the applications before FIRA that relate to Ontario and, given that record, can the minister explain the difference between the flexible approach to foreign investments which he described in this House just two days ago and the kind of open-door policy which seems to prevail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would say in response to the representative of the multinational unions that he may conclude a high proportion of the approvals granted by FIRA have some sort of approval in turn from the government of Ontario.

I should remind the member there is and has been for some years something called New Principles of International Business Conduct issued by the federal government in 1975, which set out, I suppose, 14 criteria. I will quote it. It sets out a form of good "principles of a good corporate behaviour which are recommended by the Canadian government." It goes on to list them.

One would hope FIRA, during that period of time, is reflecting those in its decisions. We make recommendations; obviously our recommendations have a high level of concern for the jobs being created by those firms, which is not to say, I might add, we trade off parts of our industry where we ought not to make that trade-off.

I should take this opportunity to state very firmly to this House that of our recommendations, while about 90 per cent of them are accepted by the federal government, 10 per cent are not. The key importance of that 10 per cent is that they revolve around instances in which we feel we do have strong Canadian industry that can survive, or weak Canadian industry which needs some protection against the type of influence and market control an American company or multinational company might bring in. I want to make it quite clear we are vigilant against the type of behaviour and the types of firms which will adversely affect Canadian industry.

On the other hand, there are a vast majority of FIRA applications which result in undertakings pursuant to our requests from those firms setting up here to begin sourcing in Canada for the first time to buy from all sorts of small and medium-sized Canadian-owned businesses. That is part of the undertaking. If we get those proper undertakings and the code of behaviour which the federal government issued in 1975 is adhered to, then the proper type of FIRA approval results in a substantial strengthening of smaller and medium-sized Canadian firms carrying on business in this country which need access to that new market which may be opening up in this country.

Mr. Speaker: We have spent 32 minutes and we have not finished the fourth question. This seems to happen each time certain cabinet ministers are asked questions. It's become quite obvious that if we're going to make maximum use of this one-hour-long question period and give everybody a fair opportunity to participate, I am going to have to prevail upon the ministers to cut down on their answers. If it requires a more detailed response, perhaps they could either table it or do it by way of a ministerial statement.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister explain how these foreign entries into the Ontario market will create so many jobs here in this province, according to what he has just said, when 35 of the firms that have been approved from January to May of this year were firms that are going to import products into Canada and will be in the import business, bringing in products made by people in other parts of the world, while less than that number are companies that will actually be carrying out manufacturing here in this country?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I was asked to explain, so I must do that with your forbearance. I'll try to be shorter than the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member was making a speech.

An hon. member: If the member gives us a speech, how else do you answer?

Mr. Speaker: What is the difference between a one-minute speech and a six-minute speech?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Five minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Five minutes, yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In a sentence the member is dead wrong. However, I will take a moment or two to respond. I would like to see the list which the member purports indicates all—I took it he was indicating all—of those firms were allowed into this country in that period of time. I suspect the list of 35 he has is just part of the number of firms that were allowed into this country.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a third of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's just part of it. There are many other firms that I know were approved by FIRA in that period of time which created other jobs directly in this province.

Second, I think before he talks about 35 firms which are importing, it might be instructive to look at where those firms located. I want to say quite frankly, there is a regional bias in favour of certain parts of this country and certain parts of this province that need jobs. FIRA and this government were a little more lenient in terms of allowing jobs into those communities than we were in other communities. Northern and eastern Ontario, I would think, particularly appreciate that consideration.

Finally, I might add that the mere fact a firm is importing some of its products or all of its products into this country does not automatically mean there isn't a great deal of work created for other Canadian people. For example, where a product is imported, there is substantial pre-delivery work to be done in many cases—shipping, packing and distribution. Provided we have undertakings with regard to the sources of those materials and services, then we do have Canadian jobs created.

PECHE ISLAND

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Is the minister aware that Peche Island in the Detroit River at Lake St. Clair presents a rare opportunity for a park in an urban environment, accessible by public transportation and yet not isolated from the city, and that its proximity to population and the island's great natural characteristics provide a tremendous recreational and educational potential? What plans does the minister have for that island since the government drew up a master plan in 1973?

Mr. Makarchuk: They are going to put an airport on it.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I recall very well a very pleasant visit there with the honourable member several years ago. As he says, it is a great recreational area and a very scenic area and it has great potential.

Mr. Conway: Try to preserve our Essex county Tories.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I'd be pleased to keep the member up to date on what has happened since then.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that natural erosion may completely destroy the island or substantially destroy it unless action is taken fairly shortly?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I'd be pleased to consider that. We will look into it.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Since this park is in my riding and I've written the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) several times about it, I'd like to ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development when he is looking at Peche Island to keep in mind that an investment in that island would assist in diversifying the economy of Windsor, which right now is totally based on the auto industry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Thanks to this government, not thanks to you.

Mr. Cooke: To expand the economy in Windsor into tourism would be very important. The government paid half a million dollars for that island, and it's about time it was developed for the use of the public, not just for those who can afford boats.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I will be pleased also to consider the honourable member's suggestion.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question of the Premier. I wonder if the Premier would reconsider his position that the Rolphton reactor should start up as soon as the current leak can be plugged if I provide him with Hydro figures showing that the tritium emissions from that reactor, which is only a 20-megawatt reactor, have recently been as high as the total tritium emissions from the four reactors at Pickering which produce 2,400 megawatts of electricity?

Hon. Mr. Davis: My understanding involves two matters: First, there may be some discussion of this next week. Second, I find some difficulty in the concept of a group of people in this Legislature—and I am not in any way minimizing our collective wisdom or insight into some of these issues—putting ourselves in the position of making a determination I think is highly technical in nature and requires a great deal of knowledge and understanding and expertise. I confess to the honourable member I don't pretend to have this, and, with respect, I think that may apply to a number of other members of this House.

When we have, in terms of the law and in practice, a control agency that has the responsibility for the licensing and the safety of these plants, for us to assume that responsibility in their stead, which is really what the member is asking in this question, I think is a very serious matter. I am concerned about safety, I am concerned about what policies develop in terms of the use of nuclear energy, but I think we should be reluctant in this House to put ourselves in the position of acting as a control agency or licensing authority when, with respect, I don't think we have the expertise or the competence to come to those sorts of judgements. That's what the Atomic Energy Control Board is for. I would suggest that is the logical and proper position to take.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I would like to ask the Premier, now that it's quite clear to everybody in Ontario that Rolphton is the rattletrap of the Ontario Hydro system, if he doesn't think it would be perfectly reasonable to keep that plant, which runs at an economic loss and is useful only in terms of training Ontario Hydro personnel, closed down until there is a public examination of documents which have not been publicly available before?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think this matter has been discussed here in the House and I gather maybe there will be an occasion to discuss it even further. I don't pretend to describe Rolphton the way the member for Carleton East describes it. I don't even think the members opposite who have some points of view—I am not sure the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) would express that point of view—

Ms. Gigantes: That's quite relevant. That's quite relevant.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member for Renfrew North believe that Rolphton is the—how did the member describe Rolphton?

An hon. member: The Yakabuski Tinkertoy.

Ms. Gigantes: The rattletrap.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The rattletrap, is it, of the Hydro system? That is certainly not the point of view conveyed by the mayor of Deep River and many other constituents of the member for Renfrew North. I know the member for Carleton East has the expertise to make that sort of judgement; I confess I haven't.

I think the relevant issue here surely is who has the responsibility, in terms of the competence and expertise, for the protection, licensing and control of nuclear plants. That happens to rest with the Atomic Energy Control Board. If they say it is wrong to open, or if they have reservations, heavens above, Ontario Hydro will accept that judgement; they always have. They are the people who have to make these determinations.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Agreeing with the Premier that there is unlikely to be anyone in this House with the technical expertise to grasp a priori all these nuclear energy matters, would the Premier nonetheless not wish to reflect on the question, in the aftermath of Three Mile Island and given the recent suggestions by the Science Council of Canada? Would he not like to reflect on the question of having a regulatory agency that actually has open hearings?

Does he not recognize that it is not the policy of the Atomic Energy Control Board to hold public hearings of an open nature? Does he not also recognize that the time perhaps has come to have on the regulatory authority some representation from people who are not entirely involved in what you might call the nuclear industry itself? Given that a different kind of more impartial regulatory agency with open hearings does not exist at the moment, does the Premier not recognize some need to bring that about? Does he not see that perhaps the select committee, for example, is a place where an open hearing can be heard, where not only the technocrats and the experts make decisions for the people, but the people's representatives at some point have something to say about it, as well?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, trying to abide by your suggestion of a few moments ago that there were really probably three questions included in the one, and I also think, with respect, the Leader of the Opposition has to draw some distinction—

Mr. McClellan: Try answering one of them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I think the concept of establishing "a select committee" to hear members of the public—

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to be sorry when Joe brings in freedom of information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I get very confused. The member for Carleton East interrupts me. I always get nervous when she interrupts; I become totally inhibited when she interrupts.

Mr. Conway: Just pretend it is Bette in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want to correct the member, but really, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited happens to own that plant at Rolphton and I am sure she is aware of that. It is not owned by Ontario Hydro.

Ms. Gigantes: You are right. Ontario Hydro are the licensees.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought just to add to her storehouse of information that the member would like that piece of relevant knowledge.

Dealing with the issue of a select committee, I have no objection to some mechanism whereby members of the public have an opportunity to express points of view, but I think really the Leader of the Opposition is in some respects contradicting what he said earlier. The concept of having the AECB in some situations—perhaps not in all—available for public input, as the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) has suggested as it relates to Rolphton, there would be some merit, and I think he has had some communication, that AECB would be prepared to meet with citizens or have presentations from citizens with respect to this issue.

But, one gets back to the same problem, to the two concepts the Leader of the Opposition suggested. One is AECB, in some situations, having public input; that is one concept. A select committee, again, could listen to people, and perhaps make some overall judgements, but when it comes down to the actual determination as to the licensing or the operational safety of a particular nuclear plant, I really think in our system it is better to have that responsibility resting with an authority and not with a standing or select committee of this House.

As I say, I am as anxious as anyone to see that there be public information and public understanding, but at the same time somebody has to assume the responsibility and I really think a select committee of this Legislature is not that sort of vehicle.

LIQUOR REGULATIONS

Mr. Pope: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Could the minister advise the House as to what will be the policy for the issuance of permits for the consumption of alcoholic beverages, in view of the various arrangements that are being made by clubs and organizations throughout Ontario for the celebration of Canada's birthday?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I also had a private query from the member for Yorkville. I have signed a regulation which will treat July 1—

Mr. Conway: Yorkville? Yorkdale? Try again.

Mr. Makarchuk: It sounds like a new constituency.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yorkdale? Sorry, Yorkview? Well, Mr. Young, anyway. He has been here a long time.

I have signed a regulation that will treat July 1 which is a Sunday, as an ordinary day for purposes of the Liquor Act, so a special occasion permit will allow the consumption of alcohol from noon to 1 a.m. on July 2, and in terms of licensed premises the special 50-50 food-liquor ratio that is normally applicable on Sundays will not apply.

In order to avoid a supplementary from the member for Brantford, there has already been a regulation signed concerning November 11 of this year, Remembrance Day, so that veterans' clubs will enjoy the same privilege.

[3:30]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Laughren: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: In his response to the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the Minister of Industry and Tourism stated that there was a strong regional bias in Foreign Investment Review Agency approvals of foreign investment and foreign takeovers. I know the minister would want brought to his attention and to that of the members of the House that we were misled, in that 68 of the 108 approvals were for companies in Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify the record: I did not mislead the House. Of course a lot of applications come into Metropolitan Toronto. The information the member has brought to the attention of the House is not the total picture. What I was saying was that many of the applications in areas that need the employment very badly would be approved and looked favourably upon by our government, differently from the way we would look on applications in areas which do not need the—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For example, we look very favourably upon applications in Sudbury, because we want to assist Sudbury in any way we can. The member may think otherwise.

ALCOHOLISM TREATMENT

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. This matter concerns Serenity House of Quinte, which is located in the city of Belleville. As the minister knows, this is a recovery home dedicated to the care, counselling and rehabilitation of persons related to the abuse of alcohol.

In my letters to the Minister of Community and Social Services, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker), I have expressed that this home may be forced to close if it is not given some type of financial assistance. This will result in some 250 individuals losing the use of facilities, with some of them being forced to return to jails, hospitals and other institutions.

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister agree?

Mr. O'Neil: Can the minister tell me whether he has made a decision to assist them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the situation with respect to Serenity House. It is my understanding that the Minister of Correctional Services has indicated the possibility of a contractual relationship with respect to part of the operation of Serenity House, which I trust will be of some assistance.

A senior person on my staff has been in communication with the director of Serenity House, I believe, to discuss the possibility of some assistance for the residential component through the hostel program, which would require some involvement by the municipality; through that, we can fund up to 80 per cent of $14.50 a day, which may help with respect to the residential component.

I understand part of the problem they may be facing is that a number of their programs do not fall within any of these categories; so that in so far as we are able to assist them we will be willing to explore those possibilities with them. There may still be parts of their program for which they may have to turn to the community to try to get some on-going voluntary support.

ACCIDENT BLACKSPOTS

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. The minister will no doubt agree that one means by which the death and injury toll on Ontario highways can be reduced is through the redesign of stretches of highway that have been identified by the select committee on highway safety as black spots.

I wonder if the minister can tell the House what percentage of the 270 deaths that occurred on Ontario roads in the first three months of this year happened on those so-called black spots.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I cannot tell the honourable member that right offhand. I shall try to obtain that information for him.

Mr. Philip: Has the minister given any thought to establishing a program to inform drivers of the locations of these black spots?

Can the minister inform the House whether he or his cabinet colleagues have compared the benefits of an enhanced black-spot-improvement program with the new highway law-enforcement program announced by the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), which his office informs us will cost in the vicinity of $3.5 million?

Hon. Mr. Snow: First of all, I will have to relook at the select committee's definition of a black spot and give consideration to the honourable member's suggestion.

GM SETTLEMENTS

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I would like to question the minister about the problem of the Chevrolet engines in Oldsmobile cars. In view of the fact two other provinces have settled with the owners on the basis of $200 compensation plus extended warranties, is the ministry and is the minister prepared to recommend this type of settlement? What will be happening to the consumers in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In conjunction with the Attorney General of this province (Mr. McMurtry), who must be consulted before such an arrangement could be consummated, we are not going to file the mandatory consents General Motors wants.

The history of this particular problem, Mr. Speaker, you will recall, was that people in good faith bought Buicks—the Century, the Regal or the Skylark models—with LM1 or LG3 engines; the Delta 88 model with an LM1 or an L65 engine, or a Pontiac Ventura or Ventura SJ equipped with an LG3 engine. They thought they were buying either a Buick, an Oldsmobile or a Pontiac engine. They weren't. General Motors deceived them. It stuck a Chevrolet engine in there.

General Motors now wants to make things good. They're not just offering $200. It also includes a 36-month special mechanical performance certificate and reimbursement for some actual expenses. However, in return for that, General Motors wants the Attorney General of this province to sign a modified release form. The Attorney General of this province, and up until a few days ago the Attorneys General of the other nine provinces, refused to do this, because it would be giving General Motors a special consideration not available to anybody else.

For reasons best known to themselves, three provinces—Quebec, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island—signed that form. In any negotiations this ministry has had with General Motors, we have consulted with the Attorney General of this province and we have been advised he will not sign that release form for General Motors, so General Motors, before it gets settled in the province of Ontario, is going to have to come up with something better. After all, it deceived the public.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Minister, that's all very well, but in the meantime people in three other provinces have received a settlement and people in Ontario have not. Can you indicate to this House when the people of Ontario can expect to get some settlement and some resolution of this matter?

Hon. Mr. Drea: As the Minister of Consumer Relations in this province, I am not going to sell the consumer down the river for the sake of expediency. The matter will be settled, it will be settled very equitably. General Motors, notwithstanding its worldwide reputation or its immensity, is not going to dictate to the province of Ontario how it is going to settle up with people it deliberately deceived.

Mr. Breithaupt: Can the minister tell us approximately how many of these particular vehicles are in this circumstance of the wrong engine?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can't. I can get that information for the honourable member. The reason I indulged the members' generosity to read the engine numbers is we have a feeling a number of people have not yet submitted claims because they are still not aware of the fact they were peddled a Chevrolet engine when they bought an Oldsmobile or a Buick.

Mr. Swart: Are we to assume from what the minister said that he is going to insist that in fact they replace the motors with the type of motors that were supposed to be in the car the first time?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, Mr. Speaker, we are not putting terms and conditions on this. General Motors has made an offer to the people for whom we have been negotiating. We—and I emphasize we, because the Attorney General is involved—do not feel it is an offer we will endorse by the Attorney General's signing that release form. What General Motors does to persuade the Attorney General of this province to give me consent I know not, but it is going to have to sweeten the offer.

Mr. Makarchuk: They'll make you an offer you can't refuse.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, it won't be an offer I can't refuse. I will just draw one more point to the attention of the honourable members. None of the negotiations that my ministry and the Attorney General are carrying on affect the right of the owners of these cars to take direct action in court, if they so choose.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Premier. The Premier is aware of the grave situation in the United States with regard to their energy crisis—gasoline and diesel oil shortage—and rising energy costs, particularly heating oil, and the phasing out of United States energy control, known as decontrol. Is he aware of the following statement by the president of Texaco Canada Incorporated to the shareholders?

“Canada presently has about 400,000 barrels a day spare refining capacity, most of which is located in the Atlantic provinces and in Ontario. It is hoped that the Canadian and United States governments will make every effort to remove the current obstacles to increased exports of refined products to the United States. There are advantages to be gained on both sides.” I suppose that comment means they want to capitalize on the energy shortages in the United States.

Can the Premier indicate to this legislative body what steps his government is prepared to initiate to guarantee sufficient supply of petroleum fuels and home-heating oil for residents of Ontario? Also, what steps is the government initiating to ensure that pricing guidelines are maintained by a government agency in the interest of Ontario consumers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the very short question from the honourable member. It might be more helpful if he were to put it on the Order Paper, so I would have an opportunity to, firstly, digest the observations by the head of Texaco and, secondly, to see how his question relates to the observations of that particular individual.

The policy of this government is consistent and well known. Our policy has been to endeavour to—

Mr. Conway: Sell Petrocan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, Sean. You be careful. I'll remind you of your policy—world price yesterday, higher prices for the consumers of gasoline and heating oil. The Liberal Party policy is tremendous.

Mr. Conway: I will take bets you will sell it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wasn't going to become provocative this afternoon.

Mr. S. Smith: You're sensitive about Petro-Canada.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sensitive about anything, other than those responsibilities I have as Premier.

Mr. S. Smith: Would you sell it or keep it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm just delighted that others have other responsibilities, and I don't have to resolve those issues.

An hon. member: How about changing the embassy around?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, in the answer to my question. I think the answer basically—and this is subject to a careful assessment of the question—I think the answer to the latter part of the question probably would be “yes,” if I recalled every part of it. I think probably yes.

If the member wants to put it on the Order Paper so I can get that more definitively, I will be delighted to endeavour to do so.

Mr. Haggerty: It's in Hansard now.

REPORTS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Mr. Lawlor from the select committee on the Ombudsman presented the committee's sixth report and moved its adoption.

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps before moving the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to say a few words about this committee and in particular about the report now before us. Copies are being distributed to the members' boxes at the post office and copies have been delivered to the press gallery.

The central point is outlined in an obituary column at the beginning of the report. It was done deliberately in black, and it reads as follows: “The purpose of this ‘special report’ is to focus the Legislature's attention solely on outstanding matters wherein recommendations of either or both of the Ombudsman and this committee have been ignored or refused.

“It is the committee's intention that its recommendations in this report will be individually debated and voted upon by the Legislature. Only when that has been done, will the Ombudsman's function have been completed. Only when that has been done, will this committee's order of reference have been fulfilled.”

[3:45]

On motion by Mr. Lawlor the debate was adjourned.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Walker tabled the reports of the Public Institutions Inspection Panel and the Ombudsman on the Guelph Correctional Centre disturbance of May 7, 1979.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the following substitutions be made: on the social development committee, Mr. Turner for Mr. Rowe; on the general government committee, Mr. Rowe for Mr. Turner.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that notwithstanding any standing order of the House, the standing resources development committee may meet tonight and the House may meet to consider legislation in the resources policy field.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LOCAL SERVICES BOARDS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bernier moved first reading of Bill 122, An Act to provide for the Establishment of Local Services Boards.

Motion agreed to.

DURHAM MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved first reading of Bill 123, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Durham.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this bill dissolves the 12 existing commissions in the region of Durham and establishes new hydro-electric commissions for the municipalities of Ajax, Brock, Newcastle, Pickering, Scugog, Uxbridge and Whitby and a public utilities commission for the city of Oshawa.

This bill is also based on the principles of the Hogg committee and is similar to the previous restructuring legislation.

All customers in Ajax, Oshawa and Whitby will be supplied with power by the new commission no later than January 1, 1980. As in previous restructuring bills, there is a provision for earlier implementation as a result of agreement between a new commission and Ontario Hydro.

The new commissions in Brock, Scugog, Uxbridge and Newcastle will supply power to their present municipal hydro customers. Existing customers of Ontario Hydro in Brock, Newcastle, Scugog and Uxbridge will continue to be supplied with power by Ontario Hydro until the council of the area municipality, with the consent of Ontario Hydro, directs the new commission to supply power in all areas of the municipality. In the interim, the councils are required to review the distribution and supply of power at least once every three years.

For the new Pickering Hydro-Electric Commission, the date for the commencement of the distribution and supply of power and for other related matters will be six months after the commencement date for the other new commissions, and the term of the first commissioners of the Pickering Hydro-Electric Commission will extend to November 30, 1982. This additional six-month period is to ensure that the utility will have sufficient time to establish its new operation.

The control and management of the bus transportation system of the city of Oshawa is transferred to the commission established by the bill for the city of Oshawa.

The basic principles of this bill, which are consistent with previous restructuring legislation, have been reviewed by the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association, the Association of Major Power Consumers in Ontario, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee.

This bill was thoroughly reviewed by members of the correlation team and other local authorities in the Durham region. Discussions have also been held with members representing ridings in that region. On behalf of the government, I wish to express my appreciation to the correlation team for its work.

MONTCREST SCHOOL ACT

Mrs. Scrivener moved first reading of Bill Pr14, An Act to revive the January School as Montcrest School.

Motion agreed to.

TOWN OF AURORA ACT

Mr. G. Taylor, on behalf of Mr. Hodgson, moved first reading of Bill Pr15, An Act respecting the town of Aurora.

Motion agreed to.

CITY OF OTTAWA ACT

Mr. Nixon, on behalf of Mr. Roy, moved first reading of Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to.

TRUSTEES OF WINDSOR GROVE CEMETERY ACT

Mr. B. Newman moved first reading of Bill Pr16, An Act respecting the Trustees of the Windsor Grove Cemetery.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Isaacs moved first reading of Bill 124, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Isaacs: The purpose of this bill is to require that any vacancies arising on a municipal council in the first 11 months of the term of that council shall be filled by a vote of the electors. In a case where a vacancy occurs with fewer than 13, but more than eight months of the term remaining, council may choose to hold a by-election or may make an appointment. With fewer than eight months remaining, the bill continues the present requirements that the vacancy may only be filled by appointment.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: I wish to table the answers to questions 181, 193, 196, 198, 199 and 202 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2676.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Pursuant to standing order 13, I wish to indicate to the House the business for the remainder of this week and next week.

This afternoon we take into consideration the ballot items standing in the names of the members for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and Carleton (Mr. Handleman). This evening we have Bill 17 in committee; Bill 46, second reading and committee as required; Bill 93 in committee; then Bills 80, 81 and 82, second reading and committee as required.

On Friday morning the House will sit in committee of supply to continue the consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

On Monday, June 11, the House is in committee of supply to continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

On Tuesday afternoon, June 12, until 6 p.m. we will take into consideration, as time allows, Bill 52, second reading and committee as required; Bill 8, in committee; Bill 89, second reading; and Bills 90, 99, and 89 in committee. In the evening, we will turn to Bill 93 in committee, if it is not finished this evening. Then second reading, and committee as required, on the following bills: 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113.

On Wednesday, June 13, the resources development, general government and justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, June 14, in the afternoon, we have the ballot items standing in the names of the members for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) and Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor).

On Thursday evening, June 14, we resume the adjourned debate on the motion for the adoption of the interim report of the select committee on Hydro affairs, dated May 24, 1979.

On Friday morning, June 15—and I would draw members' attention to this because it is a bit of a change in our routine—we will do legislation. We will take into consideration, as time permits, Bills 100, 101, 103, 114, 104, 116, and 117.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Lupusella moved second reading of Bill 98, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Mr. Lupusella: I would like to thank the House for the opportunity to rise in debate on my bill today. It is an important bill because it gives me the opportunity to present views about those working places in the province affected by electronic surveillance. In my opinion it is time this government moved, through legislation, to keep electronic surveillance under control instead of having electronic surveillance controlling the work place.

The bill is a very simple one but it is extremely important because it deals with a basic human right, the right to work in dignity. Freedom from constant electronic surveillance in the work place is essential if we are going to maintain the right of privacy, the right to work in dignity and the furtherance of progressive labour-management relations. That is what this bill is all about.

The purpose of this bill can be stated quite simply by referring to section 1(15)(a) which says: "No employer shall install or operate an electronic surveillance device or system in the place of employment to record or monitor the work and the other activities of its employees unless the installation and the operation of such device or system is reasonably necessary, the proof of which lies upon the employer, for the protection of the health and the safety of the employees."

As we are all aware, Mr. Speaker, the stimulus to this bill obviously arises out of the situation at the Puretex Knitting Company Limited, a situation which first came to the attention of this Legislature in the fall of 1976. It was only last week that the successful resolution of the problem at Puretex was achieved after a struggle by the workers and their union which lasted more than two years, two and a half years. This bill, Mr. Speaker, if adopted, will ensure that never again in Ontario will workers or their unions be faced with the same indignities and intrusions which confronted the workers of Puretex.

It might be useful for members to hear some of the comments of the arbitrator in the Puretex case. Mr. S. R. Ellis has concluded that: "The full-time use of closed-circuit television systems for constant observation of the work performance and the conduct of employees in an industrial setting would be widely regarded, I believe, as seriously offensive in human terms. I'm certainly of that view."

He goes on to say: "It is difficult to conceive of circumstances in which consideration of efficiency would justify such an affront to human dignity. Any use of cameras that observe employees at work is intrinsically seriously objectionable in human terms. The use of the cameras in the production areas of the plant cannot be justified."

This comment, Mr. Speaker, paralleled that of an arbitrator in a US case in 1965, Mr. H. T. Bellamy, who concluded that: "The device . . . is not only personally repugnant to the employees but it has such an inhibiting effect as to prevent the employees from performing their work with confidence and ease. Every employee has occasion to pause in the course of his work to take a breather, to scratch his head, to yawn or otherwise be himself without affecting his work. An employee, with reason, would hesitate at all times to so behave if his every action is being recorded on TV." He goes on by stating: "To have the workers constantly televised is to me reminiscent of the era depicted by Charlie Chaplin in Modern Times and it constitutes in my mind an affront to the dignity of a man."

The Sunday Star of November 19, 1978: in commenting upon this case, the editors point out the distinction between the work place and the prison should be preserved.

There may be those who argue employers should have the right to use electronic surveillance to enable them to be more productive and efficient. First, it is obvious the largest and the most efficient enterprises do not use such devices but, more importantly, we must recognize the principle that society can and must place limits on the authority of employers to pursue their activities. Indeed, the Legislature has done it many times.

We don't allow employers to pay below the minimum wage in order to be more efficient and profitable. We do not allow employers to set working hours arbitrarily in the name of efficiency. We do not allow employers to practice discrimination in order to be more efficient. In a similar manner, we cannot allow employers the right to subject their employees to the indignity and intrusion of electronic surveillance.

It may be useful to review some of the history of this issue. It was on November 10, 1976, that I first brought this matter to the attention of the government and, in particular, the Minister of Labour. At that time I stated:

"My particular concern is that the use of television monitors, if it won't be prevented by your ministry, might be expanded in all industries, and they are going to keep under control all the workers in any factory . . . I am not sure when this particular issue is going to be dealt with by the Ontario Human Rights Commission, but I strongly recommend that this kind of action be prevented and we stop the expansion of these closed-circuit television monitors, because there is no need for this. We are going to affect psychologically those workers who are employed in any sector of the industry in our province, and I don't think it is going to be worthwhile to have such a system to control what the workers are doing."

The Minister of Labour at that time replied:

"I was very much distressed by the Orwellian overtones of this kind of behaviour. It's tantamount, I think, to directing immigrants and workers in this province to live in a specific place, as well as to be supervised by closed-circuit television or anything of that sort. It really is rather frightening."

"If that union is going to make application to the human rights commission, you can be sure that it will be dealt with expeditiously."

That is what the then Minister of Labour stated on November 10, 1976, after I raised this particular issue during the estimates of the Ministry of Labour.

As we all know, the matter was not dealt with expeditiously; in fact, it was resolved in quite another forum. Despite the previous minister's concern and the concern expressed by the present minister about oppressive electronic surveillance, there has not been any initiative by this government to deal with the pernicious violation of human privacy and dignity. In the absence of any such initiative, the need for this bill is quite obvious.

I am sure that the principle of this bill will have the support of the Liberal Party and its leader, who had introduced a similar bill and made the following comments in the House on December 7, 1978:

"Will [the minister] come forward with a simple amendment making it illegal to have that type of surveillance or, at the very least, demanding that a permit be obtained proving that it is needed for security, safety or something of that kind and get rid of this oppressive productivity surveillance? Why doesn't he come forward and move an amendment? He will know he has the support of both the other parties."

Again, the leader of the official opposition party stated in committee on November 29, 1978:

"There is simply too much dehumanization in modern industry, by the very nature of modern industry, to introduce this kind of dehumanization of the work place. Taking advantage of these immigrant women who are desperate for work—who are paid so little anyhow—and treating them with such indignity, simply has to stop.

"I don't pretend that I am somehow or other a white knight rushing in on the issue. I know darned well that this has been a real thorn in the side of the New Democrats who have raised it time and again. I have made my views on this known on occasion. But both opposition parties want to halt this."

That is what the leader of the Liberal Party stated on November 29, 1978.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think there is no doubt that the employer takes away the worker's human dignity by using electronic surveillance. It is clear that such practices have been used just to increase production in the work place. I believe, and my party believes, that the employer uses electronic surveillance as a psychological tool, making the worker believe he is always being watched in order to increase production. Therefore, in my opinion, electronic surveillance has no place in a free society such as ours. It is a fundamental civil liberty that no worker should feel he is spied upon by electronic surveillance.

Finally, electronic surveillance is at the beginning of its era; we need legislation now, before the situation deteriorates to the point where we cannot control it in the work place any more. By enacting legislation now, the employers of this province are going to have practical, factual, clear guidelines of what they must do in relation to this particular issue of electronic surveillance in the work place.

In my opinion, if the government is not receptive to this particular issue at this point in time, it will be too late; the electronic-device era will have expanded and I am sure it will lead us, in the province of Ontario, to a police state in the work place and nothing else. In view of the indisputable principles involved, I am hoping all members of the House will support my private member's bill for the sake of human dignity and civil rights.

As I stated in my press release of May 18, 1979: "If the bill passes, working people will have won a significant victory. They will be free to work without electronic scrutiny. They will be treated like mature human beings with dignity, and not as slothful criminals to be controlled by any possible means. Surely in 1979, Mr. Speaker, in Ontario, this is a basic right which can be supported by all members of the Legislature."

With such spirit lighting my private member's bill, I am urging the government and the official opposition party to pass this legislation now, before the problem becomes uncontrollable in the province of Ontario, in order that we indicate clear legislation to employers at a time when electronic surveillance in the province of Ontario is, as far as I am concerned, not widely used.

[4:15]

Again—and I want to emphasize this—as I stated in the course of my presentation—electronic surveillance is at the initial stage of its use and this government must feel a responsibility to deal with the problem now before it is too late.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member has two and a half minutes remaining. I gather he wishes to reserve it.

We generally rotate and I am looking to the government benches for a speaker. We generally go clockwise.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As Minister of Labour and as the minister intimately involved in bearing some responsibility for industrial relations, human rights issues and the quality of working life, it is really only quite natural I have an intense interest in the matter the member has raised. In his remarks, he was commenting on the interest that the Minister of Labour should have in these matters and I hope he will agree the legislation this ministry has introduced during the past eight to nine months has indeed shown that commitment to matters relating to the work place and to workers in the work place.

I commend the member for bringing this particular issue before the House at this time. It is rather timely, as a matter of fact, since the arbitrator's award in this issue came out just last week.

I recall the debates and the discussions that we held last December, both in committee and in the House, with regard to that Puretex case, and I am sure the member for Dovercourt recalls that all members shared a great degree of interest—more than interest—in the plight of the people involved in the plant at Puretex. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the parties in that dispute were able to reach a collective agreement which eliminated the particular camera which faced the women's washroom. The matters relating to other cameras were to be dealt with by an arbitrator, and that has now been done.

The recent decision of S. R. Ellis that the member has referred to ordered the removal of those cameras directed at the production areas of the company, but did approve the continued use of those cameras near the loading dock, the storage area and the parking lot.

I have no personal knowledge at the moment as to the current status of the decision in terms of whether or not there is agreement as to its implementation, and for that reason—I am sure the member will understand—I don't wish to comment further on that decision. However, the manner in which the issues were finally addressed by all parties, and the arbitrator's very careful definition of acceptable and unacceptable cameras, do serve to illustrate the complexity of the electronic surveillance issue in its broader context.

In my view it is clear that electronic surveillance in the work place can't be considered in isolation. There are other kinds of surveillance, both in and out of the work setting, and together they raise the whole issue of the individual's right to privacy within our society in general and not just in the work place.

I think it's worth remembering that there are great varieties of supervision. There is the kind we face daily here for an hour to an hour and a half. There is the kind that citizens face on occasion with the police. There is the kind that students face with teachers. There is the kind that husbands face with wives, and vice versa. Often in those situations privacy and the right to privacy is a very contentious issue.

Technology has produced an essential qualitative change in the nature of supervision. It is now possible to replace the human observer with an electronic unit and—I agree with the member—the potential for both overt and covert observation in many circumstances increases enormously.

However, we're speaking today particularly about surveillance in the work place and, as with most issues which have industrial relations implications, surveillance, whether traditional or electronic, depends for its acceptability on the delicate balance of employees' rights against employers' rights. On the one hand there is what I view to be—and what the member clearly views to be—the right to privacy and the right to dignity in all aspects of life. On the other hand there are certain rights an employer has, such as, for example, the right to have his business secure from theft.

It's well documented that some establishments encounter increasing and continuing problems with theft. The member will recall the Ellis decision. Ellis referred situations where, in the face of excessive theft, surveillance might be warranted.

One survey of selected Ontario industries suggested one firm in seven experienced serious problems with internal theft and sabotage. From their point of view they might legitimately require a number of forms of surveillance from time to time to try and deter theft.

In some cases, employees themselves are concerned about theft—for instance in the locker rooms, where their own personal property is involved. This is a further complicating factor with the bill the member has introduced; it doesn't allow for that particular kind of surveillance. There is also the matter of inadvertent surveillance of the work place—for example in a bank, where scanners aimed solely at security also inadvertently scan the work place and the workers there.

These interests must be considered in relation to the values basic to our society, which hold that the individual enjoys freedom, the right to privacy, and human dignity in other aspects of his life.

As an enthusiastic proponent of the concept of a quality working life, I am disturbed by actions which imply that citizens in their employment relations deserve less respect than they do in other aspects of their life.

Obviously, the balance is difficult to achieve and the member knows that. And it may change from time to time, depending on the extent to which the rights of another are endangered.

The bill introduced by the member for Dovercourt fails to recognize either the complexity of the issue or the legislative imperatives which must be met. If, as a result of further deliberation, it is determined that legislation is required, a careful assessment will have to be made as to whether the Employment Standards Act is the proper route to go.

I don't say this critically, but let's not forget, Mr. Speaker, that under the Employment Standards Act an officer has the right to order the payment of wages, and under a prosecution there's a power to order a fine. But there is no power to correct a wrong. There is no power, for example, to issue a cease and desist order. Surely that's the very core of the issue that should be dealt with.

I submit to the member that the act he has selected for his amendment is really not the appropriate channel. There are, however, other legislative alternatives which I'm prepared to consider.

As I mentioned in this House on May 18, I have asked my ministry's research branch to undertake a study of the implications of electronic surveillance, examining its workplace application in the broader context of privacy I mentioned earlier.

I've also asked them to review relevant legislation in other jurisdictions and to consider the options open to us. I'm pleased to tell the member, in the House, that I have now received the first draft of that discussion paper and within the next two or three weeks I hope the final paper will be issued for discussion by all interested parties.

But let me put it in perspective. I agree with the member and with members of this House that pervasive and unrestricted electronic surveillance of the work place is oppressive and undesirable, unless there are specific reasons for it. And that's the complexity of the matter which I think the member's bill has failed to deal with.

I welcome the discussion my ministry's paper will receive and when I have had the benefit of the discussion of that paper, I will make a decision as to the appropriate route to take.

I'm not able to support the legislation that's being proposed today, but I commend the member for having the principle discussed.

Mr. Van Horne: I am again amazed, as I frequently am in this House, to hear the government defend its position of non-support in the private members' hour. I guess when I finish here as a member, I'll go back to school and try to learn a little bit more about what private members' hour is all about.

In private members' hour the Liberal Party generally votes according to the conscience of its members. Very seldom do we attempt to block anything, and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that in this instance, in speaking to this bill, I personally am pleased to support it. I am also pleased to indicate that when our caucus reviewed the business of this week practically all, if not all members, determined they too would be pleased to support Bill 98, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act.

Going back to my comments directed to the Minister of Labour, the member for York East, I have read Hansard from the committee debate last fall. I have read in Hansard the questions asked in the House by our leader and by members of the New Democratic Party and, in looking at the answers given by the minister, I find time and again an indication that he is concerned; that his ministry is concerned; that his staff is looking into it; that something will be done.

Mr. Lupusella: Three years have elapsed.

Mr. Van Horne: In spite of these assurances of some kind of action and concern, we have really heard nothing until this private member's bill which is being discussed today. That's not to suggest that something hasn't been done, because the minister has just said something is coming to us. We will be able to look at a paper. It's high time that we looked at a paper. It's high time something was done.

It's rather strange that the government reacts to this and lets us know that something is coming to us on the very day the bill is discussed. It's rather strange, too, that it would seem an arbitrator's decision has precipitated some kind of action from the government.

The government knew the problem was there. They professed to have some kind of concern for the dignity of the worker in the work place. But in my view they have shown darned little evidence of being anything more than verbally responsive until the heat was put on, by us, by the NDP or by some incident—again, we have to look at the Puretex situation—which, when bared and brought to the public scene, really does reflect the inhuman conditions under which some people in this province of ours are expected to work.

The minister made reference to a delicate balance between employees' rights and employers' rights. I don't find anything in this bill which would detract from the rights of an employer, and certainly at second reading level and in private member's hour we should be concerned with the principle. If we as members can't agree on the principle here, the principle of some kind of dignity, some kind of right for an employee, I would submit to you we're falling far short of the mark of what is expected of us as members of this Legislature.

I am pleased to support this bill. The leader of our party presented a similar bill, as was mentioned by the member for Dovercourt. I believe it was in December 1978. He presented it for this whole purpose of having it brought to the fore in principle; for the purpose of having the public become more aware; for the purpose of some discussion before it came to the floor of this chamber. I think it's fair to say, too, that the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) has, on more than one occasion, brought similar concerns to the House. This matter has been before us many, many times and it's time it was resolved.

We all know that second reading of a bill such as this does not necessarily mean it's going to be carved in stone. We know that. I have to ask, why is it then that an issue such as this has to be blocked, as apparently it will be through the determination of the government that wants to do things only its own way? I am not convinced that anything is going to be done, even with the paper coming to us. But maybe with the paper and with support for this bill, something will be done.

Thank you very much; I enjoy supporting this.

[4:30]

Mr. McClellan: I don't see the Minister of Labour in the House.

Mr. Lupusella: He has left.

Mr. McClellan: I suppose he considers it appropriate on an issue like this, to come in here and tell us he opposes the bill—I assume the implication is that he and the trained seals over there intend to block the bill—and then walk out without listening to the debate or the argument. He comes in here with his mind made up, gives us his veto and then he disappears.

I thought that might bring the Minister of Labour back. Why doesn't the minister come and take his seat and listen to the debate? Why doesn't he come and take his seat and listen to the debate on an issue like this, an issue which is a scandal in this community? It is a scandal in this community.

Mr. Lupusella: He should be ashamed of himself.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I gave it the attention it deserved.

Mr. McClellan: I had the opportunity to go out to the picket line during the strike. It was one of the coldest picket lines I have ever been on; I think it was the coldest picket line I was ever on. I was taken by the picket captain and the striking women to the front of the Puretex building and we peeked through the window into the president's office. We looked into the president's office and there was his desk. Right in front of his desk was a bank of nine television monitors, so this person could sit there in his proprietorial splendour and monitor, supervise and spy on his employees during the whole of his working day.

I don't know what kind of jollies he got out of that, but I will tell the minister what the community got out of that—a kind of outrage I can't recall on any other issue for a long time, perhaps not since the early attempts to reform the Workmen's Compensation Board in the late 1960s and early 1970s. I don't think there has been an issue so offensive to people in the New Canadian community in this city. I say that with as much urgency as I can convey.

It is not a complex issue. It is not a great, complex issue. It is a question of fundamental moral principles, of fundamental moral values, in the words of the arbitrator. The use of cameras to observe employees at work is intrinsically seriously objectionable in human terms. It is an affront to human dignity. It is. It is not complex, it is not a question of competing—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Who said it was?

Mr. McClellan: It is not complex. The minister said it was so complex this legislation failed to address the total complexity of the issue. That is a lot of rot.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I said there was a lot more to it than the issue raised.

Mr. McClellan: That is the kind of moral myopia that has allowed this issue to fester for almost three years. It was brought to the Ontario Human Rights Commission in November 1976 and it was brought to the attention of this Legislature the same month by my colleague from Dovercourt. It was prominently featured in the media in this community.

What did we get? What have we got now? Nothing. Not a damned thing. Not a damned thing from this government. All we have is the suggestion of the chairman of the human rights commission, Dr. Crittenden.

It is my feeling right now that when the union negotiates its contract it should negotiate that electronic surveillance be excluded. Leave it up to the worker to try to get these degrading devices out of the work place. Leave it up to the workers and their unions. See if they can do it.

The human rights commission showed what it would do over the course of two and a half years—absolutely nothing. I don't understand it. I am genuinely baffled. I asked myself what use is a human rights commission if it is so blind to such a fundamental human rights issue as the right to privacy, as the right to dignity in the work place and as the right to protection against electronic snooping that it is incapable of recommending even a board of inquiry to the Minister of Labour. They tried twice to grapple with this complex issue, this great conflicting set of moral principles. Rot.

Mr. Lupusella: Phoney excuse.

Mr. McClellan: They suffer from a moral myopia, which is as much a concern in the Ontario Human Rights Commission as the issue itself, if they can't see such a blatant misuse of power of one person against another, of Mr. Satok against his workers. And so it went on, as I have said, for two and a half years.

We brought it up last fall in the estimates of the Ministry of Labour. The minister said he had the evidence of the human rights commission before him and he would have to decide whether or not he would order a board of inquiry, but he didn't. He hasn't brought in his legislation. He is promising to study the issue because it is so complex. He has to consider the rights of the employer.

I say to the minister the rights of any employer do not extend to the use of electronic surveillance devices, except for the purposes set out in this bill, that is to protect health and safety. Let's remind ourselves that we're talking about immigrant women who are being victimized by this kind of degradation.

It's difficult for me to deal with this. I don't understand how the minister can be—and I say this to him as a friend—so complacent on this issue. He won't like those words and he won't like this speech, but he is acting in a way which gives communities great offence.

This is a very clear moral issue. It is an issue of such fundamental human importance and significance that I say to him he has no right to block this bill. We have given the government time to bring in its own legislation. We have given them two and a half years to act and they have not acted yet.

The arbitrator tells us there are other plants in this province using electronic surveillance devices. He makes reference to another textile mill. Guess who works in textile mills?

The minister has done nothing and he has threatened to veto this bill. I plead with the minister not to. Let this bill come to a vote

Let this bill go out to committee. Let this Legislature look at it and look at all of the issues. Let people from the communities who are so offended by electronic surveillance among the New Canadian work force come forward and give us their views.

What is the minister afraid of? There's nothing to fear in the democratic process, nothing to fear at all. The only thing we have to fear is those who would bury their heads in the sand and fail to deal with serious problems and stall as the previous Minister of Labour stalled for two years—and stall, if I may say so, to my friend the Minister of Labour, as he is stalling with his survey and his promise of a future look. Here is the look—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. McClellan: —and I urge him to let us pass this bill and deal with it.

Mr. Sterling: I realize how important this issue is to many of the people who are working in manufacturing plants and various other places. I don't think anyone in this Legislature would dispute the fact we should not only maintain but we should improve the quality of work life wherever we can.

I would also like to mention, Mr. Speaker, that I don't think anyone can dispute, in the short period of time the present Minister of Labour has occupied that post, he has been anything but sensitive to this kind of issue. His determination in bringing Bill 70 before this Legislature was not without trouble. I think he's indicated in his opening remarks that he has tried to address this issue to date, but there are certain problems he has outlined in his remarks and which I, also, see with this piece of legislation.

Take for instance, a small manufacturer who has an electronic surveillance camera on his loading door. Is that permitted under this piece of legislation? I think in the Puretex decision, it was indicated the employees were not so much concerned with the warehouse and storage areas as they were with the production areas.

I think the member for Dovercourt, who brought forward this piece of legislation, pointed out there doesn't seem to be widespread use of these electronic devices at this time.

Mr. Lupusella: That's why we have to act now. It's as simple as that.

Mr. Sterling: If that is the case, then surely we have time to look at the report which the Minister of Labour is to bring forward. Surely we have time to look at the complex situations that can arise as a result of this fairly simple statement within Bill 98.

I don't think anyone disputes the fact that the dignity of the worker must be maintained as a priority. I don't have any qualms about supporting that on a higher plane in terms of the property aspect which the employer has to maintain, but we have to face some problems.

What happens if theft is occurring and it is of substantial proportions? What does one do in those circumstances, especially when it happens in a smaller type of business? How can the employer adequately supervise in some circumstances large warehouses where he has no alternative than to go to some more modern way of protecting the property? Otherwise, he is in continuing problems with maintaining that business.

Mr. Lupusella: They have to demonstrate why they are using electronic surveillance. The bill is giving them such an option.

[4:45]

Mr. Sterling: The problem, as I see it and as I think the minister was trying to outline, is not a black-and-white issue, as perhaps the member for Bellwoods sees it. Nothing is black and white in business either. This must be looked at in terms of maintaining employment for these workers in the best possible circumstances. I don't mind placing the priority of the dignity of the worker in the highest plane and then taking these other things in a minority situation and trying to apply them to the situation.

Mr. Grande: That's what we're saying.

Mr. McClellan: Let's sit down and work out a bill, then.

Mr. Sterling: Let's sit down and work out a bill. I think that is exactly what the Minister of Labour wants to do.

Mr. Grande: The minister said in two years from now.

Mr. Sterling: It seems I cannot support this piece of legislation in its present status. It is trying to treat a subject which is far too complex, in terms of the variables that are involved, in a very simple way.

There are many other examples that can be brought forward. What do we do in terms of prisons? What do we do in terms of—

Mr. McClellan: We're not talking about prisons.

Mr. Sterling: It is a work place for someone. What does one do about the guards who are being electronically surveyed?

Mr. McClellan: That's a question of health and safety; it's a question of safety in prisons.

Mr. Sterling: What does one do about shoplifting in a retail store, where they have electronic surveillance? What do we do with all these matters? That is what I would like answered.

Mr. Handleman: You don't start with a flawed bill and make a good one out of it. You start with a good bill and make it better.

Mr. McClellan: No, send it to committee and we will do that.

Mr. Sterling: For these reasons, I cannot support this bill.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in support of this private member's bill introduced by the member for Dovercourt. The members in our party and our leader have also shown considerable concern about the setup of these cameras, and the matter has been raised on several occasions by our leader in questions to the Minister of Labour.

It is also my feeling and I would say that of the majority of our members that the setting up of these cameras take away from the rights of the employees of this factory. If they were installed in other factories or other work places they would do the same thing.

I think back to when I was an employer of a number of employees. I think it is much better to build up a relationship of trust with those people who are working for you or with you, to establish standards and to set patterns within a work place, rather than to have cameras that would seem to spy on those working for you.

We have heard the minister's comments that he proposes to bring in further information on this. But I think I feel the same way as members in our party and the members in the NDP—that it is a bit of a farce, when we have the private members' hour where we can introduce bills, and then these bills are voted down and not allowed to go to committee for discussion.

It is my feeling that if a lot of these private members' bills were allowed to go to committee stage we would have input from all three parties. If the minister feels the present bill is not suitable, in the committee stage suggestions and alterations could be made to the bill. I think we could come up with a bill whereby we could stop things such as this going on, yet provide protection not only for the employees but also for the employer in the circumstances.

So I for one, as a private member, will support this bill. It is my hope the minister and members of the Conservative Party will also reconsider their stand and let this bill go forward to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Oakwood for up to three minutes.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the member for Dovercourt for having brought a bill into this Legislature that is so fundamental to the working conditions of workers, so fundamental to the whole basis of the democracy in which we live, that I haven't seen any bill like it come before this Legislature in the last three years I have been here. This bill is of such a magnitude.

The member for Dovercourt has been interested in this since 1976. The Minister of Labour, as he quoted before, was interested in this since 1976.

Mr. Lupusella: The former Minister of Labour.

Mr. Grande: The former Minister of Labour talked about this in 1976. I think the member for Dovercourt quoted the minister as saying this signals an Orwellian state. I wish the present minister would listen for a second.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Oh, come on.

Mr. Grande: I do have three minutes and I would like to take advantage of the minister's ability to listen, if he can.

If a Minister of Labour in 1976 considered that television surveillance was bringing about the beginning of the Orwellian state, what kept the Minister of Labour in 1976 from beginning the report, starting the fact-finding process in which this minister got involved in November 1978? If the minister does indeed have this report, why didn't he table it today, so we would have facts and information upon which to debate this bill.

Mr. McClellan: I asked the minister to do that a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. Lupusella: Why didn't he do it?

Mr. Grande: Why is he keeping that report within his ministry? Why didn't he produce it prior to today so we would have the information and could find out about the complexity of the issue about which the minister speaks? This issue is very simple; it is not complex.

My colleagues from both sides of the House and the member for Carleton-Grenville on the government side of the House, said this bill talks about human dignity, about the work place, about very fundamental values. The government cannot take two or three or four years to make a decision about such fundamental values in our society. Would they be taking two or three years if it referred to the right to freedom of speech or the right to go to church and worship?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the minister will reconsider and let this bill go to committee. It is very important that it do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Dovercourt for two and a half minutes.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speed up the conclusion of my remarks by conveying my appreciation to the Liberal Party, which came out in support of this bill. I am in some ways very upset about the attitude of the Minister of Labour, representing the government. The content of his speech showed he is rejecting this bill, even in principle.

The minister has been talking about the complexity of the bill and the problems that will arise as ramifications of my private member's bill. I think it is fair to state that the Minister of Labour doesn't believe in the principle of the bill, per se; rather he is concerned about the complexity or ramifications of the bill itself. The attitude of the Minister of Labour is a slap on the faces of working people of this province and he must realize that. It is time his government and he, as the Minister of Labour, realize their duty to effect legislation to solve certain problems in the work place. Particular reference was made to Puretex. Let me say that the Minister of Labour is accepting or buying the thoughts which have been said for years and years by the owner of Puretex that he has been robbed and that the use of cameras or monitors has been based only to support the thesis that he has been robbed. The arbitrator, through the Minister of Labour, on his investigation came to the conclusion that such a proposal or such a point hasn't been demonstrated. For three years, the former Minister of Labour and the present one have been playing with human lives in the work place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Lupusella: If I can conclude, it is time to represent the workers of this province. If the minister and his colleagues block this bill, I hope the voters will remember that at the next provincial election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That concludes the allotted time for ballot item 19.

PATIENTS' BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Handleman moved resolution 19:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should consider the introduction of legislation requiring each governing body of a health discipline to which the Health Disciplines Act, 1974, applies and the Ontario Hospital Association to develop and adopt a patients' bill of rights codifying the rights of every patient who receives services from a practitioner of that health discipline or from a hospital that is a member of the association.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity finally to present a private member's ballot item. I am one of those people who is unlucky in lotteries. In the first lottery I participated in, my name was drawn at the very end and I had to pass by my opportunity earlier in this session because of circumstances beyond my control.

I would like to explain at the outset that in putting forward this resolution I imply no criticism of those in the health disciplines or in the Ontario Hospital Association. I happen to have been unfortunate enough to have been more of a recipient of the services of this system during the last five years than in all of my previous years and I have come to appreciate the excellent standard of service which we in Ontario are able to call upon when they are needed.

On the other hand, I believe there is no time in one's life when one is more insecure than during the period when these services are required. While I have faith and trust in the competence of those who are rendering the service—and my purpose in putting the resolution reflects that—the patient in his or her insecurity might possibly be reassured by knowing that there exists a code outlining what he or she is entitled to during that period of helplessness.

We have come a long way in this province, in this country and in this continent in that direction since the following rules for patients of the Cornwall, Ontario, General Hospital were issued in 1897. I would just like to quote from the rule: "Patients must be quiet and exemplary in their behaviour and conform strictly to the rules and regulations of the hospital and carry out all orders and prescriptions of the various officers of the establishment." There could hardly be anything more authoritarian than that.

Hospitals on this continent and others in the health-care delivery system have worked hard to develop better communications with those who are entrusted to or who place themselves in their care. The Ontario Hospital Association, for example, on December 13, 1978, issued a set of guidelines to the chief executive officers of all member institutions in this province. The guidelines were designed to assist those officers in dealing with the expectations and responsibilities of individuals in their particular care.

If I might, I would like to read from the Ontario Hospital Association's philosophy of patient care which it has issued for the guidance of its members. I am not going to read every provision in it because many of the hospitals have taken and modified them to their own use.

[5:00]

The patient is entitled to expect skilled, qualified, and experienced professional and non-professional staff. He can expect that the hospital will maintain the facilities necessary for staff to carry out their tasks; that it will maintain and upgrade the knowledge and skills of the staff. It goes on in that vein. It's drawn from the American Hospital Association's bill of rights, which was passed by the delegates to a convention in 1973. That's perhaps the most widely followed of all of the codes, and it reflects the importance of consent, particularly, and acknowledges the primacy of patients' rights.

In Canada that bill had wide support. The 1973 Pickering report, which many members of this Legislature are aware of, favoured the development of a patients' care bill of rights. In 1974, I'm very proud to say that the first hospital to adopt it, the Royal Ottawa Hospital—a 235-bed institution—adopted the American Hospital Association bill, with very slight modifications.

One of the particular items in the Ontario Hospital Association code deals with the matter of hospital medical records. One would normally think that medical records which are intimately involved in the well being of the patient would be made freely available to him. The fact is that the Public Hospitals Act and its regulations prevent that from happening. In fact, there are many good reasons for that kind of restriction.

It's overly simplistic to say that the patient is entitled to know everything the hospital has on record concerning him. On the surface it appears to be fine. However, what we have to have, what is absolutely necessary, is a clearcut definition of what the patients' rights are with regard to the availability of hospital records. Certainly, we can't expect the patient to receive a short, fast medical course so he can understand fully all the technical data which is on file concerning him. But my own feeling is that he has a right to expect a code defining the standard of care, and if necessary, what he not only can expect, but demand.

In conducting the research for this resolution I have been pleased to note the extent to which the systems in Ontario and the professions have gone towards meeting that. The problem is that it's sporadic; it's spotty; it's not uniform. The patient has a right to expect, in this very important field, some uniformity.

It's also a fact that the rights which have been codified to date on a voluntary basis are purely voluntary. They're privileges rather than rights. The Ontario Patients' Rights Association, headquartered in Toronto, has published a patients' rights manual. Having read it, I'm concerned about the adversary tone it adopts in dealing with what it calls patients' complaints. I understand that patients do have complaints. On the other hand, I don't think that's the primary reason for having a patients' bill of rights. It is to expand on the knowledge of the patient concerning his rights, and if necessary he should be able to demand them. That's the reason I have put the resolution in the way it is. Rather than a code of rights being imposed on institutions and those in the health-care system, the system should be required to develop a uniform code which the patient can then use in demanding or expecting his rights.

That, then, becomes a process of self-regulation. I suppose this is where some of us depart on the question of principle. I would prefer to give self-regulation a full chance to work successfully before saying, "it hasn't worked. Now we, the government, are going to make it perfect." I have yet to see a government program which has reached the stage of perfection, and it's too much to expect that self-regulation will reach that state on its own, but it should be given an opportunity to work on its own. Therefore, I have put the resolution in the form of requesting the government to consider legislation to require the publication of these codes. I assume in any such legislation there would be a timetable, a deadline by which it must be met.

If I had had an opportunity to redraft the resolution, I would have included a very important group of institutions which are not now in—that is, nursing homes. I regret their exclusion. The resolution was drafted hurriedly in order to meet a deadline before we had expected to do that.

The resolution calls upon the government to consider the introduction of legislation which would require health disciplines, all of those in the Health Disciplines Act and those who would seek to be included in the Health Disciplines Act, not only those who are at present in it but those who would come within it. It would seem to me if any such legislation was introduced and approved by the members of this Legislature, the act itself contains the remedies which would enable a patient to obtain redress in the event of a violation of his rights as codified. Violations would constitute misconduct under the Health Disciplines Act, and there are certainly remedies in that act for enforcement. There are also tribunals set up at the present time to deal with them.

The member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) mentioned he would have to go to school to see what the private members' hour is about. In my view, private members should be proposing action the government can take and then let us criticize that action when it has been taken. This is exactly what my resolution does. If the government comes in with this kind of bill, and I hope it will, then we can sit and modify it, if necessary in committee, and improve upon it. I would rather the government took that initiative, having had it brought to its attention during the private members' hour.

I don't want to require the government to intervene in a dispute between a patient and an institution, or a member of the health disciplines. I have had some experience in the interventionist approach and the interventionist society which appears to be gaining some strength. I am one who resists it and hopes to continue to resist it, which again explains why my resolution would allow the professions and the institutions to draft their own code.

I look forward to the comments of my colleagues in the Legislature. I hope this resolution will receive their support, but if it doesn't I don't think I will be as exercised as some members who feel everything they put forward should receive harmonious consent. I hope it does, but if it doesn't it won't hurt my feelings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member has used up half his time. Does he wish to reserve the other half, which is 10 minutes?

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I may want to comment on the comments that are made but I don't think I will need all of that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: How many minutes would you like to reserve?

Mr. Handleman: Five minutes.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I rise happily to support not only the resolution of the member for Carleton, which is rather interesting, but indeed the member himself, who from time to time provides me with the basis for other agreement. We like to have the Renfrew-Carleton axis at work as often as possible.

I suspect that somewhere in the precincts we have Mrs. Anne Coy. I think she indeed may be in the special gallery this afternoon.

I wanted to draw attention to her work, and that of her particular association which has been very much recommended to me. She has led a movement in this direction of highlighting the need for patients' rights in a way I think is proper. Anne and I have not always agreed. In fact, at a forum not very long ago at the St. Lawrence Centre we differed rather sharply on the full import of patients' rights as she sees them and as I see them, but I think her work in this connection is a credit to her association and to her own civic mindedness. I'm sure all members would join with me in that connection.

As far as the resolution itself is concerned, I must tell the member for Carleton he has given us something so innocuous as to be absolutely supportable without contention, it seems to me. I await my colleague from Oshawa to jump to his feet and join with me in making this a unanimous support. I sincerely hope he will.

Mr. Breaugh: You're pushing me offside, Sean. Be careful.

Mr. Conway: Indeed, it was the member for Oshawa's comments this morning that really provided the basis for my little remarks this afternoon. I awakened, as I'm sure all of the members did, to CBC Metro Morning to hear the illustrious member for Oshawa talking about the old-boy network and the work of our social development committee as it endeavoured to look at some of these questions to which this resolution directs our attention. I suspect the member for Oshawa's comment about the old-boy network is the very thing that leads me to support the intent of the member for Carleton's suggested consideration for the codification of certain agreed-to patients' rights.

I think there is at the root of the whole question of patients' rights a growing and fundamental question about the right of the citizen, in this case the patient, to know certain things in a democratic society. Notwithstanding the fact the new federal Prime Minister and his administration will open the doors to freedom of information in such a way as to make Vatican II look like a very secondary effort, I think we in this jurisdiction should be undertaking initiatives such as the honourable member's resolution dictates, rightly or wrongly, and in most cases I believe it is rightly.

A growing number of patients, and therefore citizens, feel they are not being treated responsibly or fairly by their health-care professionals. Indeed it is my own feeling that our professional elites, our professional societies in the health-care field—and I suppose most notably the medical community—have failed to keep pace with a growing desire for consumerism, if I might use the word generally speaking in this connection. There are too many doctors and other health-care professionals—I dare say lawyers as well—who just feel it is their professional prerogative to dictate to the consumer, the patient or whatever, what that person believes is right, without any opportunity for participation by the patient or the consumer.

With our present levels of sophistication and education I believe those kinds of attitudes in the professional community are clearly intolerable. I know the honourable member for York West would indicate that is not something to be found in the pharmacists' community, but certainly in terms of most health-care professionals the public perception is one of an old-boy network, a closed-shop sense, which in large measure could be redressed, I believe, by proceeding with the consideration that the honourable member's resolution calls for.

More than anything else, it must be done to restore public confidence in the professional community. I have had the opportunity as a politician, to say nothing of the opportunity as a health critic, to have witnessed certain discussions and dialogue in this connection. Really and truly it is amazing that in the late 1970s people in the health-care industry should be of such a mind, and perhaps it is not directly related, that we still have situations where by and large hospital meetings are closed to the public in many cases. We have that kind of ethic permeating the whole area that is for many of us a most central social-policy field. In many cases, to serve their own professional self-interest, it would serve the medical community and others very well to have the honourable member's resolution proceeded with.

The presumption that is often acted upon that I, as a consumer or as a patient, cannot understand what the honourable member for York West is likely to tell me in a pharmaceutical sense, is a presumption I am not always, if ever, prepared to live with. It almost reminds me of certain people in the engineering community who would have us believe that in the areas of nuclear energy Joe Q. Public shouldn't be told because Joe Q. Public couldn't be expected to understand.

Certainly in terms of patients' rights there has to be a clear understanding that the average consumer or the average patient is clearly able to understand information imparted to him or her by the professional or allied health-care worker. I believe the rights must exist in law if they are to mean anything, because if they are not in law, they are, it seems to me, essentially unenforceable. The old Tory conservative social ethic that noblesse oblige will obtain and that I, the professional, will determine what I will tell you and what you can understand is clearly not relative in the liberal democracy of the late 1970s.

[5:15]

Mr. Breough: What kind of a democracy?

Mr. Handleman: Small "I".

Mr. Breough: There are no longer any Liberals left.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We won't argue about that. There is no philosophy.

Mr. Conway: The member for Ottawa West would be counselled to be careful when talking about liberalism, because not so long ago he trod ever so perilously close to the line of invitation. I would not wish to remind him of his past sins of commission and omission in that connection.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I saw the light.

Mr. Bolan: The lights went out on him when he was appointed Minister of Energy.

Mr. Conway: Finally, it has to be said that, once codified, these patients' rights have to be understood in the context of a good working relationship between the patient and the professional—a working relationship that gets away from the historic paternalism that has in many cases unfairly and unhappily shut the door to the freedom of information which in our view should obtain, on the one hand, and a relationship which, on the other hand, respects the professional's ability to make certain judgements that are important for that person to make in the connection of the particular patient's operation or whatever.

I don't in any way minimize the difficulties in certain of those areas. The question of consent and the question of how far the rights should carry forward are ones about which I have a considerable degree of personal concern. I have a feeling, that the member for Carleton would probably share, that there would be a grey area there that would remain unsolved and unresolved for some time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Conway: Finally, I want to say, in supporting the honourable member's resolution, that it is surely, if lately, one small step in the right direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. Breough: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. Johnson: This will be negative.

Mr. Breough: It can be if you so desire. I rise to support the resolution. I don't want to surprise anybody or cause heart failure across the way. If that happens, it might be considered of benefit in some quarters. I think this is a supportable resolution. It's insipid enough that almost anybody could support it. It missed out on the apple-pie part, but I'm sure somewhere there will be something added to this end which will include motherhood and apple pie.

Mr. Conway: And almost anybody has.

Mr. Breough: It is oddly enough clearly indicative of what is wrong with this government. When the member turns to look at something like patients' rights and puts forward a resolution in this House purporting to ensure that there are such things as patients' rights—and I would contend that there aren't any just now—he sends the bill to everybody except patients. He asks views from the medical profession itself, the various subsidiaries in the Health Disciplines Act and the Ontario Hospital Association. The only people he forgot to ask were patients.

That strikes me precisely as what's wrong with this government in a number of areas. When we talk about a health-care system in Ontario, this government consults with those who dispense the service, it consults with those who administer the service, but it never wants to talk to anybody who uses the service or, a little more importantly, pays for the service. I think that's a fundamental flaw in this government.

I support the concept of a patients' bill of rights. It was introduced in this House, I believe, first and foremost by the member for Parkdale (Mr. Duksza). He has done that on a number of occasions.

Mr. Conway: He was a great Health critic. Bring him back.

Mr. Breough: I believe the last occasion was when he put forward a private member's bill in 1977. I want to point out to the members of this House that on the day when that principle was debated in this House the members on the government side rose to block the vote. That's how much they cared about patients' rights on that day. They rose to block the vote. They weren't prepared to let it proceed for further debate. Although some of them were generally supportive in discussing the principle of the bill, they were afraid to let that private member's bill proceed.

Today we have a resolution from a government member, a private member to be sure, which suddenly pays recognition to it. I think that is due in no small measure to the fact that more and more people in our society are becoming aware that patients don't have rights. We now see newspaper columnists documenting individual cases of patients who were not treated properly. We see weekend magazine sections in the newspapers doing full-length articles on that same topic.

As I read through the Hansards in preparing for my comments today, I saw that almost everyone who spoke on previous occasions, in committee or in the debate on the private members' bill by the member for Parkdale, offered individual cases documenting that clearly there are instances we all know about and we now all agree were infringements on patients' rights.

So the level of awareness is getting up there a little bit. I am not so sure it has sunk in very far on the government side of this House but at least they recognize it now. There are organizations—the Ontario Patients' Rights Association has already been mentioned—that are very active in discussing the issue and pointing out on a case-by-case basis there's a need to change things.

The problem I have with the resolution is that it's a bill of rights that won't exist. I am not saying that anyone in the medical profession or anyone in the Ontario Hospital Association is not a good and caring person, or that they wouldn't have a proper perspective on this. But I am saying they could do that very nicely had that private member's bill gone through a committee for hearings. They would have had ample opportunity to provide their input to the bill. What's more important, other people would have as well—other organizations who were interested, other individuals who might have some pertinent information that members should hear would be there. What's more important, at the end of that gathering of a consensus and gathering of information, this Legislature would be expected to face up to its responsibilities.

I heard earlier this afternoon the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations take on General Motors over deceiving people. There might be those in here who expect always a corporation to act in the best interests of the public. I am one who doesn't expect that, nor do I expect any other special-interest group, no matter who they might be, always to consider the world at large as opposed to their individual membership. I think I am realistic enough to understand that doesn't happen.

Whether we might agree or disagree on whether the medical association in Ontario, or all the branches of that, are good human beings—I think by and large they are—this is not to say we should send off a bill of rights for patients—or a code of practice or whatever you want to call it—to them to decide what should be done or to the hospital association. More and more as I see this government's restraint program at work on people who provide medical care in the province or who administer the hospitals in Ontario, I think they are going to have less and less time to consider things like the rights of the patient.

I don't think it's getting much prominence in their considerations these days. As I see that financial squeeze get more and more vicious on hospitals and people who provide medical care, I think they are going to have less and less time to think about the rights of the patient.

Some people could be silly and say I am expecting a patient to be able to provide a professional opinion. This is not so at all. I, for one, am prepared to listen to the other side. I am prepared to listen to the compromises that might have to be made. But I am not prepared to yield on the point that people who pay for the health-care system have a right to know what goes on in it. I don't recognize that they do now, that they even have access to information. I am prepared to recognize that there's a need for confidentiality of medical records but surely not from the patient himself or herself. Surely that human being has a right to know what happens with him. I am not suggesting for a minute that doctors and hospitals can give very nifty two-sentence explanations about very complicated medical procedures. But I am saying they surely ought to be skilled enough to provide the patient with a clear understanding of what's happening to him.

Somebody will probably suggest that you can't do that to somebody who is unconscious. But surely you can do that to a conscious relative who is standing by, and surely you can explain to people what you are doing to them, without question. Whether they fully understand all the medical jargon used, or the significance of the long-term effects of X-ray, are questions I am prepared to deal with quite separately. What I am prepared to say, and stand by pretty firmly, is the simple notion that there ought to be an obligation on the doctor, nurse or whoever the medical practitioner is, to explain what they are going to do before they do it.

I don't think that is too much to ask. Clearly, there is a legal right on the part of patients to understand the process, to know what has happened and in almost every case, to know what is written down about them in a medical file.

In this same Legislature, we saw the ridiculous situation barely two years ago, of a group of people who weren't even prepared to let those things be discussed by the members. These same people now are supporting putting forward a resolution which in some sense is supposed to rectify that situation. I contend that it won't accomplish that goal at all. If there is value in supporting this resolution, it is simply to accept a very small crumb and hopefully to allow some mechanism which will continue the discussion about patients' rights. I do not see this resolution as accomplishing much more than that.

It has given us an opportunity this afternoon to discuss it again. I am not terribly convinced we really needed another opportunity to discuss the matter of patients' rights in such general terms. I think we are long overdue for something far more specific than that. I am not happy that the resolution doesn't call for some legal protection for patients, and if you read the resolution carefully it works its way around that rather nicely. That may or may not be a good thing to do.

The point that I think is pertinent is that the resolution is supportable. Surely this House, at least in this kind of very general terms, ought to be able to express a patient's basic human right. Because you are sick, you don't lose all the human rights you supposedly have in a free society; the right to know, the right to have access to your medical records, the right to understand clearly what a medical practitioner is proposing to do to your body and the ramifications of that, as much as you can. Surely we ought to be prepared to do that.

My sadness comes from the fact that this resolution will not do much more than that. There will be no obligation for the Ontario Hospital Association or those people covered under the Health Disciplines Act to carry forward any of these things, because once again the government is expecting somebody else to do what it ought to do. I support the resolution in extremely general terms and I feel saddened that this is the best the government can do after looking at that private member's bill for two years.

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and to speak in support of the resolution proposed by my friend and colleague for Carleton.

I believe the question of patients' rights is a very important one. When people enter hospital today, too often they are not aware of the privileges they already have and enjoy. Although I agree with the principle of the resolution, I do have some reservations about the resolution as it now stands.

My concern is whether it is really necessary to codify into legislation, rights that to a large extent already exist. I have looked at a manual prepared by the Ontario Patients' Rights Association which lists the fundamental privileges patients currently enjoy. Patients do have the legal right to medical care in an emergency. They have the legal right to control their own bodies; that is, the right to accept or refuse medical advice or treatment.

For example, if a patient wishes to leave a hospital at any time he can do so. Mind you, he may be asked to sign a document releasing that hospital from liability. A patient may refuse any treatment or procedure. However, if this refusal is against his physicians's advice, he may be assumed to have little confidence in his ability and may be asked to seek the services of another physician.

I could go on. There are many other rights, such as the right of voluntary informed consent. An operation or a medical procedure may not be performed on a patient without his or her consent, except in an emergency. This has been alluded to by several speakers this afternoon. In order for consent to be valid, there are some three conditions that must be fulfilled: consent must be given in a free and voluntary manner; the patient must understand the general nature of the treatment, and the consent given is specific to a particular operation or medical procedure.

Patients also enjoy the fundamental right to confidentiality. Medical information is considered to be property of the patient and the attending physician has a duty of secrecy. The patient also has the right to determine whether or not he or she wishes to be used for research or teaching purposes. In experimental treatments, physicians must give the patient a reasonable explanation of the probable effect of treatment and unusual risks before he or she makes a decision.

As you no doubt can see, Mr. Speaker, patients do currently have and enjoy certain basic privileges. I believe the question that really should be asked is: Are they aware of the privileges they do have? A major problem, as I see it, is there seems generally to be a lack of knowledge of existing patient privileges today. Communication between hospital staff and patients is very important.

An example of communication between the hospital and its patients is the explanation of privileges outlined by the Royal Ottawa Hospital.

Mr. McClellan: I thought we were talking about rights, not privileges.

Mr. Leluk: Rights then.

The Royal Ottawa Hospital has stated that as part of the policy of that hospital it wishes to express its concern for the individual rights of its patients and furnish to the patient who may be uninformed of his or her rights a summary of those rights that hospitals for many years have recognized as belonging to the patient. The preamble of the information supplied to the patient goes on to state the outline, although not intended to be a legal summary, assures patients their privileges as outlined by the hospital represent the policy of that hospital and will be respected.

Another of my concerns is simply what might happen if each of the five health disciplines and the Ontario Hospital Association were to develop and adopt their own code of patients' rights. We could end up with six different and perhaps unique sets of patients' rights. Inasmuch as each of the health disciplines offers different treatments, and the health workers such as the chiropractors, physiologists and physiotherapists provide services which are quite different, hopefully the quality of these services will not differ.

The question then becomes: Will there be any inconsistency then, between these various bills of rights? Without the benefit of a central, co-ordinated effort to arrive at a uniform code, taking into consideration services rendered by each discipline, it is possible to foresee that certain complaints will arise out of confusion on the part of patients expecting one thing and perhaps not having those expectations met.

Another question that needs to be asked is: How far do we go in the area of regulating and legislating in the health field? If we adopt all of these codes of patients' rights, will we then 10 years from now claim there is too much government interference? We may not, but it is a possibility.

I believe improvement of the relationship between patients and health workers must be actively pursued. A mechanism must be developed whereby communication between health workers and patients can be improved upon, hopefully within the existing framework. From the information I have received, it appears that one of the major considerations must be to educate the public with regard to their privileges as patients.

Mr. McClellan: Rights.

Mr. Leluk: I would hope more hospitals in this province would pursue a method similar to that of the Royal Ottawa Hospital of informing patients of their rights.

Again I do have some hesitation about legislating existing privileges. I am not too sure whether patients will be better off than they are now.

Mr. McClellan: Is this a bill of privileges? There is a difference.

Mr. Leluk: What I really mean is rights, if that makes the member across the way feel any better.

Mr. McClellan: You should be consistent.

Mr. Leluk: Right; as you are, constantly—inconsistent.

Mr. Handleman: Consistently inconsistent.

Mr. Leluk: That's right. My colleague says "consistently inconsistent."

Perhaps, as I said earlier, a program of communication and education for the people of this province informing them of the rights they already enjoy might serve the same purpose as legislating these rights.

In closing, I wish to commend my friend and colleague from Carleton for putting forth this resolution. I believe that it is an important issue and one that bears the consideration and support of this House.

Mr. B. Newman: I rise to support the resolution of the member for Carleton and commend him for introducing it, the more so because he happens to be a government member. As a government member, I would think he would have the ears of his own colleagues and, as a result, we could at least get a little quicker action than we would get were it one of the opposition members who introduced or talked on the motion.

Mr. McClellan: You are always interested in window dressing.

Mr. B. Newman: It may be window dressing, but sometimes dressing a window is the right thing to do and maybe this is in that same area. I know we are talking about a motherhood issue when we talk about the resolution, but what is wrong with motherhood? There's nothing wrong with that. If it takes motherhood to have action on the part of the government, so be it.

I simply regret that we are talking solely about the Health Disciplines Act. There are other areas in which the patients' or the individuals' bill of rights should also be implemented.

I look back and see what has happened in the state of Michigan. For years there has been a clamour for a patients' bill of rights in relation to nursing homes. In all of the years it finally took, this year, 1979, a nursing home bill of rights actually came into effect.

There was likewise in the state of Michigan this same type of discussion. Everyone said there should be a bill of rights but no one seemed to take the initiative to have a bill of rights established. For example, that bill of rights for nursing homes is designed to ensure that elderly persons get proper care and that has taken effect only within the last two months. The bill was approved by the Legislature one year ago, but there is a certain stipulation in their legislation that it automatically comes into effect within a given period of time after it has received approval of the two Houses.

Their legislation tightens state regulations to avoid fraud. Notice there's a different aspect; it's not the health aspect this time, there are other aspects to a patients' bill of rights—kickbacks, misleading advertising. The top legislative goal of senior citizens' groups during that particular session when the bill of rights was eventually implemented spelled out the rights of about 45,000 elderly patients in 450 nursing homes. It attempts to curb abuse and neglect and makes violators liable for a fine of $10,000 and a jail term of up to one year. So the honourable members can see the concern that they had in the state of Michigan and I would assume that that same type of concern would be prevalent in the province of Ontario.

That law has come into effect now. Nursing home patients under this new law may refuse unwanted treatment and have the right to reasonable privacy and to receive and send uncensored mail. One can see the extent to which that state looked into a bill of rights by going actually beyond the health aspect of the individual. Yet the ability or the opportunity to have mail not censored, I would think, would have some therapeutic value as far as the patient would be concerned.

We have a smokers' bill of rights now. Why shouldn't we have a patients' bill of rights? It wouldn't matter to me if we had a patients' bill of rights for nursing homes, for lodging homes and for rest homes because conditions may vary. There are certain general rules that we would require for each of those institutions, but we could have an individual bill of rights for each, if necessary.

It is more important now due to the fact that a lot of individuals have been released from psychiatric hospitals or hospitals in which mentally retarded were originally placed and sent back into the community. When they get back into the community, they may be taken advantage of by operators of homes that may not be in the best physical shape and which may not have trained staff to accommodate these poor unfortunates who are sent back into the community. As a result, they may be housed in any number in a given room, depending on the size of the room. That individual has no choice as to where he is going to go.

In some instances, there is a body in the community that will attempt to direct the individual to a given lodging home, rest home and/or nursing home. Generally, it is a lodging home or a rest home. There seems to be no uniformity at all. For example, I read an article that refers to rest homes. Whether this is true or not, I can't actually say.

On December 4, 1978, an article appeared in the Windsor paper concerning the request by the United Way Social Planning Council for a bill of rights to protect rest-home patients from being exploited by homeowners. The article commented that there are no government inspectors and no standards that rest homes must follow. Surely we shouldn't be taking the unfortunate and putting them in a situation like that, where there are no standards for them. The higher the standard, generally the higher and the better the health care.

People placed in homes for the aged are even locked in at times as the staff may have difficulty controlling them. Because of this, I think there is the need for some type of codifying so that when a person is placed in the institutions or in the nursing home or in the rest home either he, if he is capable of understanding, or his friends and/or relatives may know exactly what rights that individual does have.

There is the problem of confidentiality, but I think the patient should have the right to view his records. I happen to have worked on a problem for a constituent in which one relative of the family was placed in a government facility. The family insists that that patient's records have some inaccuracies. The decision as to whether that person should be transferred from one institution to another, they claim, is based on inaccuracies, yet they, the family, don't have the opportunity to view the records to see if there are the inaccuracies and correct them. As a result, that patient could be transferred to a different institution, an institution in which recovery would be much greater, much better, and the individual possibly could be released back into society.

I heartily support the resolution by the member for Carleton. I hope any other speaker who comments on it does so also.

I hope the government does not just sit on this but actually implements it by introducing some other legislation of its own so that a standard bill of rights for all types of patients in government institutions will be a fact of life.

Mr. McClellan: The previous speaker issued a challenge to us, I suppose, when he said, "Who in this House is opposed to motherhood?" I didn't hear anybody take him on on that. But I'll say clearly and unequivocally that I too support motherhood and I intend to vote for the resolution.

Mr. Handleman: I was just starting to wonder, that's all.

Mr. Breaugh: We can think of a case where motherhood produced a poor result.

Mr. Conway: I hear the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) made off with the whooping crane resolution.

Mr. McClellan: The resolution is vague in the extreme and I was concerned when I heard the member for York West talking about privileges and rights without making any distinction or differentiation. He doesn't seem to understand they are two separate things. A right is something that belongs to the individual and a privilege is something that's bestowed by somebody in a relationship of authority over that individual. I wish members on the government side some day could come to an understanding of the difference between rights and privileges. They clearly don't have any understanding today, in this area or other areas.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think we have a clearer understanding of the distinction.

Mr. McClellan: I think, perhaps, the author of the resolution does understand he's talking about rights.

Mr. Conway: Reuben used to understand that before he pulled out.

Mr. McClellan: It's easy to write a resolution asking the government to implement rights but it's much more difficult to define.

Mr. Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. McClellan: I simply want to say I hope the government will do just that.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I could have listened to the member for Bellwoods support motherhood for the rest of the evening but I think we all want to go home.

I was very pleased to hear the member for Renfrew North mention Mrs. Coy because the germ of the idea for this resolution, notwithstanding some of the comments opposite, did not arise out of the member for Parkdale's previous private bill.

Mr. Conway: I bet it didn't come from the member for York Mills (Miss Stephenson) either.

Mr. Handleman: It came as the result of a television program I appeared on with Mrs. Coy and the former Ombudsman. It was in a previous incarnation, when we were talking about various rights in the field of consumerism.

I also wanted to set to rest some of the concerns expressed by members opposite about the very bad approach to this problem by members of the professions.

Mr. Speaker: Will the honourable members keep their private conversations down? Your colleague has the floor.

Mr. Handleman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The actual resolution came directly as the result of a doctor in my riding calling me to say that it was long overdue. I agreed with him; I agree with him entirely.

I would like to make it clear that simply because a resolution comes from a member on this side of the House it does not necessarily mean it's government policy. I know there has been this great tendency, particularly in the benches opposite me now, to introduce party legislation under the guise of private member's bills. This is not government legislation.

Mr. McClellan: That's not legislation at all.

Mr. Handleman: This is a private member's resolution. I hope the government will adopt it. I sincerely expect they will, having read the comments in Hansard of all the members. That is the purpose of the private members' hour. It's to draw to the attention of the government deficiencies in legislation so that the government can correct them. This is not an alternative government; it was never designed to be that.

I certainly hope the Minister of Health and his colleagues in government will read Hansard and decide what to do with this resolution after considering the points of view which have been expressed. I am appreciative of the unanimous consent which is apparently going to be given to it. I also understand some of the reservations. I have some myself.

I have looked at some of the rights granted, for example, by the Royal Ottawa Hospital which I mentioned as being a great hospital. One of the rights granted to patients in the Royal Ottawa is to refuse consent for anyone to be present who is not directly involved in the care of the patient.

The Royal Ottawa happens to be a teaching hospital. This could create great problems for the students if the patients decided to exercise that right, obviously. That is why I feel these rights have to be carefully defined, supported by legislation, and I think my resolution comes down the middle between those who would have the government do everything and those who would have the government do nothing.

That is the road I would like to follow in this period, similar to the 1970s liberalism my friend from Renfrew North talked about. I remind him that is a small "l" because there aren't any large-L Liberal governments anywhere, but we support the concept of liberalism in that sense.

I hope the government will pay heed to this resolution which appears to be on its way to earning unanimous support.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member have anything to say in one minute?

Mr. Conway: Let's hear from the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson).

Mr. McClellan: I think it is unfortunate that the member—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has already spoken.

Ms. Gigantes: But only for a minute and a half, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Conway: I want to hear from the Minister of Education, the last of the great democrats.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

CUSTODY OF PAQUETTE CHILDREN

193. Mr. McClellan: What were the reasons which led family court Judge Goulard to order, in December 1978, the return of the four surviving Paquette children to the custody of their parents? What, if any, was the role of the official guardian in that proceeding? What is the basis of the official guardian's stated opinion that the Paquette children should return to their parents' custody? Why has it taken seven months to schedule the appeal by the Ottawa Children's Aid Society against the decision of Judge Goulard? [Tabled May 23, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The appeal by the Ottawa Children's Aid Society against the decision of Judge Goulard is pending before the courts. It would not therefore be appropriate for the Attorney General to comment on the case at this time. However, the judge's reasons for judgement are a matter of public record and a copy is attached.

Before: His Honour Judge G. Y. Goulard.

Present: Louise and Royal Paquette; Mr. John Smith, counsel for CAS; Mr. Murphy, official guardian; Mr. Bayne, counsel for Mr. and Mrs. Paquette; R. Hilchie, court monitor.

Date of Decision: the 11th day of December, 1978.

The court: This is in the matter of an application by the Children's Aid Society for crown wardship for Sylvin, Andre, Silvie and Joanne Paquette. The trial began on June 15 of this year and has been adjourned a number of times for evidence. There were some 10 days of evidence with, I believe, 26 witnesses called. I have also received and read a report by Dr. Cote, who was not called but who supplied us with a written report and also I have spoken to the four children in chambers. The four children were apprehended on a non-ward basis originally as a result of the father not being able to care because of his work and stress caused by the events of the few prior months. The mother, Mrs. Paquette, was in reformatory as a result of a 21-month—I believe a 21-month sentence for her actions causing the death of her daughter, Adrienne, on July 5, 1977.

Mr. Bayne, in his summation, summarized very well the evidence of all important witnesses and I do not intend to summarize that evidence or go through that evidence again today. Mr. Murphy indicated that he is representing the children and indicated that their desire is to be returned to their family to live with their parents as a family unit.

In his summation Mr. Smith argued that crown wardship was necessary because the mother was not able to cope with the children or to properly learn to do so; secondly, that Mr. Paquette was not able to deal adequately with the situation or to control Mrs. Paquette's behaviour; thirdly, because of the special needs of the children in that they have been emotionally deprived, that they are intellectually handicapped, that they are unrewarding children and he argued that they see their mother as the punitive figure and the father as a distant psychological figure and that they will continue to need therapy for a lengthy period of time.

There is no doubt that this is an extremely exceptional case. A child has died in a very tragic and shocking manner as a result of the mother's highly excessive form of disciplining and, more important, after a long history of known occurrences and other suspected occurrences of child abuse, and I have gathered from the evidence that there were also some later occurrences of child abuse that should have been known. The fact that this happened to one child raises serious questions of the physical danger for the other four children and whether they should be permitted to remain with their mother.

The second issue that is raised is that of the emotional deprivation past and possible future if they are returned. There is no doubt that there has been some such deprivation in the past. Both parents simply did not have sufficient ability and knowledge to provide their children with all the stimulants for the ideal emotional growth and development. If the children are to be returned—I'm sorry—they the children will require special assistance to foster emotional growth and adjustment in the future taking into consideration their limitation and the traumatism they have suffered in the past year and a half.

The question is, therefore, what decision now appears to offer an environment that will secure and provide what appears to be in the given total circumstances in the best interest of these four young children. They have suffered greatly. They have lost a loved sister in very difficult circumstances that they do not fully comprehend. They have been separated from their parents and from some of their siblings for many months. They feel somehow punished. One of the children indicated to me that she was not to be blamed for the death of Adrienne, indicating that she still feels that possibly she might be blamed for what has happened. Also, Dr. Gagnon and Dr. Smith testified to the effect that the children possibly feel that they are punished for what has happened.

Dr. Smith further testified that in his opinion the family setting was the better alternative because, firstly, if the children are not returned they will more than likely be separated from one another and the feeling of punishment will continue and they will never resolve that problem. Secondly, he indicated that there is much love and affection in the family between the parents and the children and between the children themselves.

Dr. Gagnon expressed the opinion that all the conflict that the children have known as a result of Adrienne's death and their subsequent placement should be dealt with in a setting of reality that is with the family reunited as a unit. He felt that there was a high degree of affection needed by the children and that the parents could provide this affection in a manner that no one else could do. He felt that there is enough good intention and good will to care for the children with proper assistance and supervision.

A number of witnesses were called on behalf of the children's aid society and they described the very special needs and problems of the four children and the two parents and concluded that the parents because of their own problems and limitations could not adequately meet the special needs of these four children. There is no difficulty in making a finding that the children are in need of protection. Their parents cannot, without assistance, adequately provide for their emotional growth. The issue then is whether they should be made temporary wards, crown wards or placed with the family or someone else subject to supervision by the children's aid society.

The possibility of temporary wardship is rejected and has not been recommended by either counsel in that if the children are not now returned then permanent plans should be made for adoption or long-term placement. To decide that they should become crown wards is to decide that there is no alternative way of assuring an adequate environment for their future.

Dealing firstly with the question of physical danger, I'm satisfied that the children will not be in physical danger if returned to the parents. As subscribed to Dr. Gagnon and Dr. Smith's explanation that it was a combination of Adrienne's very severe emotional problems and behaviour combined with Mrs. Paquette's limitation and inability to cope with these problems that led to her tragic death, the four other children have not been abused in any manner that would raise a fear of any future maltreatment. I subscribe to the view that Adrienne was not a scapegoat but it was, as I said, "a combination of her problems with Mrs. Paquette's limitations that caused the death."

The question is whether the children's emotional needs will be better met by placement with their parents rather than a continued placement with the children's aid society for a continuation of the assessment with a placement or placements resulting from the assessment finding and recommendation. I am satisfied that their problems and needs are different. It is almost assured that because of this they would end up in different placements and they would then continue to feel and believe that they are somehow being punished for something for which they should not carry any blame.

There is a family unit here that still exists. The father and mother are now back together. They want the children back and the children indicated directly to me and through Mr. Murphy that their desire is to be reunited. It is not an ideal family—far from, but it is a strong one with much love, affection, good will, and a very strong desire to build a good future for all its members. They want to do so, all of them, to the extent of their present ability to understand. Our society, not the children's aid society as such but our society as a human body or a human society, has failed to adequately help this family in the past. We have now the possibility of a new chance and we must accept and deal with it. I, therefore, find that the four children are in need of protection and order that they be returned to their parents subject to supervision by the children's aid society for the maximum time that I can order at this time, which is 12 months.

I realize that the children will have to be prepared for the return and that this might not be done and probably should not be done overnight, but they should be returned as soon as possible. I would think that a couple of weeks should allow the children's aid society to prepare a return. The extent of the children's aid society's involvement in providing supervision has been discussed by certain of the witnesses and by Mr. Smith and Mr. Bayne in their summation. I do not believe that it is the court's function to specify any of these terms. That is a matter for the qualified workers of the children's aid society. They have to determine their involvement and it is for their responsible officers to assure the fulfilment of this necessary involvement. This is their responsibility and their challenge.

Mr. and Mrs. Paquette, and I will translate this in a few minutes, you are getting your children back. You will need help. It will be offered to you. Accept it. Co-operate with the workers. If at any time you feel it is not enough, if either of you feel that you need more help or that something is not going properly, ask for this help. If it is not provided after you have requested, call the director of the children's aid society or call, I'm sure, any of the lawyers here today—your own lawyer or Mr. Murphy or even Mr. Smith acting for the children's aid society—or call the court. Call myself and I will surely get involved again.

These are young children; they have been given to you. There has been a tragedy in the past. I believe that now with the necessary assistance you can provide a good future for the children. It will be difficult. You will have to work hard but that's your duty.

His Honour Judge G. Y. Goulard repeated his address to the parents in French.

I wish to thank Mr. Bayne, Mr. Smith and Mr. Murphy for their patience and their very hard work in preparing this case. It has been a pleasure working with the three of you.

All counsel: Thank you very much, Your Honour.

The court: And have a good Christmas all of you.

Certified to be a true transcript of the evidence recorded at this hearing.

Rosemary Hilchie, Court Monitor.

HYDRO TRANSMISSION LINES

196. Mr. Stong: In line with the recent assurance of the Minister of the Environment in letters to the towns of Richmond Hill and Markham, wherein the minister guaranteed that all further Hydro projects in those areas will receive "the full treatment" provided by the Environmental Assessment Act, would the minister now cause to be conducted an environmental assessment hearing into that part of the 550-kv Nanticoke to Pickering transmission line which is planned for installation east of highway 48: (a) in an area not yet approved by cabinet; (b) in an area the land of which has not yet been completely surveyed for the new line, much less acquired; (c) in an area where no hearings have been held to allow input from the people and where the people were deprived by virtue of the decision in the Chadwill Coal case, from giving evidence to hearing officers who conducted an inquiry into the parkway belt west and thus in fact held sham hearings? [Tabled May 24, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Stong's question states that I had "guaranteed that all further Hydro projects in those areas will receive 'the full treatment' provided by the Environmental Assessment Act." The full sentence in letters which I have forwarded to the towns of Richmond Hill and Markham from which the idea was extracted is, "I would like to assure you that future Ontario Hydro undertakings will receive the full treatment under the Environmental Assessment Act." I chose the term "future Ontario Hydro undertakings" to mean those undertakings which presently are not exempted from the requirements of the Environmental Assessment Act.

As the honourable member is aware from my recent correspondence with him, the 500-kv transmission line between the Parkway TS and the Cherrywood TS, part of which is located east of highway 48, is associated with the parkway belt, although the east part is not within the parkway belt west planning area itself. Also, the line was considered by the Solandt commission and its planning was well under way before the Environmental Assessment Act, 1975, came into force. These were the reasons why my predecessors issued exemption order OH-11 and they are as valid now as they were then.

By order in council 1466/78, May 17, 1978, Ontario Hydro was authorized to acquire land, design and construct facilities east of highway 48. With respect to the statement, "... in an area the land of which has not been completely surveyed for the new line, much less acquired . . ." it is my understanding that Ontario Hydro completed an engineering survey in October 1978 and further that a legal survey was completed in January 1979. As far as property acquisition, I understand from the Ministry of Government Services that with the exception of a very few—less than 10—properties, the land has either been acquired or is in an advanced stage of negotiation for settlement. However, as you are aware, if any landowner requests, there will be an expropriation inquiry.

X-RAY EQUIPMENT OPERATORS

198. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Ministry of Health advise how many persons are employed as operators of X-ray equipment in public hospitals in Ontario? Of these, how many are registered radiological technicians under the Radiological Technicians Act? [Tabled May 24, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows: As of March 31, 1978, 1,712 persons were employed in public hospitals as X-ray operators. Of these, 1,636 were registered.

199. Mr. Cassidy: How many persons are employed as operators of X-ray equipment in chest clinics operated under the Ministry of Health? Of these, how many are registered radiological technicians under the Radiological Technicians Act? [Tabled May 24, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows:

The Ministry of Health employs 27 full-time and six part-time persons in the chest clinics. Of these, nine are registered. Discussions are under way with the OSRT to find a method of upgrading the unregistered employees to enable them to become members of the OSRT.

The Ministry of Labour has also informed me that the industrial chest disease service sends mobile clinics to various industries to provide chest X-rays and pulmonary function tests. Pre-employment screening for particular exposures is given, to determine susceptibility to diseases inherent in the job. Nine full-time X-ray machine operators are currently employed by the service. Two of the nine are registered radiological technicians. The Ministry of Labour has also indicated that six have been trained in-house for special chest work and there is one vacancy. It is the Ministry of Labour's intention to hire a registered radiological technician for this vacant position.

DETENTION CENTRES

202. Mr. Cooke: Would the Minister of Correctional Services please table the following: (i) the number of inmates that remained in Windsor, London, Hamilton, Ottawa and Toronto East detention centres for more than two weeks since January 1977; (ii) the length of time each of the inmates did remain in the above-mentioned centres, exceeding two weeks? [Tabled May 28, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Walker: The attached table displays the number of inmates who remained in each of the detention centres for more than two weeks. The table shows a breakdown by sentenced and remanded individuals for three time periods (16 to 30 days, 31 to 90 days and more than 91 days). Because the Hamilton and London detention centres were opened during the period, the figures presented represent the sum of the detention centre and the jail which it replaced.

LINE FENCES ACT

Consideration of Bill 17, An Act to revise the Line Fences Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, you will recall that when we gave second reading to this bill, I did not make any concluding comments as the parliamentary assistant because we reached 10:30. It was indicated then that I might make some brief comments at the start of the committee stage in order to reply to some of the questions that were raised by the members rather than delay second reading two weeks ago tonight.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would take a few moments to comment on some of the points that were raised by members opposite. I would indicate that I would reserve discussion on the particular sections, where I know amendments will be made, until such time as we reach those sections. I would like to thank all the members opposite who indicated support for the bill and gave unanimous consent to second reading.

I would like to comment briefly on some of these points that were raised. First, the member for Welland-Thorold raised a number of points. He complained of the fact that it took the government so long to bring this matter forward and to have the matter come for second reading. He noted that we had three versions of the bill before we got to the final one.

Quite frankly, this surprised me a little bit because it is that party probably more than others which is always saying there should be full and complete public discussions. The whole point is that we put out a bill and sent it for public discussion to all organizations and all interested parties—in particular, the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and the municipalities of the province.

Mr. Lawlor: I knew you would start off graciously, but end up acrimonious. Why don't you start the way you feel?

Mr. Rotenberg: And we did that. I would like to point out to the honourable member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) that the process was simply one of trying to resolve all the problems that came from various organizations and municipalities without moving in haste, because too often if you move in haste and take the first version of the bill, you regret at leisure. On this side, we would rather progress conservatively. I think we have taken into account all the requests of the various organizations and municipalities. We have not solved all the problems or acceded to all the requests of the various parties concerned, but I think the bill now before you satisfies the major concerns of all the parties.

I recently met with people from ROMA and from the OFA, and while they still have some lingering doubts about a couple of minor things, they have indicated to me that they are reasonably satisfied with the bill as presented. I don't think anyone expects 100 per cent of the requests to go forward; they simply want the principle, the main points they have, to be included in the bill.

The member for Welland-Thorold did raise a problem which I would like to deal with very briefly, an apparent contradiction between section 7 and section 14. Section 7 of the bill in effect says the fence-viewers shall make an award. Section 14 of the bill indicates where no award is made, such and such will happen. I would like to explain to the honourable members that this is not meant to be a contradiction and is not really a contradiction because we do go along with the principle in the bill that the fence-viewers must make an award where possible. Section 14 provides for those areas where the fence-viewers cannot make an award. Possibly it is beyond their jurisdiction; there is no survey and they can't make an award. Or possibly the matter has been settled by the time they get there, or settled harmoniously when they get there. There may be some reason why the fence-viewer cannot make an award and section 14 provides that they collect their fees anyway. The point the member for Welland-Thorold made that section 14 could be misinterpreted was well taken, and for that reason we will be proposing an amendment when we come to section 14. I apologize to the opposition members that I have not given them that amendment until this evening, but I did give both of them notice that that amendment would be coming.

I also want to reply briefly to the question raised by the member for Wellington South (Mr. Warton). I think the question he posed really had to do with whether or not the fence-viewers have the jurisdiction to decide on the type of fence and its construction if there is a dispute between the two owners. I would like to point out to the honourable members that section 7(c) of the bill does give the fence-viewers the right to decide on the type and construction of the fence, as well as allocating the cost.

The member for Wellington South asked whether, if fence-viewers find that the fence is in the wrong place, they can give a decision leaving the fence in the wrong place. Can they decide that the fence should be here rather than there, or not on the boundary line? The answer to that is no. This act does not give them those powers. There would have to be other means of settling that dispute. The fence-viewers don't have the power and we don't want to give them the power of settling boundary disputes, which we think is beyond their jurisdiction.

All of the other matters of substance raised dealt with individual clauses in the bill. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move to section 7, if there are no comments before section 7, and place an amendment.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Rotenberg: Section 7(b) provides three different items on how the fence-viewer can make the award. Subclauses (i) and (ii) in effect say the fence-viewer can make an award equally or unequally, and subclause (iii), over on page four of the bill, indicates the fence-viewer may award that one adjoining owner shall construct and pay for the entire fence.

This is a matter the Ontario Federation of Agriculture specifically felt should not be in the bill. Although the preferred position of some of them was still 50-50, they could live with subclauses (i) and (ii) provided subclause (iii) was not in the bill.

We have considered this matter and think they do have a valid point; subclause (iii) could be removed without harming the principle of the bill. For this reason I would move a following amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that section 7(1)(b) of the bill be amended by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (ii) and by striking out all of subclause (iii).

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, might I make a suggestion? I note the member for Welland-Thorold has a different amendment on this clause. I am wondering if we could vote on my amendment first, which hopefully would carry, and then he could move an amendment to the clause as amended. I think mine is non-controversial and his certainly will be controversial.

Mr. Swart: I agree with that procedure. I am not sure whether the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) wanted to speak to it first. I do want to speak to the amendment but I agree with the procedure.

Mr. Epp: I have no objections to the procedure, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I will vote in favour of the amendment because I believe it improves what is in section 7 of the bill at the present time. However, I don't think it goes far enough in meeting the requests of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture or the Rural Ontario Municipal Association in assuring the principle of a 50-50 split in the cost of constructing a line fence. Therefore, I will be moving an amendment afterwards, which the parliamentary assistant has, to make further changes in that whole subsection (b). But we can deal with this first and deal with my amendment afterwards.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment. We think what the member for Wilson Heights has recommended makes sense and we will support it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 7(1)(b)(i) and (ii) be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "(b)(i) that each adjoining owner shall construct, reconstruct or repair, as the case may be, and maintain and keep up a designated one half of a fence; or

"(ii) that the adjoining owner designated shall construct, reconstruct or repair, as the case may be, and maintain and keep up the fence, and that the other adjoining owner shall, upon being notified by a designated adjoining owner of the costs of the work incurred from time to time, pay to the designated adjoining owner one half of the costs incurred, unless the fence-viewers in the circumstances of the case considered an award in the term of subclauses (i) or (ii) to be unjust, in which case the fence-viewers may make such award in respect of the construction, reconstruction, repair or maintenance of the fence as they consider appropriate."

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, as I have already pointed out, the amendment put by the member for Wilson Heights does make an improvement and at least goes part way to meet the requests of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. There is a very strong feeling among the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and among the Rural Ontario Municipal Association that the principle of the 50-50 split should be firmly established. In Bill 17 which we have before us, that is not established to their satisfaction.

[8:15]

The Rural Ontario Municipal Association, after the amendments from this party had been submitted to them by the member for Wilson Heights, went over them in some detail; and they have confirmed they would like to see an amendment which I have put become the operative section of the act.

Again, I am the first one to admit that the difference may not be great; but there is a real difference in the wording. The existing section says, "the award shall specify that each adjoining owner shall construct, reconstruct or repair, as the case may be, and maintain and keep up a designated one half of the fence or such other designated portion of the fence that the fence-viewers consider just." If it is left at that, I think you would agree that if that was taken to court it would be pretty wide open. There is really no basic principle established there. It says, "one half . . . or such other designated portion," all in the same clause.

The amendment which I am submitting takes that out of those clauses that firmly establish that principle, and then, pursuant to those clauses which establish that principle, there is a qualifying section. That may seem like splitting hairs; but the lawyers tell me that if that goes to court there is some difference between those two, and it more firmly establishes the 50-50 principle. I think the reason that the member for Wilson Heights has moved that subclause (iii) be taken out is to establish that principle more firmly. This does it even a bit further; therefore, I suggest that it is preferable and that my amendment should carry.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member may be correct that it is splitting hairs but not totally correct. There is some difference and, as he indicated, it may be a subtle difference, but it could be indicated in the courts that the wording he suggests makes the 50-50 law mandatory, unless there is a very great exception. Really, what I think would happen if we carried his amendment would be that the fence-viewers would feel they are bound by the 50-50, unless they can really establish that something else should happen. In practice, it may or may not work out that way, but the accent is that the 50-50 is what should happen.

The way the legislation has been presented in the bill, the fence-viewers are much freer to assess responsibility for the need for the fence, and responsibility on the type of fence and so on, and would have a little wider discretion.

The member is quite correct in that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture has said it prefers the wording he brought forward, but it has also indicated that as long as subclause (iii) is out—and it is now out—the OFA can quite happily live with the wording the government has presented in the bill.

I think there are a couple of points that should be raised in discussing this amendment. During second reading, the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) raised the first point and indicated that he would not support this type of amendment because, although the livestock farmers would be delighted, the cash crop farmers would not like the amendment. There could be a situation of one type of farmer next to another type of farmer, and while I am certainly not an expert in agriculture I can understand the fence would be required because the livestock would enter the cash crop farmer's land.

Mr. Makarchuk: You should be wearing overalls.

Mr. Rotenberg: If the cash crop farm has no fence—and I am sorry the member for Huron-Middlesex is not here this evening; he could put it much better than I—and a sort of Sunday horse farmer comes in and puts a bunch of horses on an adjoining farm, suddenly the cash crop farmer who has been happy all these years, requires a fence. In those circumstances, maybe the man who has changed the circumstances should have to pay more than half the cost of the fence. The man who was happy without a fence, because he was not responsible for the change in the circumstances, should perhaps pay less.

The other point, which I think follows the matter raised by the member for Wellington South, is if there is a dispute on the type of fence; if one owner, be it urban or rural, wants a very fancy fence and the other owner is content with quite a simple fence. Then the fence-viewer might say, "All right, we will have a fancy fence; but the man who wants a fancy fence will have to pay more than half the cost because he, in effect, is requiring the cost."

Another thing I should point out is that although historically the Line Fences Act has been deemed to be a rural act, the Line Fences Act also applies in urban municipalities and has for many years. In an urban situation, far more than in a rural situation, I can see where the mandatory 50-50 or the semi-mandatory 50-50 division should not apply.

Let us take a case where there is a vacant lot on the main street and behind it on the side street there are three or four houses. There's no fence and they are very happy. But the line on the main street may be zoned commercial and suddenly the commercial owner puts up a row of stores, or a drive-in theatre, or a cleaning plant, or an abattoir—God knows what—and suddenly there is a need for a fence in order to protect the private property owners who were quite happy before. Certainly it would seem the commercial owner should pay for more than half of that fence.

In the wording as proposed by the member for Welland-Thorold, sure, maybe the fence-viewers would award more, but there is a certain restriction implied in his wording which would make the fence-viewers hesitant in those cases to put forward anything more than a 50-50 division.

I am agreeing somewhat with the member for Welland-Thorold in that maybe there isn't that much difference between the two wordings. If that is the case then obviously they should accept the wording that is in the bill. There's not that much difference, but I feel there is enough of a difference that in all of the kinds of situations that are put forward would inhibit the fence-viewer from making a 60-40 or 70-30 division, or whatever, in the wording proposed by the member for Welland-Thorold.

For these reasons I would not support the amendment and would urge my colleagues in the House also not to support the amendment.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I have looked over this amendment and I think it does clarify what the member for Welland-Thorold has indicated it clarifies, and without much ado we will support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Section 4?

Mr. Chairman: I'm sorry, section 4 has been carried.

Mr. Haggerty: Section 7(4), "Location of fence."

Mr. Chairman: The section has been carried, but if you have a question, go ahead.

Mr. Haggerty: I thought you were dealing with section 7(1)(b).

Mr. Chairman: I asked if section 7, as amended, should stand as part of the bill. I don't want to cut any honourable member off; I'm sure you can ask a question.

Mr. Haggerty: I just want an explanation from the parliamentary assistant of subsection 4, where it says, "Location of fence. Where, from the formation of the ground by reason of streams or other causes, it is, in the opinion of the fence-viewers, impracticable to locate the fence upon the line between the lands of the adjoining owners, they may locate it either wholly or partly on the land of either the adjoining owners where it seems to be most convenient, but such location shall not in any way affect the title to the land."

This particular section of the fence-viewers act has often caused municipal councillors problems—even the private owners. I am just not sure that that is the right wording. It doesn't solve the problem.

You may not have title to land but you have possession of it. You could perhaps have a fence moved 100 feet on the other side of a stream, or something like that, which would certainly deprive a farmer on the other side of the fence of his rights to water.

It has always caused problems within municipalities that any person where a fence has been established for a period of seven to 10 years doesn't have title to the land but has possession of it. When you are dealing with farm lands it may remove a person's right of access to water. If he has a cattle pasture in a marsh area or swamp area it could cause problems.

It just isn't worded right. There has to be some protection there. It could happen that an improper decision by the fence-viewer could deprive a person of his rights to a stream of water on his farm.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman. I see the honourable member's concern. But I think the way the clause is worded it really would be for minor deviations. Up to a point, you have to trust the discretion of the fence-viewers that in moving a fence they wouldn't deprive someone of his water rights for a major portion of the land. Sometimes there's a little hill or something in there that means the fence has to deviate.

The purpose of the section is to allow—to use a term from the committee of adjustments—minor variances in the fence. I certainly don't think this should be used to move a fence 100 feet one way or the other. That gets far beyond the sense of what is meant in this section.

I would say to the honourable member that until he raised it now, no one has ever raised this matter during all the discussions on this bill. To the best of my knowledge, there's never been a problem in the past with this section as far as the implementation is concerned.

Simply going on the bill's 179-year history in various forms, this hasn't caused a problem. I think we can assure the honourable member that the intentions here are to have very minor variances and it hasn't caused a problem up until now. I see the member's concern but I don't think it's something to worry about.

Sections 8 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 12:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that sections 12(5) and (6) of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "Where the clerk of the local municipality, in which the land of the adjoining owner is situate receives a certificate prepared under subsection 1, and the award in respect of which the certificate was made or copies thereof certified by the clerk in accordance with this act, the treasurer of the municipality upon application in writing by the owner entitled to receive the amount certified, shall pay to the owner the amount so certified."

He further moves that section 12(9) be amended by striking out the words, "or instead of applying for that amount or a portion thereof under a bylaw passed pursuant to subsection 6" in the second, third and fourth lines.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, it's perfectly clear to all members of the House what we're intending to do with regard to this amendment. Under the bill as it now stands, the recourse for an owner to collect from the other owner one half of the cost of the fence or whatever portion shall be awarded by the fence-viewers is to take it to court and get an award there, or the municipalities may pass a bylaw so that the amount can be levied against the taxes of the other owner and that money will be paid over to the first owner at the time it is collected. That could be two, three, four, or even five years.

This amendment provides that if the one owner requests, a municipality shall assess that against the taxes and pay it immediately over to the first owner.

Under this act, it's left up to the municipality whether or not they pass a bylaw to pay that over immediately first of all, this will mean that there can and probably will be wide variations throughout the province between one rural municipality and the neighbouring municipality. One municipality will pass the bylaw and another municipality won't pass the bylaw. There will be confusion among the farm population, the landowners, as to how they are going to collect this money. It seems to me there is merit in having it uniform.

Under the former act, their only recourse to get this was through the courts. They had to look after the collection themselves. In fact, under the act which we are now replacing, a great deal more of the responsibility was put on the land owner. He even had to notify the other owner that he was calling in the fence-viewers. It was a sort of confrontation between the one landowner and the other landowner.

This bill moves most of that responsibility of notification and all other matters to the municipal clerk, as I think it should be, and there is no disagreement in this House about it because the government has brought in that notification amendment at the very strong request of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. But this one section still leaves the whole thing very vague and very weak. I think we should tidy it up and amend it so that it is uniform across the province. Once they've gone through appeal procedures, if appeal procedures are taken, then if the one owner wants to collect that money, he still has the right to go to court to do it.

He also would have the right to go to the municipality. If he goes to the municipality, which is much the cheapest way—and the municipality has security in the taxation process—he would have that money paid to him, and not just on the whim of whether council decides to pass a bylaw. We all know what happens in these cases. Somebody gets caught like this and the municipality rushes a bylaw through. However, the neighbouring municipality doesn't have this problem and it doesn't have a bylaw. Then, when one of its constituents gets into a problem, that municipality doesn't have the bylaw there to resolve the problem.

It should be done for uniformity and, more than that, to be fair to the owner who has invested money in the fence. When it's all done at the initiative of the municipality and where the fence-viewers are appointed by the municipality, make the award, and where it has gone through the court and where the judge, under section 10 of this act, is paid by the municipality, he doesn't have to collect from the person who brings it to court, he gets paid by the municipality. That's already in the act. But the farmer may either have to take the other person to court and perhaps never collect it that way—we know the difficulties there, even if he does get a ruling in his favour—or if it is applied against taxes, he may have to wait until the money is actually collected which could be two, three, four or five years.

I admit to the parliamentary assistant that the Rural Ontario Municipal Association on a split vote, didn't back this but the Ontario Federation of Agriculture did. The OFA would like to see this amendment included in this act and, for all those reasons I mentioned I think it should be.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I disagree slightly with my honourable friend across the way when he says this is all on the initiative of the municipality. It is not. It is on the initiative of the individual property owner, or two of them, who want to put up a fence. The municipality simply acts as the arbitrator in the dispute. The judge is paid because the judge is a public official.

I find it a little strange hearing tonight that the member for Welland-Thorold wants to make it mandatory in municipalities to have to pay out this money. He was in this chamber about 48 hours ago, when we were dealing with another part of the Municipal Act, when his colleagues from the Hamilton-Wentworth area were so uptight about local autonomy and so uptight about the fact that local municipalities should be able to make their own decisions that those people voted against third reading of the change in the Municipal Act dealing with assessments.

This is a matter of local autonomy. Let's face it, municipalities are not collection agencies. Municipalities should not be collection agencies. What you have is a private dispute between two private parties. The purpose of this whole Line Fences Act is to have a simple mechanism for settling a dispute between two parties so they don't have to go through the long hassle of going to court. The reason for that is mainly in rural Ontario where, in the springtime if a fence is down and you want to fix it when the cattle are ready to go out you can't wait for the whole court procedure. You should have a fast procedure for settling the dispute.

Because it is a little local matter, the government 186 years ago decided the municipalities should be charged with being the arbitrators. That's fine, but it doesn't mean that once the matter is settled the arbitrators have to put up the front money until the person against whom the judgement was made can pay. By the same logic, when you go to the county court or the Supreme Court, you can say the court should advance the money to the party who gets judgement until the other fellow pays his money. It is just so against all matters of justice to say the court, in this case the municipality, has to advance the money to the winning party in a dispute. I don't think it proper.

We have made it an option on municipalities where there is a small amount and the municipality wishes to do it; we give them the power to do it if they want to. But I repeat, to make it mandatory that the municipality must lay out the money is contrary to local autonomy and contrary to good legislation.

It isn't that bad because, unlike other cases, it is provided in this legislation that if the party doesn't get paid he can go to small claims court—which is a much faster process—and get in in effect a judgement summons and be able to very quickly send in the sheriff to collect his money, if he wants to go that route.

The other point we have to realize is there may be some situations, in a rural municipality which is large in area but very small in assessment, in taxation and so on, where you might get an award between two very large-sized farms, an award in the thousands of dollars, as the amount awarded from one farmer to another in building a fence. The winning party in that case may go to the municipality and say, "Hey, fellows, I want my money." That could be a major piece of the township's budget. It could in fact blow their budget or their monthly payment if you got a couple of major awards in a small rural township.

Mr. Swart: That's a straw man.

Mr. Rotenberg: Frankly, I do not feel you should make it mandatory upon a municipality to be the collection agency. In fact, quite frankly I have some reservations about having the municipality in the collection agency business at all. But if a municipality wants to do it to facilitate their citizens with small amounts and put it on the tax bill of the owner against whom the judgement is made that is fine, let them do it.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I would not support the amendment.

Mr. Epp: I appreciate the indulgence you are exercising tonight, Mr. Chairman, letting everyone speak in their turn. We are proceeding very quickly with these amendments during committee of the whole House.

As far as I am concerned the member for Welland-Thorold is somewhat inconsistent with his colleague from Wentworth as I noted here before the member for Wilson Heights mentioned it. When we were speaking about Bill 115 on Tuesday night the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) indicated very strongly we should have more local autonomy and, secondly, he indicated very strongly when I brought in my amendment to permit equalization of assessment under section 86 of the Assessment Act—and we were dealing in that instance with section 505 of the Municipal Act—he indicated very strongly that municipalities should be able to do what they wanted and, obviously, we were the wolves at that time in not being consistent in supporting him.

We will be consistent tonight, Mr. Chairman. We will support the amendment because I think it does bring more consistency across the province and that is what we want. In addition, in our conversations with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture they indicated very strongly they would like to see something of this nature. I also feel it reduces the use of the court.

We often hear about the excess number of cases that go to court. The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) says he needs more staff for the courts. We say we need more court buildings and everything else and yet we continually try to create situations where the courts have to be used. Albeit in this case it's a small claims court, nevertheless, it does overload the courts. I think this is one step in the direction of trying to get some kind of uniformity and in reducing the amount of administration in the courts without, I am certain, overburdening the municipalities in trying to settle these cases. Secondly, it's very often difficult for a small landholder, whether it's a lot in the city or a small farm in the rural municipality, to pay for the fence in lieu of waiting for a payment by his neighbour sometime in the future. I think this may resolve some of the cases that come up; and will resolve them more quickly. It will clear the decks as far as payment is concerned without overburdening the administration of the municipalities or the amount of revenue the municipality raises during the course of a year. We obviously will support this particular amendment.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I won't respond to the comments of the honourable member for Waterloo North because I was pleased to hear his remarks in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague for Welland-Thorold.

The parliamentary assistant made some comments regarding consistency. I want to suggest to him that first of all, if he reviews the record on second reading of this bill, he will see I urged at that time that there are certain responsibilities that should be a municipal responsibility and certain things that should be a provincial responsibility.

I want to suggest to him that if instead of dealing with this bill before us tonight we were dealing with an amendment to the Municipal Act that empowered municipalities to decide how they wanted to deal with fence disputes within their own municipality, that would be saying that fence disputes are the responsibility of the municipality and would be supporting municipal autonomy in that area.

That's not what's before us tonight. What is before us is a provincial bill that says fence disputes are to be settled in this way. I am assuming, therefore, it's the government's belief, and I tend to go along with that, that fence disputes, like a lot of other legal matters, should be uniform across the province. If the fence disputes themselves are to be handled in a uniform way, then I don't understand where municipal autonomy in regard to one very tiny and relatively insignificant portion of the whole process comes in.

I want to suggest to the parliamentary assistant that in section 10 of this bill, if a judge of the small claims court intervenes in the proceedings, then the costs incurred by that judge can be collected on the tax bill of the person concerned. In a subsequent section of the same bill, a similar provision exists, so there is already a precedent in this bill for part of the costs being collected on the tax roll for the persons who are involved in the dispute.

The amendment my colleague has introduced is saying if you can collect some of the costs that may be incurred in settling a fence dispute on the tax bills then why not make it so all the costs involved in a fence dispute can be collected on the tax bill. Rather than plugging up our small claims court or our court system with disputes regarding the recovery of funds that are awarded under this act, it would be so much simpler for them all to be collected on the tax bill against the party who is not paying them in a proper manner. I strongly urge support to the amendment introduced by my colleague.

Mr. McKessock: I would like to support this amendment as well. The municipality is going to collect and pay the amount of the fence, no matter whether we accept the bill as is or whether this amendment is adopted, so it is not going to change the amount of money or how it is going to be collected. It is only that the municipality will pay it immediately rather than waiting until it is collected on the taxes.

Government legislation is confusing enough without us allowing legislation to go through that we know will confuse. It will confuse because the bill allows the municipality to pass a bylaw to pay immediately, whereas this amendment would mean every municipality would have to pay immediately. Therefore, if we leave it the way it is, some municipality will pass the bylaw and others won't. To amend it so every municipality will have to pay immediately will mean when a farmer in Grey asks me the situation on this bill, and when he is to be paid, the answer will be the same as when a farmer in Perth or in Bruce asks how the money is to be collected. The amendment will straighten it out so no matter where in Ontario the farmer asks how he gets his money, it will be the same, if we adopt this amendment. Therefore, I will certainly support the amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am sort of wondering whether we should have made this change in the act at all. The present law, as it stands, does not provide for the municipality to pay out the money, but to pay it out as it is collected on the tax rolls. The government felt, and I think quite rightly, that if a municipality wanted, in effect, to advance the money they would be able to. I think carrying that to what I consider its illogical conclusion, to say the municipality must advance the money, is imposing a burden upon a municipality which, as a Legislature, we shouldn't be doing. We shouldn't, as I say, make them become a collection agency.

Many civil disputes are settled in the courts under many different forms of legislation. I don't know of any other legislation—there may be one, but I don't know of any other one—where after the judgement has been rendered, the public purse, in effect, lays out the money in a civil dispute between two private parties. Then the public purse has to go and collect the money from the party the judgement has gone against. I don't know any other case of it. I think by making mandatory on municipalities, that the public purse must lay out the money when a judgement is rendered in a private dispute between two private parties, is setting somewhat of a dangerous precedent.

The member for Wentworth mentioned the judge gets paid. The judge is a public official and the court costs, as assessed, are far different from what is assessed between two private parties. I don't think it is inconsistent, because in every other situation the court collects their money in a different way than the judgement against two private parties.

I really think the main point is this: the objection opposite seems to be that the courts are clogged enough and you would have a problem collecting. This doesn't have to go back before the judge. Once the fence-viewers have a certificate, the certificate is filed with the small claims court clerk and the bailiff goes out and does whatever bailiffs do in order to collect the money, if the injured party wishes to proceed in that way. You file an execution against the party the judgement has gone against and the judge doesn't get involved.

You don't have to go and get a judgement summons. I think I mentioned that before and I was in error. You simply file the certificate. You get a certificate for the bailiff and out he goes and collects whatever he can from the person who hasn't paid up. That is probably almost as quick as collecting from the municipality if you have to go through all these situations. In some of these very small rural townships, I think it can be a burden upon the part-time clerk who has to go ahead and go through all these situations in order to pay off on a judgement as brought forward by the fence-viewer. I don't think we should impose this on municipalities. I really think we should not make it mandatory.

If having it optional really bothers the members opposite, I think maybe we should retreat to the previous situation and just say, "Go and collect by the judge's summons, or wait till the man pays on his taxes," but not allow anybody to advance the money. Quite frankly, if one wants no local autonomy, if one wants one rule for the whole province—I would prefer that we not support the amendment.

On the understanding that amendment is not supported, if the opposition wants consistency they should bring forward another amendment saying in effect that no municipality can advance the money. It can go on the tax roll and as it is brought in it is paid out to the agreed party. I think that would be a much preferable position to the one the opposition is now bringing forward. So, again, I say I cannot support this amendment.

Mr. Swart: The pattern is going to be that we get up twice on amendments; there are two points I want to make, Mr. Chairman.

First: this is not a private affair as private disputes normally are. The parliamentary assistant should know that in no private dispute in the courts does a municipality end up paying part of the costs. This is a municipal action and is not just a private action.

The second point I want to make on this has not been mentioned and I suggest the parliamentary assistant to a very large extent is setting up a straw man. Does he know that there are fewer than 10 cases a year in Ontario which go further than the fence-viewers? Is this going to be a major burden to the municipalities? Of course not. The costs are small, the instances are very few. This makes eminent sense.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I think there is one kind of example where the court gets involved in the collection of judgements and that is in cases in the family court where we are dealing with maintenance payments for children, for spouses who are unable to take care of themselves. I think this government last year agreed with the principle that a clerk of the court or a public official should be actively involved in the collection of those funds.

When we are dealing with property rights, however, I beg to differ in terms of throwing on a public body—and with all due respect to the member for Welland-Thorold, we are dealing with a private matter, we are dealing with two property owners. The fence-viewer is a semi-judicial person who is deciding the rights as between those two people.

I don't know if the member for Welland-Thorold has had any experience of a dispute involving a fence-viewer, but I have had a few both in terms of my legal career and my public career. They are bitter disputes between the two individuals. Why should we throw the municipality in the middle of this particular dispute? It is between two private people, there is a decision made, they are talking about money related to property. Surely they can support and collect their own debt.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Section 13 agreed to.

On section 14:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that section 14(1) of the bill be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof: "(1) Where the fence-viewers have attended at premises pursuant to a notice given under section 4(2), section 11(8) or section 13(5) or (7) and have decided (a) that no award shall be made because they have no jurisdiction to make the award or because the owners of the adjoining lands have requested that no award be made; or (b) that no certificate or determination with directions shall be made, they shall prepare their decision in the prescribed form giving reasons therefor, and shall specify in the decision that the fees of the fence-viewers in respect of such attendance be paid either by one adjoining owner or by the other or that a specified portion of the fees be paid by each of them."

Mr. Rotenberg: This does not in any way change the principle or the thrust of the bill. It simply clarifies, in response to the proper question raised by the member for Welland-Thorold and others, that section 14 seemed to be contradictory to section 7. Possibly a court somewhere down the line would make that interpretation. So upon his request we have redrafted this section simply to clarify that in section 7 the award is still mandatory, but section 14 provides for those cases where an award cannot be made and that the fence-viewers will still be paid. That is the reason for the amendment.

Mr. Epp: We support the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Motion agreed to.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 15 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 18 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: "(2) No person shall initiate proceedings for calling on the fence-viewers to act under subsection 1 without the approval of the council of the municipality in which the road allowance is situate."

Mr. Sterling: In many of the areas of eastern Ontario there are many unopened road allowances. When reading this section, and with some experience in this matter, I became concerned that if a fence is erected on the centre line of an unopened road allowance it could restrict the use of that unopened road allowance for people who are using it as access to property which is otherwise inaccessible.

Therefore, under an earlier section of the act, section 11(8), the process of notifying adjacent owners goes through the clerk of the municipality in the normal circumstances. One owner comes in to see the clerk and says, "I want the fence-viewer to go out and adjudicate between myself and a neighbour."

The problem with involving just the two adjacent owners is that the erection of the fence along the centre line can have a detrimental effect on a person who is using that as private access to his property which is beyond those two properties immediately concerned.

Another problem is that if, for instance, land is unfenced and all of a sudden the owner of one of the properties decides he would like his land fenced, he goes to the clerk of the municipality. The clerk then notifies the other owner and in seven days, I believe it is—a short period of time—the fence-viewer comes and makes an adjudication. If that decision comes down quickly, one of the parties can immediately move to begin erecting the fence.

This gives very little notification, not only to the third party. I mentioned before that the party who is being served the notice often is unaware of what the act is about. He has never seen a fence-viewer nor does he know what his rights are. I have had some personal experience with people who have used the unopened road allowance for access to their property. In effect what has happened is that, by erecting the fence down the centre line, usable access to their property has been cut off.

What I intend to do in this subsection is, first of all, initiating the action through council when dealing with an unopened road allowance so that they will be notified of the circumstance, and not the clerk alone, so that rural councils will be very well informed as to where open road allowances lie and what people are using them as access to their property beyond. Then they could take into consideration the third party. They might say to an individual who wants a fence on the centre line: "You can't have it because a third party down the line needs it."

Not only that, but they can also consider the problem of someone giving a little more time and explanation to an individual who is using not only the portion that would be within his half of the road allowance, but may be in the other part of the road allowance, for a practical access to his property. What I am saying here is it may be argued that it is included in the first part of the section in that the municipality can say to anyone he doesn't have the right to half the property, but the problem is that the process is set in motion prior to this fact coming out.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address myself to section 18 and particularly to the amendment. I think the member for Carleton-Grenville is quite right in moving this particular amendment to section 18 of the act where the line fence can be constructed or built along an unopened road allowance, that is, down the centre of the line.

My concern is that it may have some benefits to farmers or the persons in the agricultural industry, but I think the member is quite right in that it will deny access in many cases, for example, in my particular area, where there are a number of unopened road allowances going to a body of water such as Lake Erie. In this particular instance under section 18, if we permit a fence to be constructed on an unopened road allowance, it will deny the public access to that body of water.

I don't have to remind the House of my feelings relating to access to the shores of Lake Erie in my area, where the public for a number of years has had difficulty getting to the lake. In many cases, they have to use 66 feet of a road allowance and they would be packed in there like sardines in a can. On the other side of that road allowance, there is half a mile of vacant beach.

A decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario was handed down, I believe, in 1975 by Mr. Justice Stark. Because the public had no access to that body of water because of a fence denying that right, he passed on to the adjoining property owners on the side of the road allowance title to the lakeshore, which certainly in the long run denied the public access to the remainder of that lakeshore which is crown land. It was crown land in this particular instance.

I suggest to the member piloting the bill through the House tonight that I would like to see section 18 of the bill withdrawn for the simple reason that that removal will solve problems there. In my area, it certainly will. Otherwise, I can see more fences being erected along these unopened road allowances denying the public access to them.

I just could not support any particular instance where we would permit a fence down the middle of the road. When you come to the end of the road, you will see the fence either going right or left and blocking off the public. I think it is most important when it comes to a body of water, a lake or stream in Ontario that under that particular section we are going to deny the public access to that lake or river or stream.

I could accept an amendment, if the member would consider it that there should be public notice of the intent of the adjoining property owners to put a fence down the middle of the road, and not only just to notify council. Sometimes council can be a little bit lax in its duties, and these things can be slipped through without the public being aware of it and the fence erected.

I suggest an unopened road allowance should remain in public control at all times. I can see the problems not only with the Lake Erie shoreline but in almost every cottage area in the northern part of the province and in southern Ontario as well.

I commend the member for bringing forth that particular amendment because it does draw to our attention that there are problems with section 18 of the bill.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I will be brief. I agree with the amendment which is proposed and commend the member for Carleton-Grenville for catching this and introducing it.

The comments by the member for Erie should be given some attention. They commend themselves to some attention. Although there may be no problem in this regard in the rural areas, as the member rightly points out, in the Niagara Peninsula where the road allowances are the only access to the beaches in many areas, and where there is a great deal of interest in maintaining those open, apart from perhaps even the local municipality, there probably should be a notice given if a fence is going to be installed.

I recognize that most types of fences are not very permanent structures, and could be taken down. But once a fence is installed that becomes very difficult, so probably public notice should be given in addition to the amendment which is here.

I'm not sure how we handle that at this time, unless we want to stand this section down to endeavour to incorporate that proposal. It seems to me that's the way we should deal with this.

Mr. Rotenberg: Two points, Mr. Chairman: Firstly, I will support the amendment from the member for Carleton-Grenville. But I would point out that what he is putting explicitly in the amendment is already implicit in legislation.

That is, it's all very well for two adjoining owners to say they're going to fence off the road allowance, but as the act says in effect at the end of this section, they deem to do so at their peril. No one can walk on to public land and put up a fence without the consent of the municipality. Some people may do it, but they shouldn't be able to do it.

I think it's well if this is done explicitly in the act, as the member has brought forward in the amendment, so it is explicit. That way, everyone knows before he can put up a fence between two adjoining properties, he has to go to the municipality and the municipality does whatever it does to give notice.

I share the concern of the member for Erie but I would point out that this act does not give the municipality any powers which it does not have now. As I understand the law, and it's another section of the act, a municipality can close and fence off an unopened road allowance at any time without reference to anybody, without giving notice. That is a power a municipality now has.

Mr. Haggerty: They have to do it by by-law.

Mr. Rotenberg: A municipality can close up an unopened road allowance at the present time.

Mr. Swart: An unopened road allowance?

Mr. Rotenberg: Unopened.

Mr. Swart: They can't do that without taking lengthy procedures.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh, yes they can.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, if it is an open road, then they have to give notice. It's a whole procedure. But they can close an unopened road allowance, just sitting there all by itself, without giving notice to the adjoining owners.

Hon. W. Newman: They do it all the time.

Mr. Rotenberg: I'm sorry they have to give some notice.

Mr. Swart: Of course they do.

Mr. Rotenberg: We're not taking any of that power away. We're not changing any powers. This act only deals with fences, whether or not you put up a fence. The member for Erie is concerned, and I understand his concern, that maybe municipalities have too much power in being able to close up unopened road allowances.

If it's an open road allowance leading to water, for instance, which is the member's concern, there has to be permission from this government to do it. But for an unopened road allowance, there doesn't have to be.

I would suggest to the member for Erie this matter should not be dealt with in the Line Fences Act. If there is a loophole in the act which would allow municipalities to close up unopened road allowances which are being used for access roads, I'd suggest that should be reviewed in the proper section of the Municipal Act and not be dealt with in the Line Fences Act.

As the member for Erie has a problem of concern, I'll undertake with our staff at least to review those sections and discuss them at some early future date with him to see whether or not we do need some changes in the proper section of the Municipal Act. But I would suggest to him the proper place to put in the caution, and to make sure the rights of citizens who use unopened road allowances are not taken away, is not in the Line Fences Act but in the general municipal legislation that deals with closing and opening road allowances.

So I would hope we would carry the clause as amended here and catch up with the other problem at a future date.

Mr. Haggerty: I'm trying to grasp the comments from the member. This concerns any person who has property that adjoins a road allowance—it doesn't have to be a person in the agricultural industry; it can be a cottage owner or a person who has lakefront property that adjoins or abuts an open road allowance. This would permit them to put a line fence up the middle of the road and at some place before the end of that fence branch off either right or left and close it off to the adjoining property owners. It's a common practice of Americans along the lakeshore of Lake Erie. They're doing it every year.

By permitting this, when it comes to a court decision, whether it's under the Quieting Titles Act—I guess that's the name I'm looking for—or some other decision of the court and the Chief Justice starts making decisions to give owners of abutting property the right of access to lakeshore properties—he says they maintained the lakeshore because the public did not have access to it—if you permit a fence through a centre line of an unopened road allowance, you're going to deny public access to that lakefront property. Then usually once a precedent had been established in the Supreme Court it's a routine matter. The entitlement the public may have to that lakefront property will be lost forever.

That's the point I'm raising. You're going to permit a new angle for these property owners to deny the public access to a body of water.

Mr. Ruston: That a good point.

Mr. Sterling: I don't know whether the decision the member for Erie is referring to would relate to this specific type of problem.

I mentioned third parties when I was talking about the rural municipality problem I basically designed this amendment for.

I didn't want to encumber the municipality with having to advertise in newspapers on every line fence that occurred between two adjacent owners. I think that would be too expensive for them in terms of the type of problem I was thinking about.

I appreciate your problem in saying there should be public notice in relation to the right of way to the water. But with this amendment whereby the municipal council has to have it brought to its attention, surely the people should be able to rely on those municipal councillors to protect their rights rather than allowing two property owners to benefit at the expense of the public as a whole.

I can understand the member for Welland-Thorold's reason for wanting the public to know, but in practical terms, it would be extremely expensive for many small municipalities to follow that rule.

I also think section 18 is explicit that under this particular section, which would become section 18(1) as it now stands, although the party would occupy that land there is no title conferred on that particular party. I don't know which decision the member for Erie was relating to when he was speaking on this matter.

[9:15]

The third thing is in many instances municipalities would very much like adjacent owners to take on the road allowance so that it can be properly cared for. They would in fact like a line fence down the middle. So I don't think an outright prohibition for doing that is proper either.

I basically designed the section to allow the municipality, the municipal council, to have notice of it and would hope they would act in a responsible manner in protecting the rights of the various individuals in the municipality.

Mr. Swart: The more I listen to the debate, Mr. Chairman, the more I am convinced we should stand this amendment down until we do draft—unless it can be done quickly now—provisions for some form of public notice. At the end of this clause it might read something like: “and further, wherever permission is given by council, it may only be given after due notification has been made as if the road allowance were to be closed.”

I can see that in effect this could stop off the use of a road allowance. An unopened road allowance is somewhat difficult to determine. I think I am right in saying from my municipal experience that an unopened road allowance is one upon which a municipality has spent no money. That is the interpretation of it. There are all kinds of unopened road allowances the public use throughout this province where the public has a real interest—and, as I said before, even from another municipality.

It seems to me if you are going to put a fence down the middle of that road it effectively stops the use of that road. Even a council might want to stop off that road and not have to go through the due process and the public interest would be hurt.

Therefore, I think the amendment should be stood down. Everyone in the Legislature—most perhaps, except the parliamentary assistant behind you—is in favour of your amendment. But I think it should be stood down until we refine it to that degree, because I am afraid the public interest will be hurt if it goes as is.

Mr. Isaacs: I have just one point to add to the comments my colleague from Welland-Thorold has made. I would ask the member for Carleton-Grenville what provisions he has in mind for reopening the unopened road allowance, if that is the right word—I mean removing the fence. If at some time after the adjoining owners have been required to pay for it under the terms of the Line Fences Act and the council subsequently decides it wishes to return the road allowance to whatever use it was previously being put to, does the council automatically have the power to require removal of the fence without compensation to those who have paid for it? In these circumstances the abutting owners are really taking quite a gamble on what might happen in the municipality in terms of the whim of the local council.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the clarification.

Mr. Nixon: Are those nods recorded in Hansard?

Mr. Sterling: The reason behind my amendment is to clarify the process which the people must go through to avoid exactly what you are saying—that one of the owners gets on the wagon before people realize what is going on, so he has half of the fence up and all of a sudden—

Mr. Swart: I know the intent; I think it should go that much further, that's what I'm saying. The intent is good.

Mr. Sterling: I only argue about the public notice in terms of small rural municipalities where this normally would happen. It would be extremely expensive for them to go through that process.

Mr. Rotenberg: The whole purpose of section 18 is not to change the law on closing or opening of road allowances, and it is not to confer rights on anybody. The whole purpose of section 18 is to provide that where, with the consent of the municipality, the two adjoining owners are going to fence down the middle of the unopened road allowance, they can call in the fence-viewers. That's the purpose of this section—to have a mechanism where in that circumstance the fence-viewers can be called in. In my opinion it doesn't confer any other rights on the adjoining owners or relieve the municipality of its moral obligation.

It would seem to me if any council is going to give its approval, depending on the circumstances, if it is in any way responsible—and we assume all municipal council members are honourable and responsible—it will use its discretion where notice should be given and where it shouldn't be given. I can't imagine a council giving permission in the case the member for Erie raises where the road allowance goes down to the water and they are going to let two private owners grab that allowance and not let the people who vote for them have access. If they did that they'd find themselves out in the street after the next election.

But there are the cases where the member for Carleton-Grenville says that—

Mr. Swart: In the Niagara area that's been done already; many of the road allowances to the beach have been closed.

Mr. Haggerty: You are just going to compound the problem.

Mr. Rotenberg: What I am saying really is that this section of the act provides for the fence-viewers in most cases. But as long as it is indicated it must be with the permission of the municipality, whether this act is here or not or whether we change it or not, the municipality can close that road allowance and not put a fence up and we're not tackling the problem.

As I said earlier, with respect to the member for Erie and others, that if there is a problem in the general legislation, let's look at the general legislation. Let's not apply a Band-Aid if there is a problem in the Line Fences Act and then for other reasons not tackle the problem. For this reason I think it really isn't necessary to put a notice provision in this act. But if a notice provision is needed in the general act, then I think we should look at the general legislation.

Motion agreed to.

Section 18, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 19 and 20 agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Rotenberg moves that subsections 1 and 2 of section 21 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

“(1) If any tree is thrown down by accident or otherwise so as to cause damage to a line fence, the owner or occupant of the land on which the tree stood shall forthwith remove the tree and repair the fence.

“(2) On the neglect or refusal of the owner or occupant of the land on which the tree stood so to do for 48 hours after notice in writing to remove the tree, the injured person may remove it in the most convenient and inexpensive manner and may make good the fence so damaged and may retain the tree to remunerate him for any such removal.

“(3) A person who repairs a fence under subsection 2 may recover the cost of the work in the same manner as an owner under section 11(3) may recover the value of work done by him.”

He further moves that the present subsections 3 and 4 be renumbered sections 4 and 5 respectively.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, could I raise a point with the parliamentary assistant? He refers to the injured person. Surely we don't expect the tree fell on this poor chap. Would he not prefer to have it, “adjoining landowner”?

Mr. Rotenberg: I'm not a lawyer and my lawyers have implemented what should happen. An “injured person” doesn't mean injured in the physical sense. That means injured in the monetary sense. I think it's clear in law.

But the purpose of this amendment is simply this. In reviewing the legislation—and this clause was taken from the clause in the previous act—I think the clause as now written goes too far. It provides of course for removal of the tree and repair of the fence, but also provides that the fence-viewers can adjudicate as it says, “and otherwise make good any damage caused by the falling of the tree.” The tree can fall over on the barn, the tractor, the hired hand, or the farmer's wife and you could be into a several hundred thousand dollar lawsuit being adjudicated by the fence-viewer.

This was never anticipated in the Line Fences Act and shouldn't be in the Line Fences Act. The fence-viewers should be limited in their jurisdiction to judge on repairing of fences and getting the tree out; any other damage should be referred to some other jurisdiction.

Simply, the purpose of this amendment—and it's long in wording in order to clarify it all—is to remove from the fence-viewers the apparent power to adjudicate other than damage to the fence and removal of the tree. We don't think the fence-viewers should have that power.

Mr. Breithaupt: If I may for a moment, what you have done is suddenly cited one of the most ancient maxims of English law, which is, “Whatever moves to do the deed is deodand and forfeited.” If the tree branch falls on your neighbour's house, presumably you get to keep the branch, for whatever good that may be. But I still suggest to you that “injured person” here—other than of course the hired hand or the farmer's wife, to which the parliamentary assistant referred—is still, at least in my opinion, not the right phrase. I think you should be dealing with the adjoining landowner to ensure since servient and dominant tenements are not involved in this kind of legislation at this point—that you have the parties more clearly defined.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would bow to the superior legal knowledge of the member for Kitchener and would accept—or we can just take it as a correction to my amendment—that in the fourth line of subsection 2 “injured person” be replaced by the words “adjoining landowner.”

Mr. Epp: The amendment is self-evident and we will support it.

Mr. Swart: We will also support the amendment.

Mr. Haggerty: I am going to be raising Cain here tonight, Mr. Chairman, if you can put up with me, but I am looking at this particular section again. I must apologize for not being here on second reading, but the member knows there are other committees meeting in this assembly building, and I am sure I was at the Hydro select committee meeting on that particular night.

The point I bring to your attention is that the bill says “line fence.” There is compensation if a tree from an adjoining property owner falls on the person's land next to it and damages result. I wonder, does “line fence” delete the responsibility of a municipality in a sense? Say you have a line fence along a road where you have a tree along the road allowance fall down on the farmer's fence and he is forever going out there repairing it. If an automobile hits the fence or a vehicle hits the fence, sometimes the farmer has a hard time collecting damages for that lost fence.

Again, you can have a municipality, for example, which has a line fence just alongside a road, which the farmer pays the complete cost for and it is not shared by the municipality. But under today's snow removal methods carried out by municipalities—and I don't know if this has been brought to the attention of the parliamentary assistant or not—in my particular area, and I am sure in any snow-belt area where heavy snowfall occurs, particularly along a county road where they have a 90-foot or 120-foot width and they have to find someplace to dump that snow—and I don't have to tell you where they dump it; they come with big payloaders that carry 12 cubic yards or eight cubic yards, and pick it up, and where do they move it? Right over on top of the farmer's fence.

I will tell you, I have seen a farmer threaten to shoot them with a shotgun, because every year he has to go out and spend money. It is expensive to put a fence up today. I think I put up 660 feet and it cost me around about $800 or $900. That is expensive, and you can do much of the work yourself.

But all I am suggesting to you here is that I think when we come to compensation there has to be some place in this act so that where a municipality dumps snow deliberately on a farmer's fence, it should be held responsible for it. I would like to see something someplace along here so that when you say a "line fence" it includes a municipality road, so that they do have some obligation to pay that farmer for the damages they are doing to his property.

If it is for the sake of the public, to get a person to work without him losing his $8 or $10 an hour, surely the farmer must be compensated for that opening of the road, with the speed that some municipalities open it and dump the snow on his property. Surely there is enough width on that 66-foot road allowance to keep the snow there without dumping it on the fence.

I bring that to your attention. I think it is time there should be something in the act because in many cases it is done deliberately by a municipality. If they are removing snow, instead of throwing it against the wind they can come over to the other side and take it and let the wind go the other way with it, which wouldn't do too much damage to either side of the fence. But it is expensive to a number of farmers in my area who have to put fences up there year by year.

Mr. Rotenberg: To reply to the member for Erie, this clause in no way interferes with the general liability laws and in no way precludes the rights of one owner, be it public or private, from suing the adjacent owner. In effect this clause simply extracts from liability law the problem of a tree falling on a fence, and makes it specific that fence-viewers get into that dispute. If a snowplough comes along and damages a fence, this does not take away any rights the property owner may have to sue or not to sue the municipality or township or whoever came along and damaged his fence.

In this legislation, I do not think one can provide for all the ways a fence can be damaged. A tree falling on a fence is one that historically has been a problem and has been within the jurisdiction of the fence-viewers for many years. No other liability section has and, as I say, it does not preclude the owner from exercising his rights under liability law against whoever damages his fence, be it another public or another private person.

Mr. Haggerty: What the parliamentary assistant has said might be quite all right, but let's take another approach: Under the Municipal Act—I believe it is—a county, regional or municipal road crew has the right to go in and put up snow fences some 300 or 400 feet inside that fence. Sometimes that snow will be just held back enough to hit that fence and pile up. It can be rather heavy snow, which is there for a number of months. As spring comes, the fence is ripped right off the post and damaged.

Does the parliamentary assistant not think there should be some liability to the municipality in this particular instance? It is a line fence and they are being permitted by legislation to go on private property to put up a snow fence to keep the snow from settling on the roads, et cetera, but it settles on the line fence. Again, this is where the farmer has to pick up the tab for repairing that fence. There should be some form of compensation in this bill to protect that line fence owner.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, with respect, if there is some other provision in our legislation which allows the municipality or the province to put up a snow fence on someone's land, and because of that there is damage done to the private property, there is, first, the recourse under general liability. Second, if there is a lack in that section of whatever legislation it is, again, I think it should be dealt with under the section of whatever legislation allows the public body to put up a snow fence. In other words, we should put in that legislation some form of compensation if the snow fence does damage, or if as a result of the snow fence, damage is done. I don't think it should be put in this particular act.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to carry this a little bit further. I think through the experience of the honourable member, sitting on local council as an alderman in this city, he knows the routine when persons want to collect for damages from the municipality. We have insurance that protects the public in a sense, and if one is lucky enough, one can collect it. When one goes to the insurance persons responsible for selling it to the municipalities, they always say, "Don't worry about it, gentlemen; we will look after your interests." I say very few persons have been compensated for holes in roads or anything.

Mr. Hennessy: They don't live that long.

Mr. Haggerty: That is the type of insurance they have in municipalities. I say it is costly for any citizen to take on the city fathers because there is just no possible way they can win the costs involved. I am saying there should be some form of compensation here, relating to a line fence along a regional, county or municipal road, because it costs money to erect these fences. Surely, if the farmer's cattle get out on the road, he would be held responsible for the accident.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Chairman, in this section it is stated that when a tree falls on a fence, if the party owning the tree doesn't remove it, then the other party can have the tree for repairing the fence. That is a little bit laughable because probably most of these trees that fall will be dead elms and won't be worth very much. I think it would be much better if this cost was shared, as in the rest of the Line Fences Act, rather than say he gets the tree as compensation.

Motion agreed to.

Section 21, as amended, agreed to.

On section 22:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 22(1) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) This act applies to lands owned by a municipality and to lands owned by a local board within the meaning of the Municipal Affairs Act, including conservation authorities."

Mr. Epp further moves that section 22(4) and (5) be deleted.

Mr. Epp: As we have discussed earlier, this act applies to private lands. It has to this point omitted the obligation by the municipality or by local boards to have their share in the settlement of these disputes. Further on, it does include conservation authorities.

We believe very strongly that municipalities, as well as the other crown agencies, should be as responsible as individuals with respect to line fences. The municipalities have a lot of land, as does the province, and they should be included in the settlement of disputes. That is the reason for this amendment, so they will be included in this act.

Mr. Swart: I rise to support this amendment. I think we know this, perhaps more than any other single matter, is a concern to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. Even the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, the one that would be involved in the cost, have come out in support of the principle that local governments should have to pay their share of line fences, the same as with anything else.

Hon. W. Newman: When did they do that?

Mr. Swart: It might be appropriate to read something for the edification of the Minister of Agriculture and Food pertaining to this. This is from the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, "ROMA report on Bill 17, An Act to revise the Line Fences Act, as endorsed by the Municipal Liaison Committee, May 1979: As requested by the ministry, the ROMA board reviewed a number of amendments to Bill 17 proposed by the NDP. After considering these amendments the board adopted a motion endorsing Bill 17 with the following changes." They include almost all the amendments we have proposed, including the one we are talking about at the present time. The wording is slightly different; we just said you delete the section. They make the positive statement. It was in response to your own ministry that they supported the NDP proposals.

When they have that feeling among the municipalities themselves, not only the rural municipalities but the Municipal Liaison Committee representing all the municipalities of this province, it seems to be reasonable, therefore, that this should be included.

The reason it was mentioned by the member for Waterloo North is that conservation authorities under the act have to accept that responsibility as is proposed. Municipalities in many instances will have parks similar to those of a conservation authority. What sense does it make if a conservation authority has to pay its share of a line fence between the authority land and a farmer's land, and a municipality would not have to make any such payment? To be consistent, a municipality should have the same responsibility.

There is a very real principle involved. The principle involved here is that a municipality, a public body, should accept the responsibility it imposes on other people. It shouldn't be exempt. If it is fair that an abutting owner should have to pay for half of a line fence, whether that abutting owner happens to be a municipality, private owner or conservation authority, then that body should pay its rightful share.

I would ask the member for Waterloo North who introduced the motion if he would be willing to accept a slight change. Although in this party we agree with the amendment, it seems to me there should be some slight changes in it to more accurately fit the situation. I wonder if we shouldn't say, "subject to section 18, this act applies to lands other than lands that constitute a public highway," and then add the words "or unopened road allowance." It seems to me that unopened road allowances should be normally exempted, except that through section 18 you could put it down the middle of the road. Otherwise, a municipality would have to pay for its share of a fence on both sides of an unopened road allowance. I would suggest that that perhaps should be added in there.

I am just wondering if he would be willing to accept that as part of his amendment. I won't formally move it at this time as he may be willing to accept it.

Mr. Epp: If I may just clarify that, we have two other amendments on sections 23 and 24. I believe that my amendment for section 24, which says, "Notwithstanding sections 22 and 23, this act does not apply to any lands that constitute a public highway," would in actual fact respond to and answer the question the member for Welton-Thorold has raised.

Mr. Swart: I am not sure that a public highway includes an unopened road allowance; in fact I think it does not.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am informed that it does.

Mr. Swart: It does? I'll bow to the lawyer.

Mr. Rotenberg: Just to follow up on the latter remarks of the member for Waterloo North and just so it will be on the record, I gather that if his amendments to sections 22 and 23 carry, the member for Waterloo North is committed to putting his amendment to the new section 24 and his party supports that amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. Epp: Yes.

Mr. Rotenberg: Under those circumstances we will not oppose the amendment to section 22.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on the amendment?

Motion agreed to.

Section 22, as amended, agreed to.

On section 23:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that section 23(1) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"Except as otherwise provided in subsections 2 and 3, this act applies so as to bind the crown in right of Ontario.

"(2) This act does not apply to lands of the crown in right of Ontario that at no time have been disposed of by the crown in right of Ontario by letters patent, deed or otherwise.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision in this act, an award made under section 7 in respect of lands vested in the crown in right of Ontario shall not require the crown to be responsible for more than one half of a fence or to pay to the adjoining owner an amount exceeding 50 per cent of the cost of the fence."

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Chairman, I was disturbed when this bill came out that the crown and municipalities were not included. There is a large amount of government land in Grey and Bruce area, comprising Niagara Escarpment, Natural Resources and conservation authority land. I have also had some complaints about fence repairs to some of this land.

My feeling was that if the government is going to compete with people to buy land and become a land owner, then it must take the responsibilities that go along with owning land, the same as the rest of us. I am sure my neighbour wouldn't mind if he were exempt from the act either, but the act forces him to become a responsible land owner as far as line fences are concerned. If the government is going to be a land owner, it must not be exempt from the responsibilities.

This government, I believe, professes to be a free-enterprise government. If that is the case, in a free-enterprise system everybody must be treated alike. If the government is going to compete with you and me to buy land, Mr. Chairman, they must accept the same responsibilities and be responsible landowners.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I support this amendment, particularly subsection 1. I regret the mover did not speak on his amendment because I'm a bit puzzled as to why he has put in the qualifications of subsections 2 and 3.

It seems to me that the crown, the same as a municipality, should have to accept its obligation, whether or not the land has ever been disposed of by the crown, I can think of many farmers in northern Ontario, particularly up around Sault Ste. Marie, who have a farm, and the boundary of that farm is against crown land which has never been disposed of. Why shouldn't the crown have to pay part of the cost of a fence? It's not just to keep the farmer's cattle in; it's to keep other animals out. You should have the fence-viewers view that and determine what proportion should be paid by each.

It bothers me that subsection 2 is included in this and also subsection 3, which states that: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, an award made under section 7 in respect of lands vested in the crown and the right of Ontario shall not require the crown to be responsible for more than one half of the fence or to pay the adjoining owner an amount exceeding 50 per cent of the cost of the fence."

Once again, I could see circumstances under which the crown should pay more than one half of the cost of the fence, just as perhaps in some instances the farmer should have to pay more than one half of the cost of the fence.

What about a large provincial park? It may have been rather virgin land along a lake, with some farms in behind it, and the government has come along and bought it or used this virgin land for a provincial park. It could well be that, as happens on occasion, the people frequenting that provincial park may be doing damage to the farmer's property. The farmer was perfectly satisfied without a fence or with a very cheap type of fence, but once the park is there he needs a good quality fence. If the location of the park has caused this, it might be reasonable that the crown should have to pay more than 50 per cent of the cost. We've now established pretty clearly, 50 per cent of the cost, except in very extenuating circumstances.

That might cause the member for Waterloo North to reconsider whether in fact subsection 3—and subsection 2 for that matter—should remain here. We in this party are inclined to move an amendment to this amendment which would delete subsections 2 and 3. But perhaps before my colleague from Wentworth speaks, the member for Waterloo North would like to make some comments on this, in case there's something we have overlooked.

The principle that the crown and a municipality should accept the same responsibility as other landowners is sound, and I'd like to see it included here, in exactly the same way we included it for the municipality. Therefore, I am inclined, subject to any further discussion, to take out subsections 2 and 3.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, we've had a considerable amount of discussion on these lands. The lands of which we speak are those which obviously have not been sold by the crown.

In a sense they are virgin lands the crown has owned since day one, I guess.

We felt that there was no particular reason at this time to include these lands in the act. There was no compelling reason for this and as a result it was felt in our judgement that there might be expenses the crown would have to absorb, or situations they would have to get into which really weren't necessary. So it was our judgment that the crown, as far as unpatented lands were concerned, should be excluded.

Mr. Rotenberg: I have two very brief comments on the point from the member for Welland-Thorold. When a fence is needed around a provincial park it has been the policy of the Ministry of Natural Resources to build that fence totally at the provincial expense. Also, when a piece of land is purchased from unpatented land, usually the agreement of purchase includes an agreement with the crown for fencing.

Again, as in the previous section, on the understanding that the member for Waterloo North is going to move his new section 24, we will not oppose his amendment to section 23.

Mr. McKessock: Subsection 3 is really doing the same thing for the government as it is for the farmers paying 50 per cent, so I can't see any reason why that should be stroked out. The bill in the first place didn't have the government in it at all; to have them in now and paying 50 per cent is much better than not having them pay anything.

As far as subsection 2 is concerned, the lands are mainly up in northern Ontario and out of the farming area. Where this act is going to take effect mostly is in the farming areas of southern Ontario, so I can't see that binding the crown to these undeeded areas has much purpose.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Isaacs moves that the amendment be further amended by deleting subsections 2 and 3.

Mr. Isaacs: I think the arguments have pretty well covered the amendment to the amendment I have introduced. I want to suggest to the previous speaker that if the size of the award is unlimited in terms of individual property owners, except there is guidance there that it should be 50 per cent, then why is that guidance not sufficient when dealing with crown lands to absolutely bind the fence-viewers that the award made against the crown shall be 50 per cent? It seems to me to be unnecessary.

With regard to the comments from the member for Wilson Heights, I suggest that we should not be relying on the good graces of the government to provide fences around provincial parks. We are putting legislation in place that may last for another 100 or more years. If that is the case, and if the government of the day were to change and the Rhinoceros Party were to be running this province—

Mr. Rotenberg: They'll get there before you do.

Mr. Isaacs:—then perhaps it would be appropriate that we have this legislation specify that the award can be made against the crown to provide fences around provincial parks or around any other kind of provincial enterprise—and there are plenty of those.

So, Mr. Chairman, I really think subsections 2 and 3 detract slightly from the intent of this amendment which I otherwise fully support and I would strongly suggest that the amendment to the amendment be carried.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would just indicate we cannot support the amendment to the amendment and we couldn't support the bill if the amendment to the amendment carried.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I wonder quite seriously whether my colleagues on the right really considered the implications of this amendment with regard to the north. There is a large area in the north where there are a great many boundaries between farmers and crown land which has never been deeded from the crown. I suggest hundreds of miles of such boundaries exist and what we are really doing if we pass this in its present form is applying one law to the farmers in southern Ontario and another law to the farmers in northern Ontario. In southern Ontario there is no crown land—or very little; I know of none; there may be some—which has not been deeded from the crown. This can be a real hardship on the farmers in northern Ontario. They have to pay for the cost of maintenance of the fence all around their farm because it is abutting virgin crown land.

Even at this late date I would appeal to the Liberal Party to change its position on this and to join with us in deleting these two subsections, because they are very, very discriminatory against certain farmers in this province and particularly the farmers in the north. I don't really think this was the intent of the amendment, but I suggest that is the application.

I repeat, if this passes those farmers in northern Ontario who abut virgin crown land will have no recourse but to pay the total cost of the fence which separates them from that crown land; they will have to pay it all themselves, and I wouldn't like to think this is the intent of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Epp: I want to clarify two points. One is that it is not discriminatory to the farmers in northern Ontario. Suggesting that there is no crown land in southern Ontario and therefore it is discriminatory against northern Ontario—that is not the case; there is crown land in southern Ontario.

An hon. member: Virgin crown land?

Mr. Epp: Second, this act does not preclude the province from making a settlement along a line fence with a private property owner. It only says the crown is not obligated to do so; it does not preclude, as the member for Thorold-Welland suggests, the crown from getting involved and paying their fair share and often paying—

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is Welland-Thorold, not Thorold-Welland.

Mr. Epp: I am sorry, I got my alphabet wrong. We go from W to T, rather than T to W.

It does not preclude the crown from doing so, as the member for Welland-Thorold suggests.

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Chairman, I would like clarification of the statement the member for Wilson Heights made about the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Rotenberg: Basically, subject to a section 24 being brought forward, we will not oppose this amendment. As the member for Waterloo North indicated that a section 24 which will exclude roads from this amendment will be introduced, we will not oppose it.

Mr. McKessock: What about the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Rotenberg: We will not support the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Isaacs' amendment to the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

[10:00]

On section 24:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Epp moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"24. Notwithstanding sections 22 and 23, this act does not apply to any lands that constitute a public highway."

He further moves that the existing sections 24 to 30 of the bill be renumbered as sections 25 to 31.

Mr. Epp: We have had a lot of discussion with respect to this section as it pertains to sections 22 and 23. It was felt there would be an undue burden if the lands that constituted public highway were not excluded from this act. As a result, we have moved they be excluded.

Mr. Swart: We, of course, have that provision in the amendments we had originally submitted and we are obviously going to support that amendment at this time. I do have another amendment to section 24 as well.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments on Mr. Epp's amendment?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 24 be amended by adding, after the words "subsection 1 of section 354 of the Municipal Act is enforced," the following words: "but the provisions do apply in respect of land in such a municipality which is used by any owner for agricultural purposes."

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, we are moving this amendment because we think the situation since the original act was enacted has changed so substantially that there is no longer the arbitrary division between the urban and rural municipalities there was 30, 40, 50 or 60 years ago.

We know municipalities have the power under section 354 of the Municipal Act to take over responsibility for fences including line fences to regulate them. That section of the act applies mainly to and was intended to apply mainly to urban municipalities. It gives them the power to limit the heights of fences, particularly on corner lots. In every respect it applies to those municipalities and it is much more arbitrary than the Line Fences Act which gives either owner the right to appeal and a great many other rights.

It seems to us in this party there are farmers who live within urban communities. Certainly, since regional government has been enacted in this province there are a great many municipalities in the Niagara region and elsewhere which have a large urban core and a lot of rural land surrounding that urban core. If those municipalities such as St. Catharines pass bylaws under section 354, which gives them the power over fences, 119,000 out of 120,000 of their population are urban and it applies very well to those, but then the farmers in the rural area are deprived of the rights which are given to other farmers under the Line Fences Act.

So we feel that within those municipalities, in respect of lands in those municipalities which are used by the owner for agricultural purposes, the Line Fences Act should apply, and that, of course, is our intention in moving this amendment. We think the farmer should have the same rights when he is farming within an urban municipality as has another farmer in a rural municipality, and this bill now prevents that from happening.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, I will not support the amendment. I would point out that for probably the past 186 years the act has been written differently from now, in that municipalities—certainly since I can find out; since about 1854, anyway—have had the right, in effect, to use that section of the Municipal Act and it hasn't caused too much concern.

I would also point out that under the present Line Fences Act, as will be shortly replaced, municipalities have to opt into the act. Most municipalities do, because section 1(3) of the present act reads: "This act applies"—and this is my favourite Latin expression—"mutatis mutandis to unoccupied land as well as to occupied land in any local municipality the council of which has passed a bylaw declaring this act so applies."

But in what is considered to be unoccupied land—forgetting the section in the Municipal Act—the whole act didn't apply unless the council passed a bylaw. Occupied land is defined as "does not include so much of a lot as is unenclosed, although part of the lot is enclosed." So in effect, in the present act as is now the law of the province of Ontario, unless a municipality specifically passed a bylaw to opt in, the Line Fences Act did not apply on land that had not previously been fenced.

We have sort of plugged all that up and taken out the distinction between occupied land and unoccupied land.

I would also point out the amendment really is, with respect, not too well drawn, because agricultural purposes can or cannot cover a multitude of things. For instance, is a garden plot in someone's backyard agricultural purposes? I really don't think the amendment as drawn is very clear.

The main point about this is this: We have put section 24 into the act in effect to flag the fact that all this time and up until this time there has been the right of the municipality, be it rural or urban, to pass a bylaw under section 354(1)(21) of the Municipal Act. All these years they have had that right. It was never specifically mentioned in the old Line Fences Act, but all municipalities historically since 1854 have had that right. To the best of my knowledge, and to the best of our staff's knowledge, that right has been exercised only by one municipality in Ontario and that is the city of Toronto.

I recognize that there could be an abuse by some municipalities in exercising section 354(1)(21) and in effect passing a bylaw that doesn't accomplish what we all want to be accomplished, especially in rural areas. But the place to fix that up, with respect, is not in the Line Fences Act; the place to fix that up is in the section in the Municipal Act that gives the municipalities this power. We have indicated already that in the next review of the Municipal Act, which should be around this fall, we will be reviewing that section with the possibility of changing it, abandoning it or possibly just grandfathering any municipalities in there.

I would point out to the members that we have indicated to the OFA and to ROMA that we are going to be doing this review, and they seem to want to be involved in the review. I would suggest that if, since at least 1854, this section hasn't caused too much trouble, it won't cause too much trouble for the next few months, and rather than put in an amendment which may or may not solve the problem, I would ask for the support of the House not to pass this amendment at this time but to wait until we review section 354(1)(21) and do it in the proper manner.

Mr. Epp: Obviously we won't support this amendment for two reasons. First of all, I agree with the member for Wilson Heights that it is very vague. It states, "but the provisions do apply in respect of land in such municipalities that is used for agricultural purposes." Any yard could be fenced and could include within its boundaries some small plots that are used for agricultural purposes. So the definition here is not very clear and I think in the long run would cause more problems than it is trying to solve.

I don't agree with the good intentions of the member for Welland-Thorold that he is trying to solve a problem here, and there is a small problem, but I think in the final analysis we are going to raise more questions and create more doubts and more problems than we are going to solve by this. We obviously will oppose the amendment.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Chairman, I am not at all clear whether the parliamentary assistant is indicating a commitment to ensure an amendment to the Municipal Act in the near future to deal with this matter, but I get the impression it is not a commitment to introduce such an amendment, it is only a commitment to consider it. I am not at all sure that is sufficient.

As I indicated in my remarks on second reading, there is an increased number of large municipalities that include both fully urban and fully rural sections. Those occur within the 10 regional municipalities we now have in this province, and may indeed occur as regional restructuring in some form crawls across this province.

But now that the problem has been brought to the attention of municipalities and now that it has been considered by the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, and given that ROMA is supporting the amendment that has been introduced by my colleague, the member for Welland-Thorold, I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that even if things have been okay for the past 100 years, they may not be okay in the future. Even a period of four or five months may lead to difficulties in some municipalities or in a limited number of cases. That would be of concern to me.

I also do not understand how the parliamentary assistant is saying that an amendment to the Municipal Act can handle this problem, because what the amendment that my colleague has introduced is attempting to do is say that the Line Fences Act shall apply in agricultural areas whatever the actions of the municipal council may be. It is, after all, an act that is of most concern to agricultural land-users.

But if the Municipal Act is amended to say that a municipality can opt out of the Line Fences Act those parts of the municipality that are urban, but not opt out those parts that are rural, then surely that is going to be even more cumbersome, in terms of wording and in terms of the way it specifies the opting-in, opting-out process, than is an amendment in this act.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that we need at least some reference in this act to the fact that provisions for line fences and fence-viewers shall apply in agricultural areas regardless of what the council of a primarily urban municipality might decide to do. That is why my colleague has introduced this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 24 agreed to.

Section 25 agreed to.

On section 26:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 26 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "The provisions of this act apply with necessary modifications to land situated in territory without municipal organization and for this purpose the Minister of Northern Affairs shall exercise the powers and perform the duties and functions conferred by this act upon municipalities and municipal officials in territory without municipal organization."

[10:15]

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, we consider this as perhaps the most important amendment that has been put to this bill because this means this act will apply to northern Ontario—to farm land in unorganized parts of this province. The bill as it is written, of course, will empower the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations "to provide for determining how the costs of line fences marking the boundary between lands situate in territory without municipal organization shall be apportioned, and for providing for the manner in which any amount so apportioned shall be recoverable."

That leaves it entirely wide open. The Lieutenant Governor in Council and the government may do whatever they like; they need not follow any of the provisions of this act whatsoever. We suggest that the farmers in the unorganized districts in northern Ontario should have the same rights as the farmers in southern Ontario. They have a lot of disadvantages that the farmers here don't have. This amendment would provide that the Minister of Northern Affairs would exercise the powers, duties and functions which would normally be conferred on the municipalities in organized territories.

It is my understanding that the Minister of Northern Affairs has more offices throughout the north than the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. He now has responsibility for everything that takes place in northern Ontario and we have designated that minister under this amendment because we believe he would be the most appropriate. If the government felt that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs should do it, I think we would be willing to accept that recommendation. But it does appear that that is the appropriate minister to administer this act.

The issue before us in this amendment is just simply is there going to be a Line Fences Act which applies to northern Ontario. If this amendment passes, there will be; if this amendment is defeated, there won't be. It's that simple. We think the farmers in northern Ontario should have that right.

Mr. Rotenberg: We do agree in principle that the north should be covered under the act. The north has not been covered under the act—that is the unorganized territories, which are mostly in the north, haven't been covered under the act since 1793 when this act was first brought forward. Up until now, only organized municipalities were covered. We do believe the entire province should be covered and that unorganized territories should be brought under the act.

The problem though is what is exactly the best method to do this. Simply by designating a minister and having all the terms of the act apply does cause some problems. There is the matter of who sends out the notices, the matter of awards and so on. There are a number of different ways these could be done. Our ministry is studying this matter and, rather than leave this out of the act, since we weren't quite sure how to do it, we put section 26 in the act to give a firm indication to this House and to the people in unorganized territories that we do intend to bring them under the act.

Our preliminary feeling is that probably the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs would be the best one to handle it instead of the Minister of Northern Affairs, but we haven't done all the studies or considered all the problems which would be brought forward by having either ministry handle this.

Therefore, I would ask the House not to accept this amendment, on the understanding that, yes, we are bringing unorganized territories under the act. We have placed section 26 in the act to indicate that this is our intention, and as soon as we are able to complete the studies as to the best way to do it—and there are some problems in just putting them holus bolus under the act with a ministry—we will be bringing forward regulations in order to bring the north completely under the act. It is a major step forward for the unorganized territories, because until now they haven't been included. We do intend to bring them in.

Mr. Epp: I agree with the parliamentary assistant to the minister that this is a major step forward. We believe this Legislature can take that major step at this time, and, therefore, this amendment should be supported. We believe these unorganized areas should be under a municipal structure first of all and, secondly, should be subject to this act. As a result, we will support the amendment.

Mr. Swart: I rise to welcome the support from the party on our right for this amendment. Although the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) is not with us this evening this was in fact his amendment, and is something about which he feels very strongly. I would be negligent if I did not put on the record that the member for Algoma had initiated an amendment very similar to this when the first bill was brought in and now is very supportive of this amendment. I am just delighted that it appears that they are finally going to get a Line Fences Act in northern Ontario.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated we will not support the amendment. The member for Welland-Thorold indicated that if the preference was Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs rather than Minister of Northern Affairs, he would change his amendment. In case it does carry, I would ask him to change that, even though we will not support it either way.

Mr. Swart: I will accept that change.

Mr. Nixon: That's very gracious of you.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for Welland-Thorold put the change on the record?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My constituents are concerned about that.

Mr. Swart: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In view of the agreement reached between myself and the parliamentary assistant from Wilson Heights that he will support our amendment if we make that change, I will change the amendment to read that section 26 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "The provisions of this act shall apply with necessary modifications to lands situated in territory without municipal organization and for this purpose the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs shall exercise the powers and perform the duties and functions conferred by this act upon municipalities and municipal officials in territory without municipal organization."

Mr. Rotenberg: I know the member for Welland-Thorold is being facetious. Just so the record will be clear, I did not make any agreement to support the amendment he has now put.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry? All those in favour will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You almost fooled him.

Sections 27 to 30, inclusive, agreed to.

The committee divided on Mr. Swart's amendment to section 12 of the bill, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 38; nays 40.

The committee divided on Mr. Isaacs' amendment to the amendment to section 23, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 19; nays 59.

Mr. Chairman: Shall Mr. Epp's motion to amend section 23 carry?

Motion agreed to.

Section 23, as amended, agreed to.

The committee divided on Mr. Swart's amendment to section 26, which was negatived on the same vote.

Section 26, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 17, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment.

The House adjourned at 10:35 p.m.

MEMBER'S COMMENT

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I draw to your attention that the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) has taken his place. I know you have reviewed the circumstances involving his statement directed towards me in this House. It is my strong feeling, sir, that since you named him yesterday and he withdrew from the House for the remainder of that session, the situation has not been cleared up.

The rules say that accusing another honourable member of uttering a deliberate untruth—and he called me a liar—is against the rules and, certainly, against the accepted practice of this House and any civilized group.

The fact that you have, in a form, punished him by expelling him from the House for a few hours may, in the minds of some, be sufficient. But I would bring to your attention, sir, that his statement still rests on the record of this House. I would suggest to you, as moderately but as strongly as I can, that until that statement is withdrawn it is extremely difficult for us in this House to carry on with the business as we should.

There are times in the heat of debate and argument that things are said, whether they're regrettable or not, but are withdrawn with honour so that the business of the House may progress. The member for Sudbury East has been given two opportunities by you, sir, to do that. He has refused. This, in my view, simply makes the situation more intolerable. I would suggest to you once again, as moderately but as strongly as I can, it is not a question of some sort of punishment for using an unparliamentary word of this type. It is simply a rule that the word may not and must not and, in my view, cannot be allowed to be used in this House without being withdrawn. I put that to you, sir, and it is with some deep and personal concern that I do so.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has placed before the House the sequence of events as I myself recall them. As a result of the events of yesterday afternoon, I looked myself, and I had advisers on parliamentary precedent look into the precedents, having regard for the standing orders of this House and every other jurisdiction upon which we rely for guidance from time to time.

There has been an offence against the standing orders here. I must remind the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk the sanctions that can be imposed by the Speaker are very limited. They're limited to the powers of suspending a member who has offended, not so much another member in this House but the rules of parliamentary procedure. So, in effect, the House has been offended by what transpired last week and, again, yesterday afternoon.

I have looked for precedents and my advisers have looked for precedents and we have come to the conclusion the Speaker's authority is restricted to that and one of suspension. That was done within the rules of the House. I suppose all I can say to the honourable member is that since the House itself has been offended, any further action will, in all likelihood, have to come from the House and not the Speaker. The Speaker has done, in my opinion and in the opinion of my advisers, everything that can be done under the existing standing orders, not only in this House, but going back to other precedents. These include Erskine May whom we consider, and have considered for a good length of time around here, the Bible with regard to parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the point of order, I would like to make several points, with your indulgence. While I made an accusation, sir, there is a rule in the rule book, standing order 19(d)(9), which says a member cannot impute false or unavowed motives to another member.

I draw your attention to an exchange that occurred in the Legislature. I only want to quote one sentence, with your indulgence. It's Mr. Nixon speaking: "I wonder if the minister could inform the House, or the members of the resources development committee representing his party, of the urgency and complexity of this matter, because his members"—and get this; this is the significant part—"because his members and members of the New Democratic Party have voted to postpone any consideration of this matter by the committee."
